SEC. 29. Whenever the amount of money actually in circulation in the United States shall exceed $75 per capita, then the Treasurer of the United States, by and with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board and the President of the United States, may retire Federal Reserve notes in an amount equal to the principal paid on farm-loan bonds, for which Federal Reserve notes were issued, not to exceed 2 percent in any one year, of the amount of Federal Reserve notes so issued.

SEC. 30. There is hereby created a Board of Agriculture consisting of one member from each State, elected by the farmers of such State, who shall be elected by delegates selected by a mass convention of farmers in each county or parish within the United States, who are indebted and declare it to be their intention to take advantage of this title, such county or parish convention to be its own judge as to who are bona fide farmers and otherwise eligible to participate in its proceedings.

SEC. 31. The Federal Farm Loan Board is hereby authorized and directed to give public notice, through the Federal land banks, to the farmers of each county or parish of the time and place of holding the first county or parish convention, which shall be held at the seat of government of each county or parish; and it shall at the same time give notice of the first convention of the State delegates, to be held at the State capital of each State, notice of such convention to be given within 60 days after the enactment of this act.

SEC. 32. The farmers attending such county or parish convention and the State delegates attending such State convention shall organize and make such rules and regulations for their procedure as they deem necessary or convenient, and shall elect a president and a secretary and make arrangements for such other and future conventions as they may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this title, and they shall at all times cooperate and assist the Board of Agriculture, the Federal Farm Board, the Federal land banks, and national farm-loan associations to liquidate and refinance farm mortgages and farm indebtedness.

SEC. 33. The State delegates so elected shall meet at the State capitals of their respective States and elect a member of the Board of Agriculture, who shall hold his office from the date of such election and for a period of 2 years from January 20 following, and who shall receive $15 per diem and necessary traveling expenses while on official business, to be paid by the Federal Farm Loan Board out of any funds set apart by section 25 of this act.

SEC. 34. Immediately after their election the members of the Board of Agriculture, upon call of the Federal Farm Loan Board, shall meet at Washington in the District of Columbia and organize by electing a chairman and a secretary, and they shall make such rules and regulations as they deem necessary and expedient to carry out the purposes of this title. They shall elect an executive committee of three, none of whom shall be members of the Board of Agriculture, who shall hold their office at the will of said Board, and who shall receive a salary of $7,500 per annum, and 5 cents per mile for necessary traveling expenses while on official business, to be paid by the Federal Farm Loan Board out of any funds set apart by section 25 of this act.

SEC. 35. The members of the Board of Agriculture shall keep in touch with and report to the executive committee the progress of liquidating and refinancing farm mortgages and farm indebtedness in their respective States. They shall cooperate with county or parish and State governments, and with all farm and cooperative organizations within their respective States, to speedily bring about the liquidation and refinancing of farm mortgages and farm indebtedness.

SEC. 36. The executive committee of the Board of Agriculture shall advise with and supervise the work of liquidating and refinancing farm mortgages and farm indebtedness by the Federal Farm Loan Board and the Federal Reserve Board, and they shall cooperate with said Boards and with county or parish and State governments and with the various farm organizations, and with the agricultural colleges of the Nation, in order to bring about a just and speedy liquidation and refinancing of farm mortgages and farm indebtedness. They shall report any member of the farm-loan system or the Federal Reserve Board who neglects, hinders, or delays the carrying out of the provisions of this title to the President of the United States, and it shall be the duty of the President, upon cause shown, to remove any such officer and to appoint some other suitable person in his place with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 37. The benefits of this title shall also extend to any farmer, or member of his family, who lost his farm through indebtedness or mortgage foreclosure since 1919, and who desires to purchase the farm lost or another farm. It shall also extend to any tenant, or member of his family, who desires to purchase a farm, provided he has lived on and operated a farm as a tenant for at least 3 years prior to the enactment of this act.

SEC. 38. The executive committee of the Board of Agriculture shall have power in case of crop failures, and in other meritorious cases, to extend the time payments due on loans made under this title from time to time for a period not exceeding 3 years, provided the mortgagor keeps up the payment of all taxes on the mortgaged property.

SEC. 39. This title shall be liberally construed, and no technicalities or limitations shall be imposed or permitted to interfere with the speedy carrying out of its purposes; and the provisions of the Federal farm-loan system and the Federal Reserve Banking System shall apply as far as applicable in the carrying out of the provisions of this title; and all laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are for the purpose of this title repealed. The persons charged with the duty of carrying out the provisions of this title are authorized and directed to do all things necessary or convenient to accomplish its purposes with expedition.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, in the Seventy-first Congress a bill which was practically the same as this amendment was known as "S. 5109." In the Seventy-second Congress it was known as "S. 1197." It was introduced again at the beginning of this Congress as S. 457. I offer it as a substitute for the Wagner amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this amendment has the endorsement of the farm organizations. It is a very comprehensive measure. It has been reported out favorably by the Agricultural Committee. The Senator from North Dakota is now offering it as an amendment to the pending bill and it should receive very thorough consideration.

I want to appeal to the Senator from Arkansas to move a recess at this time and let this amendment be considered tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think it may be possible to arrange an agreement that will enable the Senate to recess now. I understood from the Senator presenting the amendment that he preferred to proceed with it tomorrow. If we can recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow and have a vote on this amendment not later than 1 o'clock, I shall have no objection to taking a recess now.

Mr. FRAZIER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I shall conform to the judgment of the Senator who offers the amendment. If he thinks 2 hours is ample time for the consideration of the amendment, I have no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its labors today, it take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow, and that not later than 1 o'clock tomorrow the Senate proceed to vote, without further debate, on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment putting sugar into the bill was adopted.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a point of order. There was a roll call and the Senator from Texas did not vote on the prevailing side.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I will state that the Senator from Texas was not in the Chamber and did not vote on the matter at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to enter the motion.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, does the Chair rule that if a Senator is not here when a matter is voted on he can come in later and move to reconsider?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; the Chair so rules.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The rule specifically provides for that.

Mr. LONG. The time limit on that was up yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. LONG. I should like to have that question looked up. The rule, as I understand it, is very plain that a Senator must have voted on the prevailing side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). The question has been decided by the Senate. Rule XIII provides:

> Any Senator voting with the prevailing side or who has not voted may, on the same day or on either of the next 2 days of actual session thereafter, move a reconsideration.

The Chair holds that the Senator from Texas is within his rights. The motion will be entered.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER, as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

THE BASIC ISSUE IN RECOGNITION OF SOVIET RUSSIA

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an address of the Rev. Dr. Edmund A. Walsh, Ph.D., Vice President of Georgetown University, April 18, 1933, on the subject "The Basic Issue in Recognition of Soviet Russia."

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> Mr. Commander, ladies, and gentlemen, recognition of the Soviet Union ultimately and basically is not a question of repudiated debts or confiscated property or Communists on soap boxes in Union Square, as that distinguished tribune of the people, Mr. Alfred E. Smith, visualizes the problem in his recent statement advocating recognition of the Moscow Government. Mr. Smith exercises a well-merited influence, and his opinions on domestic policies command the confidence of a very wide constituency of Catholics, Protestants, and Jews. But I feel obligated to make clear to you, in a very limited time, why his Russian views are not shared by so many American citizens of his own faith who see eye to eye with him in most other respects.
>
> Two civilizations diametrically opposed in their principles, their practices, and their objectives come face to face before the supreme tribunal of public opinion in a manner that has no precedent in international relations. The form of government which Soviet Russia would impose by force on the entire world is too well known to need rehearsal here. Suffice it to say that it proposes, as a government policy, to abolish universally every shred of the democratic ideal embodied in the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, and the Bill of Rights. That is the plain meaning of section 1, paragraph 9, of the Soviet constitution, which affirms that what has been accomplished in Russia is a "decisive step toward the union of the toilers of all countries into one world Soviet Socialist Republic." Paragraph 7, same section, declares Soviet jurisdiction to be "international in its class character." Article 72 of that same constitution—not article 72 of the Communist Party nor the reiterated articles of provocation sponsored by exuberant individual Communists but article 72 of the organic law of a sovereign state provides in judicial language that the capital of this contemplated Socialist league of nations shall be the city of Moscow. And, further, specific pronouncements by responsible Soviet officials explain that this conquest of all non-Communist states is to be achieved by force of arms. Moscow is not content to live and let live.

Nor is this hostility merely academic or theoretical. It has been reduced to concrete form in the two practical agencies which the Communist Party of Russia created after the second Russian revolution. The domestic instrument contrived to insure the permanency of Marxian communism on Russian soil is called the Soviet Government, which becomes thereby, in Mr. Zinoviev's celebrated phrase, a sort of fifth wheel. The external apparatus for the conquest of the non-Communist world is called the Third International. Both are the direct creations and active agents of the political bureau of the Communist Party. These two agencies of world revolution are, in the words of Ramsay MacDonald, "organically connected." The nations of the world have refused to accept the stale pretext that the Third International is a private organization over which the Soviet Government has no control. It is not a private organization and never was. It was founded by responsible officials of the Soviet Government while holding office, was convoked by the official Soviet telegraph agency, its first meetings were held in a Government building within the Kremlin, and its revolutionary program published in the official state organ, Izvestia, on January 24, 1919. Its subversive activities from that date to this are matter of public record.

We have never questioned nor do we now question the right of the Russian people to set up any form of government they see fit to endure. All such accusations are either sheer ignorance or malicious attempts to deceive the simple-minded. We were the first nation in the world to recognize the Russian revolution by extending full diplomatic recognition to the new government on March 22, 1917, 1 week after the abdication of Nicholas II. What we do question and refuse to tolerate is the insupportable arrogance of the Communist Party, which came into power on November 7, 1917, and which assumes to dictate to us the form of government we shall have in these United States. Our motive is not fear, which is the only justification some advocates of recognition can find for our present policy. The motive is self-respect and a decent regard for sovereignty under international law.

Rightly, then, has the Government of the United States refused to compromise with those two allied agencies—the Soviet Government and the Third International—refuses categorically and without reservation for the very reasons once advanced by a distinguished American lawyer trying a case of conspiracy. He argued that in any common pact directed against public security, the act of one member is the act of all, and the guilt of all is the guilt of each after the conspiracy is formed. "In other words", he explained to the jury, "if you and I join together for the doing of an unlawful act, the fact that you may remain 10 miles away while I go and commit the crime does not relieve you either legally or morally or exempt you from punishment." So argued Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH when he so ably defended the people of his State against organized lawlessness at Wallace, Idaho, on July 27, 1899, and won his case. He has since become the most outstanding of those who advocate immediate recognition of Soviet Russia. Extraordinary lapse of memory!

With his habitual disregard for the actualities in the case, Senator BORAH made another speech in the Senate on April 11, this year, in which he assured that body that he had made extensive research into the question of Soviet hostility to the United States and was able to report:

"* * * That there has never been since Mr. Stalin became Dictator of the Russian Government any attempt whatever upon the part of the Soviet Republic to interfere with the governmental affairs of the United States or to seek by propaganda to interfere with the governmental affairs of this country. * * * In my opinion the charge that the Soviet Government is seeking to undermine or destroy our Government is an exploded and absurd proposition."

I greatly fear that the investigations of the distinguished Senator must have been interrupted by a roll call. He overlooked the easily ascertained fact that on May 6, 1929, there was held in Moscow a meeting of the so-called "American Commission of the Third International." Mr. Stalin pointed out at great length to the visiting delegates from the United States the most efficacious means for drawing revolutionary profit from the prevailing economic crisis in their homeland. In other words, the ruler of the Soviet Government, while encouraging his American agents in their use of purring platitudes and honeyed phrases calculated to obtain diplomatic recognition of the Soviet Union, drops the mask in Moscow and instructs his American visitors thus:

"I think, comrades, that the American Communist Party is one of those few Communist Parties in the world upon which history has conferred a task of a decisive character from the viewpoint of the world revolutionary movement. * * * The crisis of world capitalism is developing at an increased speed and is bound to extend also to American capitalism. * * * It is necessary that the American Communist Party should be able to meet this historical moment fully armed, and to take the lead in the coming class battles in America. * * * With this end in view the American Communist Party must be improved and bolshevized. * * * With this end in view we must strain our efforts to forge genuinely revolutionary groups and genuinely revolutionary leaders of the proletariat who would be able to lead the many millions of the American labor classes into the revolutionary class battles."

This speech, suppressed for some time, was published in Moscow on January 15, 1930, long after Mr. Stalin became Dictator of Soviet Russia. If that be a sample of Mr. BORAH's capacity for research, I know of no reputable university that would award him a Ph.D. on it. And in common with many other incomplete thinkers he appeals to the historic precedent that we recognized the French Revolution despite the inflammatory language and internationalism of its leaders. Similarly, the argument is often advanced that we recognized the Russian Czars, recognized the Turks, Mussolini, and Hitler, despite the fact that we are utterly opposed to many of the political ideals and practices of their respective systems. Gentlemen, these are partial statements; and the lie that is half a truth is the hardest lie to combat. Recognitionists who press this argument are either uninformed or malicious. They suppress the vitally important fact that none of these foreign powers has set up in its capital city an organization for the purpose of overthrowing foreign governments; their leaders launch no invitation to nationals of other countries to wage civil war against the authorities of their respective lands; none of these powers has so flagrantly offended international friendship that its ministers and ambassadors have been expelled from numerous states whose patience and long suffering became exhausted. When Citizen Genet anticipated some of the forms of soviet diplomacy in 1794 he was promptly withdrawn by the French Revolutionary Government on demand of Washington. And should Mr. Mussolini or Mr. Hitler conduct their international relations as Mr. Stalin does, I am confident they would meet the same reception here that Mr. Stalin's government has met for 15 years.

And in his peroration, Senator BORAH made an appeal not to isolate Russia any longer, but to admit her to our councils as a contribution to international peace. But who built that Chinese wall, to which the recognitionists love to point, if not Russia herself by her wanton disrespect and contempt for international friendship? Nothing keeps her inside her self-imposed isolation except her highly cultivated, hysterical sense of martyrdom and her own perverse will which refuses to observe the most elementary rules of international decency. Let her check her razors at the door and she will be admitted to the party.

It has been argued, too, that the presence of an American ambassador in Moscow will tend to mollify Soviet excesses and give diplomacy a chance to restrain the unruly commissars. Ask the British Ambassador about that as he departs from Moscow after the premeditated insult flung into his teeth with reverse English, so to speak, that it might be sure to rebound into the face of a third foreign power for good measure. You will recall that Sir Esmond Ovey was recently informed by the Soviet Commissar of Foreign Affairs that he must not imagine he was in a place like Mexico. And ask Mexico herself why she withdrew her minister from Moscow in 1929 and severed diplomatic relations. Ask the French Government how Soviet ambassadors observe international courtesy. They were obliged to expel Mr. Rakovsky from Paris for launching an appeal, while Ambassador to France, counseling the French Army to rise in mutiny against their officers. Ask China why she expelled Karakhan, Soviet representative, in 1926 and what she found when she raided the quarters of the Soviet Legation!

But there are some in our midst who would sacrifice self-respect and public welfare in the sacred name of hypothetical trade and dubious export possibilities. Take the cash, they murmur, and let the credit go. Money has no odor and sweet is the music of falling shekels. Even on that shamefully mercenary basis of private profit, the argument still remains fallacious and puerile. In the one year of 1930, Soviet Russia purchased enormous supplies in this country, amounting to $114,300,000, and that was done without recognition. Lack of recognition is no bar to trade. And recognition does not guarantee increase of trade. Her purchases have now dwindled to almost nothing simply because American banks grew alarmed about her heavy commitments and withdrew credit facilities.

In reprisal, the Soviet Government transferred its purchases to Germany, as it always can do in virtue of its foreign-trade monopoly, which is used as a political weapon to punish the nationals of any country that annoys Moscow's tender susceptibilities. I might observe in passing that Mr. Smith's description of American trade with Russia as being carried on "under cover" is, of course, a pure figure of speech or else unmitigated nonsense. It was and is the most open business on Broadway. It has never been prohibited by anybody. What Amtorg does under cover is doubtless important business, but of another kidney.

And how shall Moscow pay for the mirage of exports from our factories which the recognitionists conjure out of their distorted imagination? In cash? She has none. She is hopelessly bankrupt. She is distrusted by the loaning powers whose memory of her wholesale repudiation of previous loans is still green. She is faced with domestic starvation, compromised internally by the unfulfilled promises of a fantastic 5-year plan, and reduced again to the sorry expedient of finding public scapegoats in sensational trials of foreign engineers who have been terrorized into making alleged confessions of economic espionage. Or, can she pay in goods by dumping the monopolized products of her forced labor into the free markets of America, there to depress instead of raising commodity prices? Ask the American Federation of Labor what that would do to the few jobs left for the American workman or the American farmer, and if they intend to submit tamely to it!

Therefore the alleged trade must be financed by new credits advanced by the banks and financiers who, as usual, will profit handsomely by this new raid on the people's hard-earned savings. If we may believe recent revelations, these philanthropists rarely use their own money for the flotation of foreign loans. It has been noted that the trade proposal, involving an extension of credit or a peddling of Russian bonds, is warmly advocated in those very financial circles which have forfeited the right to dictate public policy any longer. They had their heyday—and what a heyday it was! They were publicly scourged as convicted malefactors by President Roosevelt in his courageous inaugural address when he said:

"Faced by failure of credit they have proposed only the lending of more money. Stripped of the lure of profit by which to induce our people to follow their false leadership they have resorted to exhortations, pleading tearfully for restored confidence. They know only the rules of a generation of self-seekers. They have no vision, and when there is no vision the people perish. The money changers have fled from their high seats in the temple of our civilization. We may now restore that temple to the ancient truths. The measure of the restoration lies in the extent to which we apply social values more noble than mere monetary profit."

You will note, too, that those who clamor for an official trade agreement are strangely silent about the experiences of governments which have made such pacts. Why has Italy terminated her trade agreement? Because it proved wholly unsatisfactory and contrary to Italian expectations. Why did England, long before the present controversy, denounce her trade agreement? Because it proved harmful to the best interests of the British commonwealth of nations. These valuable experiences are ignored by those who would plunge us into the same unprofitable speculation. They ask us to accept an emasculated tragedy of Hamlet with no mention made of the Prince of Denmark. There are two ways of acquiring political wisdom—by foresight and by hindsight. Which shall we choose? And shall we listen to the insane proposals to appropriate millions for Russian trade from Government funds at a moment when 13,000,000 Americans are in danger of starvation while other millions of farmers and tenants are faced with foreclosure and eviction through lack of means to succor them?

I know that in some quarters it is being whispered that the increasingly dangerous situation in the Far East may force the United States Government into a compromise with Soviet Russia. Recognition, it is said, may become necessary as a gesture of prudence for purely political reasons that are too delicate for open discussion. I agree that it is not to the country's interest to analyze publicly those particular motives. I will limit myself, consequently, to recalling the parable of the kindly humanitarian who attempted the experiment of making a treaty of alliance with a rattlesnake to keep trespassers off his land. Fortunately for him, he discovered in time that the nature of his curious ally was fixed and unchangeable and that it would sink its fangs impartially into hands that caress or fists that menace. It knows neither friend nor foe, but only alien flesh. It will strike anything that is vulnerable.

Ladies and gentlemen, recognition is an act of national political expediency. There is no juridical right to recognition and no legal or moral obligation to recognize. In the present case there are positive grounds for refusing to recognize. American policy and practice have been governed by two considerations clearly set forth by that eminent jurist John Bassett Moore in his monumental International Law Digest:

(1) That the government seeking recognition shall be in de facto possession and control of the territory over which it claims jurisdiction without substantial revolt or opposition on the part of its population. We do not demand legitimacy of succession, nor do we inquire into the validity of the possessor's title.

(2) That the government in question shall be able and willing to perform its international obligations and conform to the usages accepted by the civilized nations of the world. Failure to conform to these obligations is cited by Judge Moore as sufficient grounds for refusing recognition.

That the present Soviet Government fulfills the first requirement is not questioned. That it still does not and will not accept that reasonable second requirement is matter of public record. Therefore, it seems to me that three courses are open to the Government of the United States. The first would be honorable recognition. By that I mean reciprocal diplomatic relations after proof of Moscow's willingness to desist from the unethical, the illegal, and utterly unacceptable hostility to non-Communist states which has been her undeniable practice heretofore. Written guaranties are useless. I say "proof" of such desisting, not promises. They have been consistently violated as he who cares may read, and no new facts are available to indicate a change of essential policy in that regard. The acid test of Moscow's sincerity lies in her willingness or refusal to banish the Third International from her territory, disassociate herself from the offensive international conspiracy to which she is now partner, and respect the inalienable sovereign rights of other nations and governments. This should be accomplished before, not after, recognition, when the rose would have been plucked. An unparalleled opportunity lies before us for a magnificent service to peace and neighborly conduct among nations by vindicating the sanctity of international good manners to which President Roosevelt has definitely pledged his administration. If we default in that clear duty we shall have forfeited the respect of the world whose eyes are watching what we are about to do with our unique bargaining power. We have a manifest appointment with Opportunity that may make history. God grant that we be not in conference with the money changers when she knocks.

The second course is the reverse of the first. It would be dishonorable recognition, by which I mean acceptance of Soviet Russia's terms, which are: Recognize us as we are with no conditions or reservations except the guaranty of a substantial loan and with full scope for our particular form of international friendship. What that is you will find in the writings of Lenin and in the record of our dealings with other governments.

The third course would be simply continued nonrecognition as America's answer to the continuance under Soviet auspices and direction of the Third International. That is the logical consequence of America's traditional recognition policy. The burden of the proof and the first step to friendship rests with Moscow. No commission to Russia or round-table conference is needed for that. She opened the breach. She is continuing the breach, and she alone can close it. Do not be misled by the subtle sophistry of pseudo liberals, the emotionalism of the misinformed, and the sordid propaganda of dollar chasers.

Last Wednesday night in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, that venerable comedian, Mr. George Bernard Shaw, put on a 1-ring circus again in which he garrulously committed intellectual suicide. Peace to the memory of the great preface writer and defender of Joan of Arc! Among his numerous pitifully ignorant inaccuracies he did stumble, however, on one rough nugget of truth as he laboriously drove a very dull plow through old, old ground. It was the United States, he argued, in the person of American efficiency engineers who saved the tottering Soviet regime by their skill, their technical services, and their wide cooperation in the execution of the 5-year plan. Shall we now gratuitously save that unspeakable tyranny a second time and rivet the yoke of despotism tighter to the bent back of an oppressed peasantry by tendering their masters the support of diplomatic recognition? Or shall we not wait until the hand of friendship can reach across the barrier of hatred erected by the political bureau and the Third International to the friend for whom it is intended and to whom it has never been denied—the Russian people!

THE MOST PROFITABLE INVESTMENT OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask permission to place in the RECORD extracts from an informative article in Science Magazine, by Watson Davis, managing editor of Science Service, under the title "The Most Profitable Investment of the Federal Government."

There are literally thousands of examples of the dollars and cents fruitfulness of Federal scientific research. For example, the conquest of hog cholera by serum developed by Federal scientists before the World War and now applied in cooperation with the States is estimated to save farmers and the public some $20,000,000 a year. This is more than the whole cost of Department of Agriculture research.

If the coastal surveys made by Federal engineers did nothing more than save from disaster a modern vessel once in every 5 years, the whole cost of the Coast and Geodetic Survey would be met. Bureau of Standards researches on automobile fuel, oil, tires, and brakes alone repay to the public in savings over 50 times the whole cost of this research establishment with its multiplicity of useful functions. The development of cowling for airplane engines by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, which is now in wide commercial use, is estimated to save some $5,000,000 annually as applied to American airplanes. The cost of the committee is less than a sixth that saving.

[From Science Service, Apr. 14, 1933]

THE MOST PROFITABLE INVESTMENT OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

By Watson Davis, managing editor, Science Service

Scientific research conducted by the Federal Government is its most profitable investment. Among the millions and the billions for wars, past, present, and future, for post offices, for Congress, for prohibition enforcement, for Indians, for interest on the public debt, for Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other dollar transfusions to the financial structure, for relief, for reforestation, there are items of a few thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars for scientific research.

The United States Department of Agriculture scientists are finding new uses for familiar farm products, fighting soil erosion, improving livestock, protecting plants and crops, and safeguarding the ordinary consumer against bad food and drugs. In far-off China or the tropics, explorers of the Department roam to bring back strange plants that help our farmers. Within our country's borders, entomologists are combating the insect menace.

United States Geological Survey geologists are mapping and surveying the mineral domain that the machine age may not die of starvation. United States Coast and Survey ships and engineers are surveying our coasts to safeguard commerce and shipping.

Out in that group of Washington laboratories, not near the oratory of Congress, there are men and women of the United States Bureau of Standards staff studying the rainbow of chemical elements, developing new facts about heat, stressing steel and newer metals, perfecting standards, methods, and processes of incalculable value to industry and pursuing a thousand other useful scientific tasks.

Astronomers at the United States Naval Observatory observe the stars in order that our watches and clocks may have the correct time. Meteorologists of the United States Weather Bureau observe and forecast the weather for farmers, aviators, and city folks. United States Bureau of Mines engineers by experiments, practical and theoretical, safeguard and develop the mines of the Nation.

The appropriations for such scientific research functions of the Federal Government are the best investments made by the Government. The returns to the public in terms of percentage run to figures like 50,000 percent instead of the conventional 6 percent that bankers have popularized.

True, the profits do not flow back into the United States Treasury directly as dollars. The profits are made not by Uncle Sam but by the American public. That is fitting, for the business of the Government is not to make money but to undertake functions that benefit the whole people.

Scientific research is often a long-time investment, with the benefits going to our children and their children. It is a safe investment. Unlike bonds of maturity in the year 2000 or later, issued to pay for rails that even now are rusting away, the money spent for fundamental scientific research is a secure investment that will continue to pay public-service dividends down through the ages.

If you think of the Budget of the United States Government as a gigantic pie, the slice that is eaten to provide scientific research and service, which is perhaps the most profitable of its many activities, is so small that it can barely be seen. Of the Federal dollar less than seven eighths of a cent is expended for the constructive scientific research and service conducted to the profit of the whole Nation.

This eighty-five one hundredths of 1 percent (based on the 1931–32 expenditures) includes all the administrative, clerical, and other routine expenses in connection with the Government's scientific work. If the salaries of the scientists themselves and the money expended for apparatus, etc., were considered alone, the item would be much smaller—so minute that it would be difficult to find it among the millions upon millions of dollars that pass through Uncle Sam's pocketbook. Obviously the Federal Budget can never be balanced by eliminating any or all of the scientific work of the Federal Government.

The crippling of an essential scientific investigation or service here and another there may give a feeling of righteousness and go through the motions of cutting down Government expenditures, but it will not balance the Budget or materially lift the tax burden. The effect will be hardship on the farmer, the manufacturer, or the consumer in later years, when the much greater direct tax of undone scientific research will be felt.

Not only will the ultimate consumer and future generations lose but Uncle Sam himself will find his day-to-day routine governmental activities made more expensive if the scientists are fired. In addition to fundamental and applied scientific research, the Federal scientific bureaus perform tests that assure that the Government gets its money's worth in purchasing supplies, erecting buildings, etc.

If a total is obtained of all the money spent by the Government for all kinds of research, education, and developmental work, not just scientific research and service, it is found that only 2.7 percent of the United States' expenditures is accounted for. Who then eats Uncle Sam's Budget pie?

Wars, past and future, gobble 75.2 percent of the Federal Budget. Warships, soldiers, veterans, interest, and retirement of debts from past wars, and their incidentals consumed $3,758,000,000 of the United States 1931–32 expenditures. Compare this cost of warfare and national defense with $42,000,000 for scientific work, both research and service, in 1931–32. Of the 1934 Budget presented to Congress last fall, less than $35,000,000 is devoted to scientific research and service.

The legislative, executive, and judicial functions of the Federal Government consumed 12.6 percent of the 1932 expenditures, and public works in 1931–32 were responsible for 9.5 percent of the expenditures.

Meeting the annual bill for profitable scientific research in the United States Budget is a relatively small matter from a financial standpoint. The complete elimination of the annual Federal investment in scientific research, which is unthinkable, would not help materially in "balancing the Budget." The annual per capita cost is only about 30 cents. The per capita cost of all Federal Government activities runs from $30 to $40 per year, depending upon what year is taken.

You, as one of 120,000,000 Americans, make your profitable investment in Federal scientific research when you smoke five packages of cigarettes (Federal tax 6 cents a package), use 30 gallons of gasoline in your auto (Federal tax 1 cent a gallon), drink 2 gallons of beer (Federal tax $5 a barrel of 31 gallons).

The total cost of scientific research and service in the many Government departments is estimated at $34,768,000 in the 1934 Budget submitted to Congress last fall. Since then this Budget has been deeply cut, of course. The actual Federal science expenditures in the peak year 1931–32 were only about $40,000,000.

This bill for some $40,000,000, which will pay immense profits both now and to future generations, could be met by: The cost of a single modern transocean express steamer; the money needed to build four cruisers; one tenth of the annual United States tobacco tax; one third of the "pay of the Army", which does not include supplies or civilian hire expenditures of the United States Army; less than a tenth of the savings made by President Roosevelt in the veterans economy measures now being put into effect.

For Uncle Sam's annual investment in scientific research and service, for the 30 cents you as a citizen contribute indirectly each year, you and your children will get many dollars of real profit in everyday living, now and in the future. Figures show that typical research projects return profits of some 50,000 percent, that is, $150 for your 30 cents. And the most beneficial returns are those that cannot be computed in mere dollars and cents.

* * * * * * *

Important in the progress of science have been the labors of scientists, working day after day for modest salaries in the Federal Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, Interior, etc., without avaricious thought of personal gain.

* * * * * * *

Industry has to a large extent been convinced by bountiful returns that applied scientific research pays and pays well. As income to industry rose after the World War, allotments for research increased, but not perhaps as rapidly as the increase in national income. And as the depression began to take its toll upon business, the research staffs were not fired but in most cases they were preserved and even strengthened.

There has been a new rush in research to create new products and materials to replace those affected by the depression, to develop new and cheaper methods of utilizing old materials and making staple articles. Costs have been held within limited budgets through the science and ingenuity of the research staff. Surveys made by the National Research Council show that industry is continuing to a large extent its scientific research activities.

In the reorganization of the Federal Government now in progress the same spirit should rule. The cost of all scientific research and its auxiliary services in the Federal Government is only about $35,000,000 (based on 1934 Budget) and this is a mere fraction, seven eighths of 1 percent, of the total Budget.

In fact, all the educational, research and developmental work of the Government consumes only about 3 percent of the Federal cost. A smaller percentage is devoted to constructive education, research, and development work now than before the World War. In 1910, 5.1 percent was spent for "education, research, and development." In 1915 it was 5.4 percent. In 1920 it dropped to 1.3 percent, due to war costs. Since 1925 it has hovered between 2.5 and 3.2 percent.

Compare this with the national income of the whole Nation, not Government expenditures. Figures by the National Bureau of Economic Research show that the national income in 1910 and 1915 was $31,000,000,000 to $37,000,000,000 in round billions, whereas from 1925 to 1930 it varied from about $80,000,000,000 to $90,000,000,000.

APPOINTMENT OF JOHN COLLIER COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the New York Sun of April 18, 1933, entitled "A Political Outsider Is About to Get His Red Men."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Sun, Apr. 18, 1933]

WHO'S NEWS TODAY—A POLITICAL OUTSIDER IS ABOUT TO GET HIS RED MAN

By Lemuel Parton

John Collier and Mary Austin have had a friendly struggle for many years to see who should get the American Indians. President Roosevelt finally awards them to Mr. Collier, in naming him Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

That's a bit extreme, of course, but if anybody is entitled to speak of "my Indians" it is Mr. Collier. For 20 years he has worked, fought, schemed, and dreamed for the Indians—their land, water rights, pensions, food, health, recreation, vital statistics, their culture, ethnology and art, and all the above appurtenances of their cousins and their aunts.

Politically he is a rank outsider. All the winds of patronage were set dead against him. The puissant Senators, THOMAS and GORE, of Oklahoma—where dwell nearly one half of the American Indians—whetted their knives. Senator ROBINSON of Arkansas advanced a politically orthodox candidate. Land, oil, and water companies did everything but offer a bounty for his skin. Albert B. Fall, former Secretary of the Interior, used to bark like a coyote at the mention of his name. Yet here he is, slipping in under the tepee, politically speaking.

Secretary Ickes not only certifies him, but it is understood that it was he who urged his appointment on the President. The real Battle of the Big Horn will come on the issue of his confirmation by the Senate. In behalf of his Indians Mr. Collier has stirred up much powerful enmity.

Striding along a country road in Marin County, Calif., I have repeatedly tried to divert Mr. Collier's mind from Indians. It can't be done. He is a long-legged, somewhat humorless Savonarola, blazing with zeal for the Red Man, haranguing, pleading, denouncing, organizing, writing, speaking for many years as secretary of the American Indian Defense Association. New York bred, he dabbled in left-wing belles-lettres and was director of Cooper Institute here for a year. The new low on social reform after the war left him with unused zeal which he directed toward Indian welfare. He has fought courageously and uncompromisingly.

RECESS

Mr. SMITH. I move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 47 minutes p.m.) took a recess until tomorrow, April 22, 1933, at 11 o'clock a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 21 (legislative day of Apr. 17), 1933

AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY

Sumner Welles, of Maryland, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Cuba.

FIRST ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR

Theodore A. Walters, of Idaho, to be First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, vice Joseph M. Dixon.

MEMBER OF THE FEDERAL FARM BOARD

Francis Winfred Peck, of Minnesota, to be a member of the Federal Farm Board for the unexpired portion of the term of 6 years from June 15, 1930.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE

Thomas F. Thomas, of Utah, to be register of the land office at Salt Lake City, Utah, vice Eli F. Taylor.

DIRECTOR OF THE UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

Raymond S. Patton, of Ohio, to be Director of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey for a term of 4 years, beginning April 29, 1933, vice himself.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, APRIL 21, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Father, who dwelleth in the heavens above and in the hearts of Thy believing children, lay Thy hand upon these energies of ours and more and more build them up and purify them; convert them to growing affection, sacrifice, and devotion for the good of the public weal. Give us such a measure of Thy spirit that shall disturb us with the joy of elevated thoughts and motives. O strong Teacher of Nazareth, take away all barren desires and mold our characters into Thine own image. May each of us be for our brother as Thou art the Father of us all. We pray that Thou wouldst rule over our people that loyalty, fidelity, and cooperation may prevail for one goal—the promised land of peace, happiness, and contentment. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE STOP-ALIEN REPRESENTATION AMENDMENT

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address made by my colleague [Mr. TARVER] this morning over the radio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by my colleague, Hon. M. C. TARVER, of Georgia, on stop-alien representation amendment, broadcast over station WJSV, Washington, April 21, 1933:

Few people would insist, as a matter of primary justice, that those who are not citizens of a country should exercise any control over its government, directly or indirectly. The stop-alien representation amendment, introduced in the Senate by Senator CAPPER and by myself in the House, proposes to allow the people of this Nation, through their legislatures, to say whether they are satisfied to have continued an absurd situation by which a tremendous alien population has representation in Congress and power in the allocation of electors for President and Vice President. A brief explanation of why this is true is a necessary preliminary to further discussion.

The Fifteenth Census shows that at the time it was taken 122,093,455 people resided in the States of the Union, excluding Indians not taxed, and not including the population of the District of Columbia. By the Reapportionment Act of 1929, and prior laws, each State became entitled beginning March 4, 1933, to one Representative in the lower House of Congress for each population unit of 279,712, or major fraction thereof. That figure was slightly less than that obtained by dividing the entire population by 435, the total Membership of the House, which is 280,674, but was the figure it was necessary to adopt as the basic unit in order that each State might have one Congressman for each unit of population, or major fraction, and the Membership of the House remain at 435.

The census shows, however, that of the total mentioned only 115,808,842 were found to be citizens of this country. Therefore, 6,284,613 who were citizens of foreign governments were in effect accorded representation in the Congress of the United States, in that they were counted in determining the number of Representatives to which a State should be entitled in the lower House. In addition to that they were accorded an influential part in the selection of a President and Vice President, since the number of a State's votes in the Electoral College is determined by the number of its Representatives and Senators.

There is a strong belief on the part of many patriotic organizations, and, I think, upon the part of a large majority of our people generally, that this is an unfair situation. We recognize no basic moral right on the part of subjects of any foreign government, who owe and profess no allegiance to our own, to representation either in our national law-making body or in the selection of our President and Vice President. The fact that they are not allowed to vote does not alter the situation. Their numbers increase the congressional representation of the States in which they reside, giving them a power disproportionate to the numbers of their citizens, to the disadvantage of States whose alien population is small; and congested as they usually are in certain restricted areas, such as what is known as "Little Italy" in New York City, they furnish the population basis upon which their naturalized countrymen, residing in the same area, and actuated by the same ideas and beliefs, are permitted to elect Congressmen and select electors for the election of a President. The injustice extends further than the disproportionate power between the States; it causes the setting up within the States of congressional districts based on alien population, where far-different district lines would be necessary if only citizens were counted, and subjects American citizens living within those areas to the domination of foreign elements.

It is unfortunate that the question cannot be discussed intelligently without referring to particular States and localities within States. It is unquestionably desirable that issues relating to the fundamental law of the land should be viewed from the firm standpoint of right and justice without regard to the effects upon certain localities of decisions one way or the other. It is also desirable that there should be eliminated from consideration a great many arguments, pro and con, which have been injected from time to time into discussions of this matter.

The stop-alien representation amendment should not be proposed, ratified, nor rejected upon the basis of misinformation or prejudiced and unfair arguments.

The effect of the proposed amendment excluding aliens from the count in determining congressional representation would not be so drastic as has by some been suggested. Without entering into an unnecessary discussion of dry figures, it is sufficient to point out that if over 6¼ million aliens are excluded from the count, the population basis of congressional representation will be reduced under the major-fractions plan from 279,712 to 267,207, so that the States without a disproportionate share of alien population will not lose a single Congressman. It is sometimes thoughtlessly argued that because the number of aliens represents 22 times the population unit for congressional representation, 22 congressional seats would shift from certain States to other States because of the adoption of the proposed amendment. There is no merit at all in such arguments. Only 7 congressional seats would shift from one State to another. California, Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Washington would lose 1 each; New York would lose 3. Wisconsin, although it has the large alien population of 122,603, would actually gain a seat instead of losing one; and other gains of 1 each would be made by Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi, North Carolina, and Tennessee. Illinois, with an alien population of 451,533, would not lose a single Representative, occasioned by the fact that with a population of 7,630,388 it now has a minor fraction of 78,164 above the necessary population for 27 Congressmen; and in the exclusion of its aliens from the count and the adoption of the new and reduced population unit of 267,207 it would have a major fraction of 231,473 over 26 units and would therefore continue to have 27 Congressmen. Yet how great and how beneficial would be the effect upon the rights of American citizens residing in Illinois if congressional district lines should be changed so as to include within each district approximately the same number of American citizens, disregarding the almost half million aliens, living largely in congested areas, in determining where these lines should run.

It would necessarily increase the representation of the American citizens living in Illinois, and take away from largely alien constituencies where naturalized citizens hold the balance of power under present conditions the right to have Representatives in the United States Congress. It is a very serious mistake to consider this question solely from the standpoint of changes that might be effected in representation as between the States. Changes that would be effected in power of selection of their Representatives by American citizens within the States would perhaps transcend that feature in importance.

As an evidence of how the people of a State, even a State as vitally concerned as New York, with its 1,497,525 aliens, feel about this question when it can be disassociated from all sectional considerations, I quote a provision of the Constitution of New York relating to the selection of its State assemblymen:

"The members of the assembly shall be chosen by single districts and shall be apportioned by the legislature at the first regular session after the return of every enumeration among the several counties of the State, as nearly as may be according to their respective inhabitants, excluding aliens."

In other words, the State of New York, viewing the matter as one of moral right, decides in the formation of its constitution that aliens should not be represented in its legislature. If that be true, why should they be represented in the Congress of the United States? Why should they be represented in determining the number of electoral votes that shall be allowed a State?

Many arguments have been advanced based upon the possible effect of the proposed stop-alien representation amendment upon the decision of various national issues. These are only incidentally interesting. If we concede the alien's right to representation, we concede his right to have representatives, and the very name of representative implies that he must be the agent of his constituency, speaking their views and voicing their ideals; and if those views and ideals do not accord with ours, we have no right to complain. We cannot, therefore, properly examine the views of alien constituencies in determining their right to representation in Congress. The root of the matter lies deeper than that. I insist that a man owing allegiance to a foreign government, whose duty in case of conflict with our Government would be to stand against our flag, even though his character be spotless and his ideals as pure as those of an angel in heaven, has no right to have a representative participate in making the laws for this Nation or in the selection of its President and Vice President. That question ought to be decided without regard to whom it will help or hurt, what legislation it will further or retard, what locality may benefit or suffer, but with the sole purpose to accord to American citizens the right to control their own Government and to have a National Legislature representative of them, and of them only. And if determined on that basis, I have no question but that the stop-alien representation amendment will be approved by the Congress and ratified by the States.

PAN AMERICANISM

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a speech delivered by the President of the United States on Pan American Day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech delivered by the President of the United States on Pan American Day:

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AT THE SPECIAL SESSION OF THE GOVERNING BOARD OF THE PAN AMERICAN UNION ON THE OCCASION OF THE CELEBRATION OF PAN AMERICAN DAY, APRIL 12, 1933

I rejoice in this opportunity to participate in the celebration of Pan American Day and to extend, on behalf of the people of the United States, a fraternal greeting to our sister American Republics. The celebration of Pan American Day in this building, dedicated to international good will and cooperation, exemplifies a unity of thought and purpose among the peoples of this hemisphere. It is a manifestation of the common ideal of mutual helpfulness, sympathetic understanding, and spiritual solidarity.

There is inspiration in the thought that on this day the attention of the citizens of the 21 Republics of America is focused on the common ties—historical, cultural, economic, and social—which bind them to one another. Common ideals and a community of interest, together with a spirit of cooperation, have led to the realization that the well-being of one nation depends in large measure upon the well-being of its neighbors. It is upon these foundations that Pan Americanism has been built.

This celebration commemorates a movement based upon the policy of fraternal cooperation. In my inaugural address I stated that I would "dedicate this Nation to the policy of the good neighbor—the neighbor who resolutely respects himself, and, because he does so, respects the rights of others—the neighbor who respects his obligations and respects the sanctity of his agreements in and with a world of neighbors." Never before has the significance of the words "good neighbor" been so manifest in international relations. Never have the need and benefit of neighborly cooperation in every form of human activity been so evident as they are today.

Friendship among nations, as among individuals, calls for constructive efforts to muster the forces of humanity in order that an atmosphere of close understanding and cooperation may be cultivated. It involves mutual obligations and responsibilities, for it is only by sympathetic respect for the rights of others and a scrupulous fulfillment of the corresponding obligations by each member of the community that a true fraternity can be maintained.

The essential qualities of a true Pan Americanism must be the same as those which constitute a good neighbor, namely, mutual understanding and through such understanding a sympathetic appreciation of the other's point of view. It is only in this manner that we can hope to build up a system of which confidence, friendship, and good will are the cornerstones.

In this spirit the people of every republic on our continent are coming to a deep understanding of the fact that the Monroe Doctrine, of which so much has been written and spoken for more than a century, was and is directed at the maintenance of independence by the peoples of the continent. It was aimed and is aimed against the acquisition in any manner of the control of additional territory in this hemisphere by any non-American power.

Hand in hand with this Pan American doctrine of continental self-defense, the peoples of the American republics understand more clearly, with the passing years, that the independence of each republic must recognize the independence of every other republic. Each one of us must grow by an advancement of civilization and social well-being and not by the acquisition of territory at the expense of any neighbor.

In this spirit of mutual understanding and of cooperation on this continent you and I cannot fail to be disturbed by any armed strife between neighbors. I do not hesitate to say to you, the distinguished members of the governing board of the Pan American Union, that I regard existing conflicts between four of our sister Republics as a backward step.

Your Americanism and mine must be a structure built of confidence, cemented by a sympathy which recognizes only equality and fraternity. It finds its source and being in the hearts of men and dwells in the temple of the intellect.

We all of us have peculiar problems, and, to speak frankly, the interest of our own citizens must, in each instance, come first. But it is equally true that it is of vital importance to every nation of this continent that the American governments, individually, take, without further delay, such action as may be possible to abolish all unnecessary and artificial barriers and restrictions which now hamper the healthy flow of trade between the peoples of the American republics.

I am glad to deliver this message to you, gentlemen of the governing board of the Pan American Union, for I look upon the Union as the outward expression of the spiritual unity of the Americas. It is to this unity, which must be courageous and vital in its element, that humanity must look for one of the great stabilizing influences in world affairs.

In closing may I refer to the ceremony which is to take place a little later in the morning at which the government of Venezuela will present to the Pan American Union the bust of a great American leader and patriot, Francisco de Miranda. I join with you in this tribute.

EXTENSION OF GASOLINE TAX—MODIFICATION OF POSTAGE RATES

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that I was excused from attendance yesterday on account of being at the White House, and if I had been present I would have voted "aye" on the tax measure.

TERM OF SERVICE OF PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT AND MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Governor of the State of Iowa announcing ratification by the legislature of that State of the twentieth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report (H.Res. 111, Rept. No. 50) on the bill (H.R. 5081) for printing under the rule:

House Resolution 111

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration of H.R. 5081, and all points of order against said bill shall be considered as waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 6 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Military Affairs, it shall be in order for the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs by direction of that committee to offer amendments to any part of the bill. If there be no such amendments offered by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, then the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

THE ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report (H.Res. 112, Rept. No. 51) on the resolution (H.J.Res. 157) for printing under the rule:

House Resolution 112

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration of H.J.Res. 157, and all points of order against said joint resolution shall be considered as waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the situation, we will take up now by unanimous consent the bill (H.R. 4606) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, with general debate for 2 hours having been agreed upon.

The SPEAKER. That has not yet been agreed upon.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. As I understood the situation, we agreed to take up this matter, and the only question left open was the question of the 2 hours' general debate. I told the majority leader yesterday that as soon as I consulted with the ranking minority members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I would agree to the time for general debate. I have consulted with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], and the gentleman thinks 2 hours' general debate would be sufficient.

Mr. STEAGALL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4606) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 2 hours, one half to be controlled by myself and one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], to be confined to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4606) to relieve suffering caused by unemployment, with Mr. BULWINKLE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. GOSS. Reserving the right to object, will the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point?

The CHAIRMAN. Not ordinarily.

Mr. GOSS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point. Otherwise I shall object to dispensing with the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There was no objection.

The bill referred to is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Congress hereby declares that the present economic depression has created a serious emergency, due to widespread unemployment and increasing inadequacy of State and local relief funds, resulting in the existing or threatened deprivation of a considerable number of families and individuals of the necessities of life, and making it imperative that the Federal Government cooperate more effectively with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in furnishing relief to their needy and distressed people.

SEC. 2. (a) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to make available out of the funds of the Corporation not to exceed $500,000,000, in addition to the funds authorized under title I of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, for expenditure under the provisions of this act upon certification by the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator provided for in section 3.

(b) The amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered under section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, to have outstanding at any one time is increased by $500,000,000: Provided, That no such additional notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations authorized by this subsection shall be issued except at such times and in such amounts as the President shall approve.

(c) After the expiration of 10 days after the date upon which the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator has qualified and has taken office, no application shall be approved by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the provisions of title I of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, and the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator shall have access to all files and records of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation relating to the administration of funds under title I of such act. At the expiration of such 10-day period, the unexpended and unobligated balance of the funds authorized under title I of such act shall be available for the purposes of this act.

SEC. 3. (a) There is hereby created a Federal Emergency Relief Administration, all the powers of which shall be exercised by a Federal Emergency Relief Administrator (referred to in this act as the "Administrator") to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Administrator shall receive a salary, to be fixed by the President, and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses within the limitations prescribed by law for civilian employees in the executive branch of the Government. The Federal Emergency Relief Administration and the office of Federal Emergency Relief Administrator shall cease to exist upon the expiration of 2 years after the date of enactment of this act, and the unexpended balance on such date of any funds made available under the provisions of this act shall be disposed of as the Congress may by law provide.

(b) The Administrator may appoint and fix the compensation of such experts and, subject to the provisions of the civil service laws, appoint, and, in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, fix the compensation of such other officers and employees as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act; and may make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services and rent at the seat of government and elsewhere and for printing and binding), not to exceed $350,000, as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, to be paid by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation out of funds made available by this act upon presentation of vouchers approved by the Administrator or by an officer of the Administration designated by him for that purpose.

(c) In executing any of the provisions of this act the Administrator and any person duly authorized or designated by him, may conduct any investigation pertinent or material to the furtherance of the purposes of this act and, at the request of the President, shall make such further investigations and studies as the President may deem necessary in dealing with problems of unemployment relief.

(d) The Administrator shall print monthly, and shall submit to the President and to the Senate and the House of Representatives (or to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, if those bodies are not in session), a report of his activities and expenditures under this act. Such reports shall, when submitted, be printed as public documents.

SEC. 4. (a) Out of the funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation made available by this act, the Administrator is authorized to make grants to the several States, to aid in meeting the costs of furnishing relief and work relief and in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment in the form of money, service, materials, and/or commodities to provide the necessities of life to persons in need as a result of the present emergency, and/or to their dependents, whether resident, transient, or homeless.

(b) Of the amounts made available by this act not to exceed $250,000,000 shall be granted to the several States applying therefor, in the following manner: Each State shall be entitled to receive grants equal to one third of the amount expended by such State, including the civil subdivisions thereof, out of public moneys from all sources for the purposes set forth in subsection

(a) of this section; and such grants shall be made quarterly, beginning with the second quarter in the calendar year 1933, and shall be made during any quarter upon the basis of such expenditures certified by the States to have been made during the preceding quarter.

(c) The balance of the amounts made available by this act, except the amount required for administrative expenditures under section 3, shall be used for grants to be made whenever, from an application presented by a State, the Administrator finds that the combined moneys which can be made available within the State from all sources, supplemented by any moneys available under subsection (b) of this section, will fall below the estimated needs within the State for the purposes specified in subsection (a) of this section: Provided, That the Administrator may certify out of the funds made available by this subsection additional grants to States applying therefor to aid needy persons who have no legal settlement in any one State or community, and to aid in assisting cooperative and self-help associations for the barter of goods and services.

(d) After October 1, 1933, notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (b), the unexpended balance of the amounts available for the purposes of subsection (b) may, in the discretion of the Administrator and with the approval of the President, be available for grants under subsection (c).

(e) The decision of the Administrator as to the purpose of any expenditure shall be final.

(f) The amount available to any one State under subsections (b) and (c) of this section shall not exceed 15 percent of the total amount made available by such subsections.

SEC. 5. Any State desiring to obtain funds under this act shall through its governor make application therefor from time to time to the Administrator. Each application so made shall present in the manner requested by the Administrator information showing (1) the amounts necessary to meet relief needs in the State during the period covered by such application and the amounts available from public or private sources within the State, its political subdivisions, and private agencies, to meet the relief needs of the State, (2) the provision made to assure adequate administrative supervision, (3) the provision made for suitable standards of relief, and (4) the purposes for which the funds requested will be used.

SEC. 6. The Administrator upon approving a grant to any State shall so certify to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation which shall, except upon revocation of a certificate by the Administrator, make payments without delay to the State in such amounts and at such times as may be prescribed in the certificate. The Governor of each State receiving grants under this act shall file monthly with the Administrator, and in the form required by him, a report of the disbursements made under such grants.

SEC. 7. As used in the foregoing provisions of this act, the term "State" shall include the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico; and the term "Governor" shall include the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 8. This act may be cited as the "Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, this bill is intended to afford the use of the National Treasury for relief of distress and destitution resulting from unemployment. The sum provided as a maximum to be expended is $500,000,000, which is to be furnished from funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under this bill, is authorized to expand its obligations for the purpose of raising the funds required for carrying out the purposes of this act. Two hundred and fifty million dollars are to be advanced to States on the basis of one third of aid under the provisions of this bill, and two thirds of aid from all other sources. Two hundred and fifty million dollars, or one half, is to be used in the form of grants to the States to aid in meeting the "cost of furnishing relief and work relief, and in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, in the form of money, service, materials, commodities, to provide the necessities of life to persons in need, as a result of the present emergency, and to their dependents." One half of the funds, which is to be used to supplement aid secured from other persons after the 1st of October, may, after October 1, 1933, be used under the general authority for grants which I have just outlined.

The bill provides that after the establishment of the national administration to control the fund, no further aid may be furnished by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under title I of the Emergency Relief Act of 1932; and that all funds left in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under that act shall be turned over to the emergency relief administrator provided for in the bill now under consideration.

There is now on hand with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation a sum between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000, or thereabouts. This bill provides for the appointment by the President of a Federal emergency relief administrator, whose appointment shall be confirmed by the Senate and whose salary shall be fixed by the President. The Federal emergency relief administration and the office of the Federal emergency relief administrator are to terminate after a period of 2 years.

The committee had before it the testimony adduced at the hearings in the Senate on the Wagner-Costigan-La Follette relief bill, and also conducted hearings for some days in which conditions affecting unemployment were outlined to the committee. There are 4,000,000 families in need of aid. Conditions are growing worse all the time. Local means are being exhausted. The only hope for anything approaching adequate aid lies in resort to the Federal Treasury.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I am glad to yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman tell us in what essentials, if any, this bill differs from the Wagner-Costigan-La Follette bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. This bill is identical with the Senate bill as introduced in the House. This came about by reason of the question of constitutionality raised by the resolution of the gentleman from New York respecting the right of the Senate to originate this legislation. In view of that question, the committee of the House thought it well to consider the House bill introduced by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], and that is the bill under consideration.

There have been only two amendments to this bill: One, a mere matter of phraseology to make the language of the bill correspond with the language of the title and to employ the identical language which has been interpreted repeatedly by officials of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This amendment simply added, in lines 8 and 9, page 5 of the bill, after the words "work relief", the following phrase: "And in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment." This language was in the title of the bill, was taken from a former act, and has been repeatedly construed so as to have an established legal interpretation by the administrative officers of the Government.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I am glad to yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman explain to us what is meant by the phrase "work relief" and whether the chief features of this bill are those of employment or whether it is mainly a dole proposition?

Mr. STEAGALL. If the gentleman will permit, I will answer his question in a moment, after I have finished calling attention to the amendments that were adopted by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The second amendment, which was not regarded as of very great importance or significance, is on page 5, line 15, and changes the figures "$200,000,000" to "$250,000,000." This change is in the subdivision of the bill which provides for supplementary loans, loans to be made with reference to the relief aid afforded in States from other agencies on a basis of one third Federal aid to two thirds of other aid, the purpose being to divide the $500,000,000 fund into two equal amounts, one to be used primarily to supplement other aid and the other to be used in direct grants for relief purposes as outlined in section 4, the language of which I have just called to the attention of the House.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] asked a question. I do not remember for the moment the exact language of his question. I will say in answer it is recognized by all that wherever it is practical to do so aid should be extended for the purpose of enlarging employment and relieving distress by that method. But the bill goes further, the purpose being that so far as, in the discretion of the administrator of this fund, it is found necessary and proper to do so all restrictions, limitations, and interferences may be done away with, to the end that people in destitution may be furnished food and the necessaries of life without undue delay.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Certainly.

Mr. HASTINGS. Keeping in mind that we have unemployment and distress in every section of the country, I should like to have the chairman's construction of section 4 as to how this money is to be apportioned among the States.

Mr. STEAGALL. It will be distributed in the exercise of the discretion lodged in the administrator of the fund. It will not be on a population basis or any other arbitrary method, but will be administered with respect to the requirements and necessities disclosed by the investigation conducted by the administrators of the fund. There is a limitation, however, that not more than 15 percent of the funds may go to any one State.

Mr. HASTINGS. The distinguished chairman and the other members of the committee who reported the bill, of course, understand that we have unemployment and distress in every State in the Union, yet there is no legislative direction in the bill as to distribution. This is left entirely to the administrator of the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is true. The funds will be distributed by the Administrator and the President. Any community in the United States is interested in any other community whose citizens are suffering for want of food, clothing, and shelter. It so happens the problem is most acute in the larger centers and cities, in some instances the wealthy centers, but the situation that confronts the country is a practical one. It is a question of going directly to the center of distress and dealing with it in a direct way as far as it may be done without taking away from the States and the local communities a proper share and voice in the administration of the funds. Only those in need have a right to expect aid, and all such should be taken care of as far as may be done without regard to communities where there is no such need.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I see another agency is set up under the terms of the bill. Will the gentleman explain how many will be employed in this new agency and why the agency is necessary when we have so many other agencies?

Mr. STEAGALL. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is purely a loaning agency of the Government. It is, in fact, a banking institution set up with governmental funds for the purpose of making loans. The Corporation must require full and adequate security. The purpose of this bill is to relieve hunger and distress in the United States. To do this intelligently the problem must necessarily be approached from this standpoint and not from the standpoint of loaning money.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. Directing the gentleman's attention again to section 4 (b) in which the amount of $200,000,000 was increased to $250,000,000 by the committee, will he not explain why this action was suggested by the committee?

In this connection I wish to point out that the benefits of this particular part of the fund cannot be obtained by a great many States, such as my own State, the constitution of which prohibits the State from making a grant of public funds for relief purposes. It is made available only in amounts "equal to one third of the amount expended by such State" for relief purposes.

Therefore the State of Georgia could not obtain any of this $250,000,000 provided in section 4 (b). Their matters of relief have been taken care of largely by private contributions made by their citizens, through agencies such as community chests.

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say to the gentleman that under the provisions of this bill the ratio limit with reference to aid in any particular State, as it relates to aid from other sources, is not limited to aid supplied by your State treasury, but aid from all sources.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman is referring now to another portion of the bill relating to the remainder of the fund. Section 4 (b) provides specifically—

> Each State shall be entitled to receive grants equal to one third of the amount expended by such State.

And States which have not expended any amount, because they are prohibited by their constitutions from doing so, could not obtain any part of this $250,000,000. My understanding is that civil divisions of a State are included, but the major portion of the relief afforded in my State has been done through private contributions.

Mr. STEAGALL. It is not limited to funds supplied by the State treasury, but funds from "all sources."

I am sorry I cannot continue to yield. We have only an hour of time, and I have promised to yield time to other gentlemen, and especially to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], the author of the bill. On this account, I am obliged to yield the floor, much as I regret not being able to answer further questions.

Let me say in conclusion that all of us deplore the necessity for this legislation, but the necessity exists, and it is a national problem that challenges the attention and the interest of every patriotic citizen of the United States, not alone upon humanitarian grounds but from the standpoint of public policy. We cannot afford to ignore the dangers that result from a continuance of the distress that exists in many of our cities and centers of population. Let us hope we shall be able to find normal methods by which to restore opportunity for employment, that men who want to work may find an opportunity to labor and support their loved ones, but until our leadership finds such methods of relief there is no course left us except to see that all the resources of the Nation are employed as far as necessary to end hunger and human suffering in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, members of the committee who dissent in the matter of this bill recognize that they put themselves in the ungracious attitude of seeming to object to the relief of distress; and yet it is my hope that reasonable men will admit that while there may be unanimity of opinion as to an end to be accomplished, there may be legitimate differences as to the methods to be pursued.

The dissenting members object because the method here proposed seems to them unnecessary and unwise. They deem it, in part, unnecessary because of the creation of a new agency to carry out work that might be intrusted to existing agencies, inasmuch as it stipulates that some of this duty, without responsibility, shall be conferred upon the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and because the methods in point of detail are inconsistent with tried and tested methods that have proved satisfactory.

First, as to the proposal that this money shall be handled through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

As the chairman of the committee has accurately explained, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was conceived and has been developed as a lending agency. It is now to be required to be part of the mechanism of a giving agency. It is simply to be a conduit through which the public funds will travel. Upon inquiry in the committee as to the reason why this roundabout method should be pursued, we learned that the reason, and the only reason, for this is to deceive the people of the United States.

The only purpose of this is to make them think, inasmuch as the gifts go through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, they are not a current expenditure. The only purpose of this is to keep it out of the Budget and by that much fail to disclose to the taxpayers of the country the expenditure in any one 12 months. We created a budget partly in order that the people might know what money was spent and when it was spent, and here is a proposal to hide the expenditure of $500,000,000 so that the public may not be aware of the financial facts of the case. Now, granted that the purpose is noble—granted, indeed, for the moment, if you please, that other features of the bill are estimable—there can be no defense for using a method that violates the very purpose of the Budget, a method that will accomplish no beneficial results save by way of deceit, and, of course, I ought not to class that as a beneficial result. The only result is one of deceit of the public as to the exact amount of the expenditures in the current year.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is to do nothing except obey the behest of a new official, the administrator. It is not to question whether the purposes or the needs or anything about the expenditure are wise. It is not to inquire whether the money is prudently spent. It is to have no responsibility whatever.

The Treasury Department was created for the purpose of doing such work as this, and not one single valid reason was given why the Treasury Department should not perform it.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as I told you and the chairman of the committee has told you, is a lending body. Here for the first time we are fastening on it the stigma of being a giving body. You may say that this has been done in the various so-called "50–50 propositions"—by the way, I have opposed every one of them—but the case differs in that here $250,000,000 is to be given outright.

Furthermore, you are for the first time having the whole Nation distribute money to all its parts. It is the first step that costs. What excuse can be given? How can it be explained that we should engage in the work of extracting money from all the States, bringing it to Washington, and giving it back to all the States? Only on the ground that some of the States will get more than their fractional share, and some will get less than their fractional share. The only excuse that can be given for this waste motion is that some of the States are to get more than their numbers alone would warrant and some States less.

Let us ask whether it is wise to engage in the policy of national giving. I must not take the time to lay before you all the possibilities, but I may suggest for your consideration whether this is not an entering on the dole system, a system that has been the curse of England and has brought upon her more distress than any other legislation enacted by Great Britain in our lifetime.

It is, in effect, a step toward the dole system, a system that cannot be defended in this country.

The proposal is to give $1 for every $3 paid out by the States. This was urged on us that it might incite the States to give more money and encourage charitable contribution. Is it reasonable, does your own experience tell you, that the offer of $1 upon the spending of $3 will be any big incitement to greater public giving or greater private charity? If this measure is to prevail, it ought to follow the plan that we have always used, of one half by the United States and one half by the States. Then there might be some real incitement to somebody to make more gifts than otherwise would be the case.

I would call your attention particularly, however, to one paragraph in the report of the majority members of the committee:

> The bill also provides a discretionary fund of $250,000,000 from which grants to States will be made when the combination of Federal, State, and local funds prove inadequate. This is a safety fund to make sure that insufficient State resources do not result in human suffering.

Gentlemen of the committee, through your chairman, I tell you that this hides most cleverly the more important purpose of this bill. In one single sentence there the majority of the committee glides over the great objection to the bill. The committee does not elsewhere answer in any part of the report the most serious objections to the bill. All the majority of the committee dared do was to put in that glittering generality which does not tell the real story.

Let me disclose to you, if I may, some of the things this conceals. In the minority views, and I venture somewhat immodestly to ask your perusal of them, you will find reprinted section 5 of the bill, a section which is full of trouble. Mind you, a Federal administrator is to be created, a new official, to be the germ of a new bureau that will have mushroom growth, as did the Children's Bureau, for nobody expects that its life will terminate in 2 years. To change the metaphor, this is the opening wedge for establishing another Federal agency. Not satisfied with handling from Washington the care of children, handling matters of maternity, and other concerns of individuals, it is now proposed to handle matters of charity.

This Federal administrator is to ascertain certain things about the expenditure of this money. Among others, he is told to find out how much has been contributed by private sources and private agencies for relief. Imagine the work contemplated in going into every city, town, and hamlet of the country to find out how much money has been given for private relief! The very impossibility of the task discloses the impropriety of putting it into this bill or of putting upon any man that duty.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentleman construe the bill to mean that that will authorize this administrator to investigate and interrogate these agencies as to how much money they are spending and what they are doing with it?

Mr. LUCE. I think that is what is contemplated, but unfortunately the bill is so vague in this section and in other particulars that I do not dare to state definitely that this is meant, but from the testimony before the committee and from the reading of the bill we infer, and I think justly, that it is the intention to have from Washington examination of all the charitable organizations and activities of the land. That is one of the reasons why we protest.

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. DEEN. Does the gentleman believe or not that this bill is perhaps a step in the direction of sowing a good crop of seed for communism throughout the United States?

Mr. LUCE. It is socialism. Whether it is communism or not I do not know, but it is still more adding to the functions of Government for the Nation to concern itself with the spending of money coming from private sources and expended by private agencies for individual relief.

Mr. DEEN. Does the gentleman believe or not that the people of the United States who are unemployed would have greater respect for the Members of this Congress if we were to expand properly the currency by putting new money in circulation on a profitable public-works program, rather than resorting to this sort of legislation?

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, it is my cherished hope, and a vain one, that at some time I may be able to have the attention of the House for about 4 hours on the currency question. To dispose of it in 4 seconds is beyond my power. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I should like to get the opinion of my distinguished friend from Massachusetts as to whether or not he believes that it is a socialistic philosophy of government for the Federal Government, where an actual emergency exists, assuming Members honestly feel that the actual emergency exists, to extend its power and its influence in bringing relief to those who are afflicted as a result of this depression—confining it to the Government?

Mr. LUCE. If we were acting according to the academic principles of political science, a great deal of what we are doing would not be done, but every man's heart is touched by the exigency. Our sympathy goes out to our fellow men, and we are stretching our political consciences, not partisan, but the consciences that rest on political science, to do most of the things we are now doing. I began by saying that I sympathize with the end, and if it were to be accomplished by the accustomed and legitimate means I have no doubt that I would vote for the bill. I am protesting against this method of doing it.

Mr. McCORMACK rose.

Mr. LUCE. I cannot yield further.

Mr. McCORMACK. But my friend has not answered my question.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I did not mean to answer the gentleman's question, and I tried to conceal that fact. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Turning his attention to the criticism of this feature of the bill about procuring the statistics as to the amount of relief that can be furnished by various State agencies, is it not a fact that all that information is now available to and in the possession of the relief administrators in the States and the State governments?

Mr. LUCE. It may be in some States. I do not know. But, in any event, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the next point in my indictment is to the effect that the administrator is to "assure adequate administrative supervision." This compels the administrator, if he performs his duty through his agencies, to supervise in the lump, not only the figures to which the gentleman has referred but also all matters of their detail.

Next, he is to determine what are "suitable standards of relief." He is to be entrusted with passing judgment upon all the charitable agencies of the land to determine whether the Salvation Army is conducting its affairs properly, whether the Volunteers of America, the American Legion, or any other agency is performing its duty. You are imposing upon this man the passing of judgment upon "suitable standards" of relief.

The bill may be construed to the effect that it is to be his duty to watch the expenditure of the money after it has been turned over to the States. This means that through his agents he has to go into every city of the land and determine whether the sad charges of graft and corruption, appearing in the very meanest type of political manipulations, are justified. He has to make inquiry in every nook and corner as to whether there is not only efficiency but also honesty, integrity, and good faith.

I have adverted to the fact that another bureau is to be established, another bureau that is to rival those already in existence, and this is contemplated at a time when we are trying to destroy bureaus, for one purpose of the economy bill and the reorganization bill was to get rid of bureaus. Here you are creating another, and you are entrusting its administrator with dispensing at his will $250,000,000, for only half of the total is to be used in matching and the other half is to be under the complete control of this administrator of public relief.

Mr. Chairman, these considerations are of grave importance, but more serious in the end will be the clothing of individual charity with a national interest.

It is to be greatly regretted that the development of human society in these modern days, particularly the development of the cities, has, in large measure, destroyed neighborhood responsibility, but, accepting it as inevitable, wholly unavoidable, we might recognize the wisdom of having town and city responsibility. If necessary in times of emergency, there may also well be State responsibility; but I submit, sir, with the boundaries of the State should end the responsibility for caring for neighbors. After all, the maintenance of associations that group around the family and the home and the maintenance of neighborhood and community spirit are among the great things to be preserved. I am appealing to you not still further to deaden responsibility by taking it farther away. The more you take it away the more mechanical it becomes, the weaker it becomes, the colder it becomes. In every respect it is unwise for the Nation to take over neighborhood responsibility.

Mrs. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mrs. KAHN. Has there been any estimate at all made of what each State will get under this allocation, the amount of money each State will get?

Mr. LUCE. No. Such figures, which would have to be largely estimates, were not given to us by States. I am glad the lady from California asked the question, because I had forgotten to say I am given to understand that many States are refusing, through their legislatures, to do this very thing—are refusing to dispense the money of the State—in the confident hope that they can get it out of the National Treasury. This measure will incite other States to do the same thing. It puts the temptation before all States, among them my own State, to abandon self-reliance. We have been proud of the fact in my State that we have met our own problems. Some of the other States are equally proud, and I believe warrantably so, that they have not come here even to borrow. This bill will make it almost imperative that every State, despite its own sense of responsibility, shall accept gratuities from the Nation. And so you will break down that spirit of State responsibility, as well as that of local responsibility, which is so all-important in this crisis.

Mrs. KAHN. I should like to ask if allotment by population would not be a fairer basis of allotment rather than the basis set out in the bill—that is, the amount of money already subscribed by that State for relief?

Mr. LUCE. The lady addresses her interrogatory to the first half of the bill, the matching proposition. There is $250,000,000 to be given away without any condition of that sort, to be given away at the judgment of one man here in Washington, who alone will determine.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. The State of New York pays 30 percent of the Federal taxes. That means the State of New York will pay $75,000,000 of this $250,000,000, and under this bill they can receive only a limit of 15 percent?

Mr. LUCE. Only 15 percent.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Under this bill it is apparently mathematically possible for some seven States to receive the entire amount of money available under this bill. Could the gentleman inform the House whether under the provisions of this bill there is any assurance that my particular State could get anything upon request? Have we any assurance that the State of Oregon, if we would apply for relief under this bill, would get anything at all, or would that be entirely in the discretion of the administrator of the bill?

Mr. LUCE. I understand it is entirely in the discretion of the administrator as to at least half the money.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Assuming that the gentleman's viewpoint is correct, as to the separate localities taking care of their own indigent and needy; let us suppose it is impossible for them to do so; does he still maintain the opinion that the country must come to their assistance?

Mr. LUCE. I will not admit the gentleman's postulate. I believe every State can take care of its own.

Mr. ADAMS. At this particular time?

Mr. LUCE. At this particular time.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Does the gentleman realize that today practically every State has a welfare officer who may well furnish the data and information required for the administration of this bill?

Mr. LUCE. Judging from what I hear about certain States that information would be in part untrustworthy.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Is it not true that practically every church has a charitable organization to carry on its usual and customary benevolence? Would not the churches and every community which has its own welfare organization be subject to the same investigation?

Mr. LUCE. They would be.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I was informed yesterday that there are counties in my district where individuals have been requested to get on the relief because of the fact the money is available and they might just as well be on the relief as not.

Mr. LUCE. Such conditions are to be found.

Mr. RICH. And I understand if Federal funds were to come into certain sections and be distributed in this manner it might take funds away from places where the money is really needed. This would bring about an unjustifiable distribution of money where it was not needed.

Mr. LUCE. Undoubtedly so.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BYRNS. Before the gentleman takes his seat, will he answer a question?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS. I just came into the Chamber. Do I understand it is the position of the gentleman from Massachusetts that under no circumstances should the Federal Government make any contribution to States or municipalities for the relief of the citizens of these States or municipalities?

Mr. LUCE. Had the gentleman heard me he would, I think, have known that I do not object to lending money to the States. I object to giving money to the States.

Mr. BYRNS. I understand. What I am talking about is contribution. I think I so framed my question with reference to the $250,000,000 that is carried in this bill.

Mr. LUCE. I do object to contribution.

Mr. BYRNS. Under any circumstances?

Mr. LUCE. By the Nation under any circumstances.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the special indulgence of my colleagues in beginning my remarks. It is that any question they may wish to ask be deferred until we reach the reading of the bill under the 5-minute rule.

In approaching the subject of this day, and considering the kind of objections we have thus far heard, it seems not inappropriate that we recur for a moment to that greatest of all teachers who once spake upon this subject and admonished the nations:

> When the Son of man shall come in His glory, and all the holy angels with Him, then shall He sit upon the throne of His glory:
> And before Him shall be gathered all nations: and He shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats.
> And He shall set the sheep on His right hand, but the goats on the left.
> Then shall the King say unto them on His right hand, Come, ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world:
> For I was anhungered, and ye gave Me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave Me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took Me in:
> Naked, and ye clothed Me: I was sick, and ye visited Me.
> And the King shall * * * say unto them, Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me.

The country acknowledges this Great Teacher, and its response is the relief bill before you—but this response has been referred to this morning as bringing a stigma upon the Nation's records. Let us consider for a moment the examples of other nations. In Germany in 1931 not $500,000,000, but $1,514,800,000 was appropriated to like purposes. In the country over which the flag of England waves, not $500,000,000, but $1,158,000,000 was appropriated for this purpose.

In the case of Germany, if you multiply by our population factor for comparison, its fund would be equivalent to $3,000,000,000. In the case of England, using our population as a basis, the fund would be the equivalent of about $3,500,000,000. Yet the country of Washington is to suffer a stigma, it is said, because it responds at all, even in the small measure of one sixth as much, to this great national and Christian duty.

IF IT IS A DOLE, WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

Mr. Chairman, the fundamental argument addressed against this measure is that with its passage we are entering upon the pathway of the dole. I shall address myself at once to this part of the discussion.

In 1931 it first became my privilege to visit the Old World; and upon my return friends were asking always, LEWIS, how did you find things in Europe?

My answer was that at that time in Holland, in Belgium, and in Switzerland I found conditions about what they considered their normal; but that in Great Britain and in Germany conditions resembled those in the United States with this important difference, my colleagues: That in Germany and in Great Britain the agony was taken out of it for the unemployed by their social insurance systems you have just heard dubbed as the dole.

In England, in Germany, and other countries the Prime Minister does the worrying, and why not? Who more than the Prime Minister is responsible for the conditions in which the disemployed workman finds himself? Has it not been the policy of these States for over a century to produce, in large part, just the conditions of disemployment under which we now suffer? Have they not encouraged the sciences? Have they not subsidized the inventor with exclusive patents? Have they not formed great industrial organizations to secure mass production; and all for what purpose? In order to reduce the cost of production for the benefit of society. And their policy has succeeded. Eight men now do the work of ten men a few years ago.

Yes; their policy has succeeded. Even in 1929, in our own country, 2,000,000 human beings, competent and anxious to work, were crying for the privilege, while their cries were drowned by the hilarity of the banquet table, the hilarity of men who were becoming millionaires in a week or multimillionaires in a month. I say their policy has succeeded. Two million were then out of work. Many more of them, due to the same cause, are suffering that condition now.

Mr. Chairman, we have to thank the scientist, the inventor, and the efficiency engineer, and we do thank them, for the achievements by which production labors have been so greatly lowered. Doubtless, in the long run it is desirable that the work of society should be accomplished with a minimum of labor; but, Mr. Chairman, it is only desirable provided certain fundamental conditions are not violated, and one of these conditions is the right of the human being to earn his living in the sweat of his face. [Applause.] The world does not owe a man a living, I grant you; but just as sure as there is a God in the heavens, the world does owe him a chance to make a living; and it is a delinquent, slacking nation that will take away from this workman by state policies his opportunity to labor, and sneer at him when the moment of the inevitable dole has arrived.

Now, the answer of these Prime Ministers, accepting their responsibility, has been the dole.

Let us see whether this was the wisest answer that could be made. We may not doubt its justness, I think, under the circumstances, but we may still question its wisdom as a method.

EQUALITY BEFORE THE LAW

No one here, I am sure, would consciously deny this workman equality before the law. It is the boast of our American civil polity that it guarantees it to all, and yet it is denied this disemployed workman when his job is taken from him without indemnification. Let me give you but one illustration. This state policy to economize labor with its disemployment of the workman, is all meant for the benefit of society. Let us see what happens when property is taken for the benefit of society. A new street needs to be cut across from one avenue to another. The owner of the property objects, through sentiment or ancestral pride; but the answer of the city council is that the convenience of the city must prevail over his personal desires. So he is evicted from the premises, but, mark you, gentlemen, he is not evicted until just compensation is made to him for the property rights thus taken away.

The right to work—who has ever doubted it? Who will dispute it anywhere in the world? And yet, Mr. Chairman, this right to work, as old as civilization, will not assure a single workman a loaf of bread tomorrow or safeguard his family from eviction. I appeal to my colleagues of the American House of Commons whether they will be willing, when the legislative opportunity be presented, to deny this workman the same legal sanctions for his right to work, the same day in court, granted to property before the law.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WORKERS

Mr. Chairman, we should be able to rely on the natural instincts to protect this right to work, and often we can—but its violation unfortunately is very general. Often the fault lies in the indifference of the employer, but it is not always the employer who is found delinquent. I have an instance in mind which occurred in a certain railroad shop, not in Maryland. When the traffic of the railroad had fallen one third, the management of the road found that it would have to reduce employment by one third; and the question of the disposition of the remaining employment was left to a vote of the men in the shop, themselves. The meeting was secret, not open. What happened in the secret meeting? Instead of giving 6 men 4 days a week, the elders got control and voted 4 men 6 days a week, and the company accepted their conclusion.

I want to make two remarks about the decision of this meeting and the action of the responsible managers of the road. First, as to the president of the road. He had no more right to put that discriminating question to the men than he had a right to put a similar question to the stockholders. He had no more right to permit this discrimination in employment than he would have had to say to one third of the stockholders, if the dividend fund had fallen one third, "We only have two thirds of the dividend fund left, and I am going to prefer the older stockholders." The stockholders have been granted legal sanctions for their rights—if he had attempted it we know what the courts would have promptly done.

Now, as to the men who would deliberately outlaw their fellows, push their fellow workmen off the raft of life, I want to say to them that they have invented a new form of blacklist, and that their blacklist is not a bit less odious than the blacklist they and their fathers as workmen have detested throughout history.

UNEMPLOYMENT CHRONIC

I say that this condition is chronic. Even if some power in the skies were to lift the depression and we were back to 1929 normalcy, the indications are that not less than one third of the present 12,000,000 now unemployed would still be vainly rapping at the factory gates.

I am not going into what I think are all the causes of the depression. What I speak of will be a principal cause but unfortunately an abiding one. There are two kinds of inventions. There is the kind of invention that reduces human employment, like the ditch-digging machine, where 2 men take the place, it is said, of 100 workmen. There is another kind: the automobile which has added so greatly to employment in the last 20 years in our own country. I shudder, Mr. Chairman, to think of what our unemployment situation would be had the automobile not come to take up the hands released by work-reducing inventions. If there were some power that could distribute the two kinds of inventions with equality, like the sexes—one little boy, one little girl, one little girl, one little boy—we should not have this aggravating problem before us. But a special emphasis is being placed in our system on work-reducing inventions. In every factory, efficiency engineering is being applied, and there is a "suggestion box" where the workmen are invited to drop suggestions, to reduce factory expense by reducing factory employment. I see no prospect of change in this condition.

EMPLOYMENT ASSET MOST IMPORTANT ASSET OF SOCIETY

Have we not come to the time when we must realize, as lawmakers, that the employment asset is the most important asset society possesses? It is true that, because of our neglect to properly define the subject matter, the employer often looks upon this employment attribute of his property as he looks on the physical property itself, as if it belonged to himself wholly. But it does not belong to him wholly. The employment attribute belongs also to the human beings who must have it in order to live. Our industrial order must accept its obligation to support our part of the human family, and to do this it must administer the employment asset as a trust for willing, competent workers. No industrial order can deny such an obligation. Even under feudalism a place was found for every person however humble, yea, and even slavery did not refuse to feed and clothe and doctor the slave, no matter what might happen to crops or to markets.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat, the disemployment problem is a chronic condition—2,000,000 out of work in 1929, with indications of becoming 4,000,000 at the end of this depression. The President spoke of the "forgotten man." There are now some 12,000,000 of them standing, waiting at the factory gates. Among them is a class that is worse outlawed than the forgotten man. I refer to the men over 45 years of age, who have reached the dead line of employability; behold them, my associates, they are the untouchables of America. Behold them as the protest of Bobby Burns starts ringing in your ears—

See yonder poor, o'erlabour'd wight,
So abject, mean, and vile,
Who begs a brother of the earth
To give him leave to toil;
And see his lordly fellow worm
The poor petition spurn,
Unmindful, tho' a weeping wife
And helpless offspring mourn.

Gladiatorial qualifications are now required in the market where the worker sells his work. But the workshop is not a Roman arena, even if it does often call for equal courage and for more than equal sacrifice.

THE LAWMAKER'S NEGLECT

How does it happen that the lawmakers have neglected this right to work?

Perhaps a reminiscence from my own experience will help us in answering that question. When I was a little lad about 12 years of age working in the coal mines of Pennsylvania, I had an experience which left an indelible impression on my mind. It was 50 years ago, I am obliged to say. The driver was just starting into the mines on his first trip in the morning with two empty cars and a mule drawing them. The mule suddenly took a crazy spell—or was it a crazy spell; perhaps it had a lucid interval and saw that there was no escape but in suicide. At any rate it ran away headlong into the mine, beyond the control of the driver, until it came to a switch where a prop was sustaining some loose rock. When the cars struck the switch they jumped the track, struck down the prop, down came the overhanging roof, crushed the cars, killed the mule, and ended the earthly career of that driver.

Now, what happened in the head offices on the 1st of the month following the report of the accident? The directors reasoned correctly enough that they could not operate coal mines without killing mules, without smashing mine cars, and that, therefore, the cost of new mules and of new cars was properly chargeable to the expenses of conducting the business. But how about the driver's life? Ah, he was not property. He was an American citizen. "Civis Romanus sum." His wife had no rights. Yet, if his coal-blackened face had been blackened by an African sun, if that accident had happened in the Alabamas before the war, the same directors would have charged up, of course, at least $1,000 more to replace the slave. Meanwhile, what happened to the widow and her children. A collection was taken in the mining village that filled her cupboards for a week or two, and there her history is lost in the common miseries of a callous world.

May I add, here, a perhaps too personal sequel to that accident. The first workmen's accident compensation law passed on this side of the Atlantic Ocean was passed in 1902 by the General Assembly of the State of Maryland, and that act was prepared by the hands of the man who as a boy witnessed the accident in the coal mines of Pennsylvania. [Applause.]

LEGAL SANCTIONS

My colleagues, it is evident that we cannot rely on the moral instincts alone to safeguard this right of the worker—legal protection must be provided for this right to work, just as it is provided for property rights. Mr. Swope, the president of the General Electric Co. of the United States, has recognized that the worker's relations to employment should not be longer neglected by lawmakers and industrial leaders. Some 2 years ago he proposed a plan most favorably received by the public which carried securities for the workers, embracing:

(a) Unemployment insurance.
(b) Old-age insurance.
(c) Health and life insurance.
(d) Accident insurance.
(e) Stabilization of the industry.

In order to effectuate these benefits Mr. Swope proposed the legal establishment of national trade associations for each industry, each to be managed by a board of 9 persons, 3 employers, 3 employees, and 3 representatives of the public. The insurance funds are to be maintained by equal contributions from the employers and employees. These insurance features required such national trade associations, he thought, so that workers might transfer from one employer to another without losing their benefits. This proposal was specifically approved by the United States Chamber of Commerce.

The Swope objectives include and serve the worker who is on the pay roll, who has a job. But how about the jobless, the "men at the gate"? They, too, have rights. But here again they are "forgotten", these "untouchables", even in the noble plan of Mr. Swope. Here, my colleagues, lie our duties, the duties of the lawmaker. Which shall it be? Shall the worker be given his share of the work, or shall he be given a dole? How can we continue to deny him both?

WORKER MAY SUE

And so the proposed bill adds to the Swope plan a provision for the jobless. The worker may apply for work in his trade to the workmen's accident commission of his State, and if it finds him competent and his record is all right, it notifies the trade association, which is then placed under a legal duty to give him his share of the work available or pay him the wages it refuses him a chance to earn.

I have only given you now the barest outline of the method of administration discussed elsewhere in full detail. No new offices are created by the plan—its administration is entrusted to the trade association and the existing State workmen's accident commissions, with an appellate jurisdiction when necessary in the Federal Trade Commission.

I feel justified in advising you that under the National Trade Association idea proposed by Mr. Swope, along with his unemployment and other insurance features, effective legal sanctions can be provided to assure this workman out of employment his share of the employment on proving his competency to work. If the employers within the Trade Association gratuitously ignore his right to work, then the Trade Association ought to take the responsibility of denying his God-given right, and ought to pay him, not a dole, but just compensation for a right which it is denying an unoffending human being. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

EXHIBIT A

ANALYSIS OF RIGHT-TO-WORK BILL

SECTION 1. (a) Declaration legalizing citizen's right to work and on proof of competency to share of the employment available in his trade; which if denied, compensation payable from the trade in lieu thereof.

(b) Competent worker, unemployed, may apply to workmen's accident compensation commission of State for employment in his trade, which notifies trade association, which may contest his competency and record. If these be good, commission orders trade association to employ or place him.

Boards of national trade associations to submit rules for determining competency; also disciplinary regulations in relation to discharge, suspension, or demotion for neglect or occupational misconduct.

Incompetency shall not be imputed to worker on account of age unless he has reached pensionable age, nor on account of a physical defect if he can in fact do the work involved.

(c) If trade association refuses or fails to place worker in 1 week after certificate by commission, it may be sued by worker for compensation before such workmen's accident compensation commission, which, if case proved, shall order trade association to pay the worker compensation, to continue until worker is employed. Compensation to be governed by the wages prevailing in the State.

(d) Each trade association required to establish compensation fund.

(e) Secretary trade association to make monthly reports to Federal Trade Commission showing pending compensation claims and state of fund. Monthly excise tax sufficient to pay such claims is levied upon corporation members of association to be assessed by Federal Trade Commission based on number of employees.

(f) Workmen's accident compensation commissions of States to have plenary jurisdiction to enforce the act, from which same appeals may be taken to same courts as in workmen's accident compensation cases.

SEC. 2. The act shall apply—

(a) To corporations employing not less than 25 persons engaged in (1) manufacturing, (2) mining, (3) transportation, (4) electrical communication, (5) building construction, (6) distribution of gas and petroleum products, and electrical energy, printing industries.

(c) Such industries to be classified by the Federal Trade Commission into trade associations according to products or services suitable to carry out the act.

SEC. 4. (a) Temporary initial board members to be designated by the Federal Trade Commission:

(1) Three members on behalf of the public from persons affiliated with organizations of consumers of the product or service.
(2) Three employees from unions of workmen in the trade.
(3) Three employers from the corporations engaged in the trade.

(b) Terms of office shall be staggered so that of first appointments one third of each set of members shall serve 1 year, 2 years, and 3 years, respectively.

(c) Meetings of the boards: (1) To organize and adopt bylaws.

(d) Permanent members of the board to be elected according to system prescribed by the Federal Trade Commission.

(e) Corporations to continue payment of wages to employee members while on association business.

SEC. 5. (a) Plans for stabilization of industry and employment shall be prepared by the national trade associations:

(1) Equitable partition of available work among competent workmen.
(2) Life, disability, and health insurance for employees.
(3) Workmen's accident compensation.
(4) Workmen's old-age pensions.
(5) Workmen's unemployment insurance.
(6) Stabilization of production.

Operation by—

(1) Trade association under its rules and regulations as approved by Federal Trade Commission.

(2) Boards in each corporation representing management and employees.

(3) Administration expenses shall be paid by members of trade association in proportion to number of employees.

EXHIBIT B

METHOD OF ENFORCEMENT OF THE ACT

To effect enforcement of the act an excise tax of 1 percent on their gross income is imposed on corporations liable. A drawback of 99 percent of this tax is allowed those which become members of the Trade Associations if they comply with their duties under the act. As an additional incentive the members of the association are exempted from the Sherman Antitrust Act if they do not actually conspire to raise prices.

DRAWBACK OF TAX TO MEMBERS OF TRADE ASSOCIATIONS

That Congress can levy such a tax is quite certain. There have been innumerable instances of acts of Congress designed to protect and assist industry by the imposition of taxes on production and commerce, so graduated or differentiated as to effect this object. These instances began with the organization of the Government, and had long preceded it. The question which is alone suggested is as to whether Congress, having levied a tax, can grant a drawback to the members of the trade associations.

The drawback of 99 percent, or in fact a bounty of that amount now granted domestic manufacturers, of the customs duty paid by them on importations of the raw material entering into their manufactures, is a full precedent. This discrimination or bounty in their favor, designed to encourage American industries—that is, "provide for the general welfare", is not contested as a violation of the Constitution. The similar purpose, certainly much magnified by necessity, presented by the proposed American coal cartel, would rescue a basic industry of the country from its long-continued deplorable state.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF DRAWBACK AND BOUNTIES

The practice of the bounty and drawback goes back to the very foundations of the American Government. Hamilton favored "pecuniary bounties" and said:

"Pecuniary bounties are one of the most efficacious means of encouraging manufactures. Their advantages are:

"(a) They are positive and direct.
"(b) They avoid temporary augmentation of price.
"(c) They do not have tendency to produce scarcity."

If any doubt as to the validity of such legislation has existed, it is answered by the recent decision of the Supreme Court sustaining the flexible provision of the tariff law under which the United States Tariff Commission and the President are empowered to lower or raise tariff rates for "protective purposes."

Bounties to the fishing industry appeared in the very first tariff acts. (See sec. 4, act of 1789 on p. 15, Tariff Acts, 1790 to 1909; also U.S. v. Nickerson, 17 How. 204.) The bounty to fishing was long continued. The drawback system is but another illustration of the bounty. The drawback, an old method in the practice of protection, is found in the act of 1789 and continues to this day. (See Dictionary of Tariff Information, p. 272, as to its use in the different countries.)

The McKinley Tariff Act of October 1, 1890 (par. 231) provided for bounties on sugar "grown" and "produced" within the United States. Some $30,000,000 were paid sugar producers "within the United States" under the bounty provided by the McKinley Act which remained in operation about 4 years. The validity of the sugar bounty in that act was not passed on by the Supreme Court before its repeal. But that Court did sustain a later act of March 2, 1895, granting a bounty to producers of sugar under the McKinley Act who had complied with its provisions but who had not been paid their bounties at the time the McKinley Act expired.

TAXES MAY BE IMPOSED TO ENCOURAGE DOMESTIC INDUSTRY

By an odd turn in our judicial history, even those doubts about the constitutionality of a protective tariff, which were raised by Daniel Webster, were not disposed of by the Supreme Court until its October term in 1928. In passing on the constitutionality of the flexible provisions of the Tariff Act of 1922 by which the President, in conjunction with the Tariff Commission, is empowered to reduce or increase certain tariff rates, the Supreme Court said:

"It is contended that the only power of Congress in the levying of customs duties is to create revenue and that it is unconstitutional to frame the customs duties with any other view than that of revenue raising. It undoubtedly is true that during the political life of this country there has been much discussion between parties as to the wisdom of the policy of protection, and we may go farther and say as to its constitutionality, but no historian, whatever his view of the wisdom of the policy of protection, would contend that Congress since the first revenue act in 1789 has not assumed that it was within its power in making provision for the collection of revenue to put taxes upon importations and to vary the subjects of such taxes or rates in an effort to encourage the growth of the industries of the Nation by protecting home production against foreign competition. It is enough to point out that the second act adopted by the Congress of the United States July 4, 1789 (ch. 2, 1 Stat. 24), contained the following recital:

"'SECTION 1. Whereas it is necessary for the support of government, for the discharge of the debts of the United States, and the encouragement and protection of manufactures, that duties be laid on goods, wares, and merchandises imported:

"'Be it enacted, etc.'

"In this First Congress sat many members of the Constitutional Convention of 1787. This Court has repeatedly laid down the principle that a contemporaneous legislative exposition of the Constitution when the founders of our Government and framers of our Constitution were actively participating in public affairs long acquiesced in, fixes the construction to be given its provisions.

"J. W. Hampton, Jr., & Co. v. the United States, decided April 9, 1928 (276 U.S. 394)."

The act of 1789, referred to by the court, not only carries a "bounty" by name to the fishing industry in section 4 but a discriminating drawback in section 5 under the name of a "discount" to American-built ships of 10 percent of the duties on merchandise carried by them. (Tariff acts 1789 to 1909, p. 15.)

THE 10-PERCENT TAX ON STATE-BANK CIRCULATION

An important illustration of the power of Congress to discriminate in the imposition of an excise tax is found in the tax of 10 percent imposed on the circulation of private State banks. The tax was not imposed on the similar circulation of the equally private national banks, although the circulation of neither the State nor the national banks was legal tender, but resembled each other perfectly in their exchange characteristics. The Court sustained this discriminatory tax in the celebrated case of Veazie Bank v. Fenno (8 Wall. 533).

OTHER INSTANCES OF LEGISLATIVE DISCRIMINATIONS

The history of the levy of taxes and the imposition of duties is replete with instances of legislative "welfare" discriminations. Until recently, taxes imposed on corporation net incomes were remitted on net incomes derived from foreign sources. In the case of inheritance taxes and income taxes, the rates of the tax are obviously discriminatory. There is a discrimination of 20 percent in our tariff in favor of Cuba. Accident compensation laws exempt employers whose employees number less than a prescribed number. In fact, it may be said that revenue legislation is not likely to be intelligent or just, which does not discriminate in order to recognize some special "general welfare" considerations in its applications.

Other references to relevant decisions by the courts are as follows:

Oleomargarine case: McCray v. United States (195 U.S., p. 27); Kelly v. Lewellyn (274 Fed. Rep. 108).

Discriminating not unconstitutional: American Sugar Refining Co. v. Louisiana (179 U.S. 89; 45 L.Ed. 102); Williams v. Fears (179 U.S. 270; 45 L.Ed. 186).

(See generally Cooley's Constitutional Lim., p. 825–N–3, 8th ed., 221 U.S. 660; 65 L.Ed. 899.)

Phosphorus matches: Willoughby on the Constitution of the United States (2d ed., vol. 2, p. 674).

Narcotic drugs: Willoughby on the Constitution of the United States (2d ed., vol. 2, p. 674).

Cotton futures: Willoughby on the Constitution of the United States (2d ed., vol. 2, 679).

Opium, Willoughby on the Constitution of the United States (2d ed., vol. 2, p. 679).

One cannot read the phosphorus, narcotic, or opium acts and the decisions of the courts in relation thereto without the conviction that Congress may legislate to accomplish certain national "welfare" objectives not specifically named in the Constitution. One naturally expects this, since Congress is authorized by the Constitution "to lay and collect taxes * * * to provide for the general welfare." In the narcotic acts we find a full-fledged prohibition law not distinguishable in its features from the Volstead Act.

Under both the Volstead and the narcotic acts the privilege of sale is restricted to a particular class of persons, and the sale itself is permissible only on a doctor's prescription. The decisions of the Supreme Court justify the statement that the welfare clause in the past has always proved sufficient authority for legislation when the "welfare" objective represented a paramount necessity and when the desirability of the legislative restraint was generally admitted and the means employed were not unreasonable.

For a full discussion of the meaning of the "welfare clause" reference is given to the statements of James F. Lawson, Esq., dated February 2, 3, 1933, before the Senate Judiciary Committee on Senate bill 5480. Also to a statement by Hon. DAVID J. LEWIS, Member of Congress, on the subject before the same committee on February 3, 1933, in re the Black 30-hour bill. It is believed that these studies will leave the student in little, if any, doubt that the clause in section 8, article I, known as the "general welfare clause" was intended to give Congress a real power.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER].

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, we are asked today to consider a most unusual departure from ordinary conduct in governmental matters as we have heretofore understood them. It is a most extraordinary departure even in this time of extraordinary departures in which we are living. It is most unfortunate that gentlemen who are in favor of this bill do not use the time which is available to them in answering the very evident objections to the bill which have been presented. There is only a certain amount of time to be given the consideration of this very important measure, and it does seem as though that time should be taken to present objections to the bill and to answer them if they can be answered.

Two chief objections have already been expressed, but they are so important, they are so vital and basic, that we cannot make a mistake in reemphasizing and redefining them.

The most important thing to be considered in connection with this legislation is whether or not this Government will for the first time embark on the policy of giving money away freely to its citizens, and giving it away in large sums. It is true that in the past where earthquake has occurred or flood or some other act of God which has affected temporarily but very materially some small locality in the country, where local needs are enormous, but where local help is paralyzed, the Government has come to the aid of the community and appropriated sums, small from the point of view of the National Treasury; but now we are asked to distribute among the people of this country half a billion dollars, and that, even in the amounts we are daily discussing, is a great deal of money. We are asked to give this money away without any chance of its ever being repaid.

I do not suppose there is anyone here who has a monopoly in his desire to give help to the need which we know now exists in the country, but for the majority report to spend 75 percent of its space in discussing the great needs of the country seems rather superfluous. To have speakers get up here and say what the needs are also seems superfluous. We know those needs are there. The only problem is how are those needs to be met. Shall we insist that the States, to the extent they are able, shall meet those needs before the Federal Government steps in, and then, when it does step in, shall it merely loan to the States or shall it make grants of money? We are now asked to make a grant of this enormous sum without any chance of possible return.

It is said that the possibilities of the States to borrow have ceased; that some States have no right to borrow, and some States have exhausted all their borrowing ability, even if they had it. We know, however, that we met this problem last July, when the relief bill was adopted, and we set aside $300,000,000 to be loaned to States by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for their relief needs. Of that sum about $60,000,000 is left today. No reason has been given yet, and I should like to ask the sponsors of this bill if they can give any reason why, if additional help is needed, we cannot follow the same procedure and allocate, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, an additional sum to be loaned to States, and where the States may not borrow, to be allocated to them with the understanding that they will be repaid out of future Federal grants for road purposes or for other purposes. In other words, if our paramount purpose is meeting the needs of the people in various States, where they are not able to do it themselves, is it too much to ask that the States shall assume whatever obligation they can, and that they should be willing in the future to receive less from what the Government might otherwise be giving them for other needs?

Is there anything left of our Federal system? Day by day we are asked to consider things which any constitutional student would consider entirely out of the question a few weeks ago. Shall we admit that the whole Federal system is gone? Should we not remember that our Government is a government of granted powers from 48 sovereign States to the Central Government, and should we not, as far as possible, keep away from the idea of making the Government responsible for employing everybody, for supervising everything, and for giving relief to everybody?

There is one other point in this bill which is paramount, and that is the method of accounting, so to speak. We have set up in the past a Reconstruction Finance Corporation to lend money to railroads, insurance companies, banks, States and municipalities, agricultural and other organizations, but throughout we have realized, as was well said today by the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, that we have a kind of bank, a lending agency, to make loans for various specific purposes. Now, for the first time, we are about to use that loaning organization and say to it, "You are to give away one half billion dollars, with no chance of its ever being repaid." In other words, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would immediately be faced with a half billion dollar deficit; and for what purpose? It is Federal money, of course, because if there is no way in which it can be paid back, it must be paid ultimately by the Federal Treasury. If that is the case, why not face the issue and say, "Here is a certain amount of money which must go for relief. It must be readily available. The Treasury will make it available and pay it under certain conditions." Why put it through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, unless it is an attempt to conceal what we are really doing, to conceal the fact that we are spending this much money? If the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is a loaning agency, why are we asking it to give away money? If this money is to be given for relief purposes, then let us face the issue squarely. Let us not fool ourselves and pretend when the year is over that we have not spent that money just because we have allowed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to give it away instead of giving it away from the Treasury directly.

Those are the two most important points in this bill; and in the time that remains for general debate, I believe those points should be met squarely by those who sponsor this bill, and an explanation given to the Members of this House as to why those matters have been handled in the way they have.

Before I conclude I want to quote from the hearings held on this bill. Senator WAGNER, as is well known, sponsored this bill in the Senate. This is a quotation from his testimony in the committee on this very matter, the question of whether it should be a loan or a gift. I asked Senator WAGNER as follows:

Mr. HOLLISTER. Why could not the same result be achieved by merely increasing the $300,000,000 authorization that was in the relief bill passed last July?

Senator WAGNER. It could have been done that way. This is another method.

Mr. HOLLISTER. It would have escaped entirely the criticism of gift money.

Senator WAGNER. That is true.

Mr. HOLLISTER. It would have left the obligation on the States.

Senator WAGNER. Yes. Heretofore the bills I have advocated, and which passed, provided for the advance in the way of a loan, but this is the method which those in authority have agreed upon, and it is agreeable to me.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Why ought we to depart from the idea in the relief bill of last July, shifting now from a loan to a grant, if it is possible still to borrow?

Senator WAGNER. It would only be on the theory that this has become a national matter.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Nobody would starve if we did it the other way.

Senator WAGNER. No. I would say that the President suggested this method.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the only reason we are adopting this method is because it has been suggested by the President, I say that is not sufficient reason. I say that if we are going to depart from the idea of having the States care for their own and of having the Federal Government keep away from the dole system, we should make that clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER] has expired.

Mr. LUCE. I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HOLLISTER. If we are going to depart from the idea which has prevailed heretofore in this country, and if we are going to start on the dole system—the dole system which has brought Germany, England, and other countries into the economic condition in which they are today—I say that we ought to have some clear reason for it, rather than merely the statement that this is the way the President wants it.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I take it the gentleman is not in favor of the Federal Government giving money to citizens?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Absolutely not.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. How, then, does the gentleman justify the State's doing that which the Federal Government should not do?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Because it is not the function of the Federal Government. The powers of the Federal Government are granted to it. Each State is its own sovereignty. Each State should look after its own citizens.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The gentleman does not object to the end sought to be accomplished; he objects to the means used to reach the end.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the remarks of my able and philosophically minded friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], and I was quite interested in his response to a question propounded by a gentleman on the Democratic side of the aisle as to the regulation of private agencies for the raising and dispensing of money for relief purposes. While I am in accord with his reply, nevertheless, his reply was such as to prompt me to ask the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts that I did, as to whether or not in his opinion this particular bill came within the purview of what is known as the socialistic philosophy of government.

I expected my honorable and distinguished friend to make an honest reply which he did. He evaded the question and frankly stated that he intended deliberately to evade a direct reply. However, the inference was left by him, as the result of his answers, that the provisions of this bill came within the purview of what is known as the socialistic philosophy of government. Of course, he did not intend to convey to the people throughout the country that this bill is socialistic in its character. Nevertheless, such an inference was left by him, and I felt that there should be incorporated in the RECORD the remarks of some Member that this legislation is consistent with the predominant philosophical governmental thought that prevails today.

My friend from Massachusetts knows as well as I do—and far better than I do—and I acknowledge this frankly, because he is one of the most eminent students of government in America today, yes, in the world today—that government has two functions to perform: Primary or essential functions, and secondary or optional functions. My friend knows that the primary or essential functions are military, financial, and civil, the preservation of our country against foreign aggression, the raising of money through taxation to pay the expenses of government, and the protection of our people against internal disorder. These are functions that any government must maintain. Even the most unstable governments of the world must defend or try to defend its people against a foreign foe, must raise money through taxation to pay the expenses of government, and must try to protect its people against internal disorder. These, in substance, are the primary functions of government.

Then there are the optional functions of government. Where conditions arise among social and economic groups, and the existing agencies are unable to cope with the same, government is then justified in using its power and influence to assist the social or economic group affected when such assistance inures to the general welfare of the country.

The proper activity of government does not stop when it has performed strictly essential functions. There are many elements of general welfare which would be left unprotected if the proper function of government stopped there. The promotion of the common good requires, indirectly at least, the cognizance and adjustment of problems when they arise, and particularly when no other agency exists capable of establishing and administering policies and making adjustments consistent with the best interests of society as a whole.

When conditions exist affecting a large group of its people, and private agencies are incapable of handling the same and making the necessary adjustments, government is justified and warranted in taking jurisdiction, under its secondary or optional function, without regard to whether or not precedent exists. The mere fact that we have never before had to do anything such as is contemplated in this bill does not mean when an emergency exists which requires cognizance of and action by the Government that we have not got the power to do so, and equally that is no reason why we should not do so.

As one great student of government once said:

> Since individual welfare is the ultimate, though not strictly the formal object of government, that object ought to be deliberately promoted by government, whenever it cannot be adequately furthered by any other agency.

Every optional governmental activity is the result of an attempt to regulate abuses that arose under the unrestricted individualistic economic system as created and operated by the so-called "Manchester School of Economic Thought." Our Interstate Commerce Commission was necessary as a result of abuses. Our minimum wage laws were necessary as the result of abuses. All social legislation now on the statute books became necessary as the result of abuses. All our regulatory bodies became necessary as the result of abuses that occurred sometime in the past. The abuses were so numerous and accumulated to such an extent they had to be corrected, controlled, regulated, or removed, if possible. No other agency existed capable of coping with the situation, so naturally Government entered into this field under its optional powers; and this is what we are doing today.

The assumption of government under optional duties or powers is usually based on expediency or necessity due to certain conditions existing. Conditions and circumstances usually determine the obligations and necessity of government's extending its field of optional functions. Under our scheme of government the exercise over optional functions of government is usually, and whenever possible, left to private enterprises and agencies. The fact that we generally follow this practice does not mean that government has not the right to extend its field when necessity requires. When private agencies are unable to control, regulate, or cope with a situation affecting a large group of our citizens, and if the existing condition, if continued, will affect the general welfare, it is the duty of government to take cognizance of the condition and assume its responsibility.

> Whenever the general interest * * * is threatened with injury which can in no other way be met or prevented, it is the duty of public authorities to intervene. When there is a question of defending the rights of individuals, the poor and the helpless have a claim to especial consideration. The rich have many ways of shielding themselves and stand less in need of help from the State, whereas those who are badly off have no resources of their own to fall back upon and must chiefly depend upon the assistance of the State.

These words are quoted from public utterances of one of the most outstanding and conservative students of government of all time.

This is what we are trying to do in assisting the farmer; this is what we are trying to do in assisting the small-home owner; this is what we are trying to do in assisting the worker; this is what we are trying to do today for those economically in distress.

Our Government, every other agency failing, entering into this field in the exercise of its optional powers, is acting consistent with the present governmental thought. Legislation of this kind is unfortunately necessary at this time and should be passed by an overwhelming vote. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, save for the last unfortunate sentence of my friend from Massachusetts, I desire to be put on record as saying "amen" to his whole speech. It did not belong in this discussion, however. We do not differ as to the principles involved. The only question here is one of method. My proposition is that this ought to be a State and local affair, not a National affair.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY].

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Chairman, no one in this House, I am sure, is unmindful of the general condition that exists throughout the country. I do not believe any of us would preserve property and fail to feed the hungry ones who are to be found on every hand, no matter what method we might have to use to convert that property into buying power and use that buying power to keep people from starving to death; but I am particularly interested in the indifference shown by Members of Congress who make no examination into the things we are proposing to do by this particular legislation.

There has never been this type of legislation enacted by Congress, regardless of the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] to the contrary. We are here asked, for the first time, to begin a type of continuous doling out of the Federal Treasury so as to meet showings made by States for requirements presented by them to feed the hungering people of such States. There is no showing in the hearings on this bill that it is necessary for any State to come to the Federal Treasury in this sort of way. Even the chief sponsor of the measure, Senator WAGNER, refused to state that New York State could not properly take care of its people and meet the situation presented to that State at the present time. He was pressed on this question, and yet he refused to say that his State could not perform this duty for its people.

If you will examine this bill, you will find it sets up an administrative bureau; and section 6, on page 7, provides that "the administrator upon approving a grant to any State shall certify to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation which shall, except upon revocation of a certificate by the administrator"—unless the administrator withdraws his certificate, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall—> make payments without delay to the States in such amounts and at such times as may be prescribed in the certificate.

This is pretty broad power.

We read, on page 6, at line 10, after the word "provided"—

> That the Administrator may certify out of the funds made available by this subsection additional grants to States applying therefor to aid needy persons who have no legal settlement in any State or community.

And in paragraph (e), on page 6, at line 21, we read, and I want you to get the extent of this grant of power—

The decision of the Administrator as to the purpose of any expenditure shall be final.

It does not provide that, the President and the administrator; it says "the administrator."

You will have to read the bill carefully to know what you are doing when you vote on this measure.

I am as humane as any person in this House. The saddest thing I can imagine is little children starving because they have not food to appease their hunger, and I am going to tell you an incident that happened in this very city of Washington about 2 months ago. A grade mother visited one of the schools in this city, and at noontime there was a little boy lying on one of the benches. She went over to him and said, "What is the matter, little man?" He said, "My stomach hurts. Something is gnawing right here [indicating]." She said, "Have you had your lunch?" He said, "No; I have not had any lunch; we did not have anything at home this morning but a few crackers, and mother gave those crackers to me and my little brother and sister; we ate them, and that is all we had, and I had nothing to bring to school." So he had not had any lunch. He did not know what was the matter with him. It was hunger gnawing the very life out of this child, and at the same time Mr. Ballou, the head of the schools of this city, was opposing the using of funds that were proposed to be donated from private sources to keep these children from being hungry, and it was shown that there were many such children here. This is a sad situation to me, and it appeals to me.

I do not think it is necessary for us to come to the Federal Treasury and ask for $500,000,000 out of the funds that will have to be put into this Treasury by taxation from the people in order to meet situations in several parts of the country. There is no showing in the hearings as to what the different sections of the country need. I asked that this information be given, but it was not furnished. There is nothing definite in the hearings on this bill that would give the House information, if you should read them from cover to cover.

There is no provision that the several States shall participate even according to their requirements.

There must be bureaus set up; there must be agencies established to administer, and there must be other elements of preparatory work before you can even come to the administrator and lay your needs before him and have them considered by him. But there is still another thing which I think we ought to take into consideration.

THIS BILL WILL UNBALANCE THE BUDGET

You know about the first day we met here, there was a tremendous appeal from the President for us to save funds and balance the Budget and cut out people, especially the soldiers of the World War, even though they were suffering disabilities and were destitute and even though they had casualties that kept them from earning a living, and the testimony in this particular hearing shows that two or three hundred thousand ex-service men, admittedly disabled, admittedly in want, will be added to the bread lines to be taken care of out of this fund.

The McDuffie report on the economy bill said as follows:

As of the end of this fiscal year the public debt of the United States Government will have been increased by the amount of approximately $5,000,000,000 during the course of the last 2 years. The President stated in his message:

"For 3 long years the Federal Government has been on the road toward bankruptcy. For the fiscal year 1931 the deficit was $462,000,000. For the fiscal year 1932 it was $2,472,000,000. For the fiscal year 1933 it will probably exceed $1,200,000,000. For the fiscal year 1934, based on the appropriation bills passed by the last Congress and the estimated revenues, the deficit will probably exceed $1,000,000,000 unless immediate action is taken. Thus we shall have piled up an accumulated deficit of $5,000,000,000."

These deficits are without taking into consideration the expenditures for the sinking fund. They are, therefore, actual.

This has had a profound effect upon the credit of our Government. As conclusive evidence it is to be noted that whereas several months ago the rate of interest on 90-day Treasury bills was one tenth of 1 percent, it rose on February 23 to 0.55; on March 1 to 0.99; and on March 6 to 4¼ percent. This cannot be ignored or taken lightly.

But this is not all. On March 15 the Treasury is confronted with a huge refunding operation amounting to $694,000,000 of 3¾-percent and 2-percent certificates of indebtedness. On May 2 it must refund an additional $239,000,000 of 2-percent and on June 15, $374,000,000 of 1½-percent certificates. A total prior to the end of this fiscal year of $1,300,000,000 must be refunded. And in addition approximately $300,000,000 must be borrowed to meet the operating expenses of the Government for the remainder of this fiscal year.

The ability to successfully conduct these large operations totaling almost $2,000,000,000 within the course of the next 3½ months is seriously menaced by the extent to which the United States Government has been in the past living beyond its income and in the absence of drastic and immediate action will continue to do so. The credit of the United States Government is in danger. The first refunding date, March 15, is under our noses. This is the emergency. This is why action must be taken now.

I voted for the economy bill. I voted for that measure in order to help save, as the President pointed out in his message was necessary, four or five hundred million dollars, and proceedings have been put into effect and are now going into force, looking forward to the saving of this money by cutting off disabled veterans of all wars. By my vote, I am not going to undo and belie what I tried to do on that occasion by voting for this appropriation. This simply means taking $500,000,000 out of the Treasury that we saved in the way the President asked through the economy bill, and delivering it to an administrator to be put wherever he wants to put it, and on whatever showing satisfies him.

I do not expect that my speech will have much effect on the Members sitting here. I do not expect you will spend much time looking into the merits of this bill. When the title of a bill indicates it is for humanitarian purposes, we are all for such things, just as we have passed every kind of farm bill presented here, because the headlines of the bill looked good, and we do not go much further than that to weigh the merits of the proposal. However, I am speaking because of the principle I feel is involved in this proposed legislation.

Now, if I may call your attention to what has happened in countries that have had the dole system, I would read to you from a contemporary English author as to the effect of the dole system on the morale of the English people; and by the way, I have had a number of letters from my district, especially where the colored people have refused to accept employment as long as they are getting these Red Cross sacks of flour donated by the United States Government. They are not going to do anything as long as they get this help. We cannot always discriminate and we cannot always adjust these matters, but let me read you this quotation.

I am reading from page 105 of the hearings:

I am reading from a book the title of which is "The Nineteenth Century (1834)—A History", by Robert Mackenzie. It covers this point so thoroughly that I think it is well to quote from it, that we may get some insight into the practical operations of this type of procedure. [Reading:]

"The evils of pauperism in England had become unendurable, and it was felt that some attempt to remedy them could no longer be delayed. According to the wise practice which about that time came into frequent use, a commission of inquiry was appointed, that legislation might be based on competent knowledge. The investigation of the commissioners revealed a system 'destructive to the industry, forethought, and honesty of the laborers; to the wealth and morality of the employers of labor, and of the owners of property; and to the mutual good will and happiness of all.' The enormous cost of the system—nearly 8,000,000 sterling—was not by any means its most serious aspect. It was achieving with appalling rapidity the utter demoralization of the English peasantry. Already the wholesome repugnance to accept the pauper's dole had become almost extinct. In some counties men refused to work, as they preferred the easier and ampler maintenance of the parish. Wages were supplemented from the rates, and in consequence fell so low that they ceased to yield support to the laborer. There were whole parishes in which the laborers were paid partly by their employers and partly from the rates. There were other parishes where cultivation actually ceased, because the revenue yielded by the land was not equal to the sum extracted for support of the poor. Relief was demanded as a right, and in some counties was avowedly given to all who applied. Pauperism had become hereditary. Once conceded to the applicant, the privilege was continued during life, and transmitted to his idle and debased progeny. Money thus acquired was spent freely in vicious indulgence. Tradesmen bribed the parish officers to obtain for them contracts at unjust prices. The parochial administration with fatal rapidity was corrupting the poor and consuming the substance of the rich."

I have read to you the experience of one nation which has had this problem repeatedly before it and which has given to us the inkling of the way to begin to dissipate the national wealth through channels that will degrade the people themselves. I want to say that I am wholly in sympathy with feeding the poor and the suffering, but I think that the system that you are initiating here, of asking $500,000,000, is the wrong system.

Now, I should be willing to lend the cities and States in the several sections of the country that could make a showing of necessity all they need, even if we have to cancel it later, but I am not willing to open the doors of the Treasury in this way and set up a bureau to administer a permanent dole system. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, this Nation is on fire—we are informed that over 22,000 suicides have been committed because of the depression—that over 100,000 men, women, and children have died because of malnutrition—malnutrition is the cowardly name that we use for slow starvation—call it malnutrition, but it is starvation just the same. When a condition of that kind exists I am not concerned about the method that is used to put an end to it—I am not concerned about technicalities. Let us stop this starvation. That is the mandate the people gave us last November. I am for this bill as an emergency measure because there are starving men, women, and children due to unemployment because of this depression, and this bill is intended to give immediate relief.

I am fully aware that this depression is not caused by nature, but is man made—that it is due to the fact that a few have monopolized the money of the Nation—that there is not sufficient money in circulation to do the money work—not a sufficient unit of exchange, or yardstick, with which to measure the energy of the unemployed.

I am equally aware that when Congress passes the Frazier bill and puts in circulation from two to three billion dollars of new money—when it passes the Patman bill and pays the soldiers' compensation in cash—not by issuing more tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds and plunging this Nation further in debt but by issuing new currency, the same as we did for the banks—that then there would be no further need for legislation of this kind.

It is easy for us who are still getting three square meals a day to talk about method of procedure and technicalities, but there are several million hungry men, women, and children today in this Nation—they want something to eat, and I do not care by what method you give it to them, the quicker the better. Therefore I am for this bill as an emergency measure. Something must be done, and done now, to help these hungry people.

We should realize that the wealth of this Nation consists not merely of the earth and its resources—but of people. Without men, women, and children all the resources of this great Nation would amount to absolutely nothing. There can be no wealth, in a general sense, without people. There can be no wealth except for the men, women, and children who use it. Therefore we should not destroy the wealth of this Nation by starving millions of men, women, and children and by impairing the health of millions more because of malnutrition. Such a course is blind ignorance, is national suicide, which, if carried far enough, means the destruction of this Nation.

If a foreign nation had destroyed 22,000 of our men and women, and if it were slowly starving another 100,000 of our citizens, we would all be willing to shed our lifeblood and give our property to end that calamity. Why tolerate that on our part that we would not permit another nation to do? Why not feed the hungry men, women, and children? Why not end this starvation? Let us pass this bill. The dole system is not a permanent institution in America. We will get permanent relief when we pass the Frazier and the Patman bills. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] such time as he desires.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, in the course of the hearings upon this bill it was frankly admitted that there was not available definite information as to the exact number of people in a state of destitution. The truth of that statement will be readily understood. It is easily understandable because we know it is practically impossible from the very nature of the task to obtain accurate statistics of this kind.

But, roughly speaking, we were told that there are 3½ million families which are in a state of dependency. That would mean approximately twelve or thirteen million people.

We are wandering in strange fields today. We are confronting new problems, and no man need be ashamed to say that he does not feel sure of himself.

I do not feel that I am competent to decide all these problems with mathematical exactness or that I have the last word upon them. I never felt more eager to reach out for truth in my life than I have felt at this present session of Congress. Confronted, as we are, with many dilemmas, I think we ought to face this one question pretty squarely. In solving this immediate problem shall we think only of 12,000,000 or 13,000,000 people, or must we take some thought upon our obligation to the other one hundred and seven or eight millions? If we have something in our scheme of government that is worth saving, let us save it in the name of more than one hundred millions of people.

We must do everything we can within the legitimate scope of our power to promote the general welfare of the Nation, and it is under that clause of the Constitution, and that alone, that any possible power to do what we are now asked to do can be found. Certain it is that the general welfare is not to be promoted by burdening the General Government until it breaks under the strain. In that event we shall subject 120,000,000 people to chaos and indescribable suffering.

In asking ourselves whether we should support this proposal we should not lose sight of the human tendency, the normal operation of the laws of human nature. Shall this Federal Government, of limited powers, in a time of turmoil, when there is much confusion of thought, when, as the gentleman who has just left the floor, says, the Nation is on fire, shall this Government launch forth upon a program of giving away to the people of the Nation money which it does not have to give—money which it has not yet been able to raise by taxation? With a debt of $21,000,000,000, with our daily expenses exceeding our daily revenues by millions, I submit that it is extremely dangerous to encourage the belief that anyone who is in trouble, in need, and unemployed may of right come to the Government and get something for nothing. We may take this proposed step; this day we may give the power to a new Federal bureau to give away $500,000,000 of money yet to be borrowed. If we do it we shall live to rue the day.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], who introduced the bill, tells us that we should not consider this paltry $500,000,000. He asks, "What is $500,000,000 compared with our power to give?" He says, "Why, Germany this last year gave away $1,600,000,000 in relief funds." I think I am correct as to the amount he cited. But it must be remembered that poor Germany has been under ever-increasing radical pressure; she has been on fire, not for a few months, but for years. The first demand on Germany was not for $1,600,000,000. The necessitous situation which confronted Germany has so inflamed radical thought that the masses in their need have been taught to look more and more to the government for help of every kind. This kind of political philosophy has been urged and reurged in Germany until mass demands have been made upon successive governments in Germany, not alone to preserve order, not alone to protect life and property, to encourage legitimate industry and preserve equality of opportunity for honest labor, but demand at length was made as of right that the public purse be opened by government to feed and clothe and to insure against numerous social hazards the needy and the indolent alike. Such a theory of government encourages indolence and constantly increases want and need.

The first demand in Germany was for less than $500,000,000, no doubt. But the demand grew. The natural law of human nature multiplied the demands upon government by those who aimed to get something for nothing. When the German Government of the moment undertook to withstand the ever-increasing drains upon the public treasury, its life was threatened. Election succeeded election.

In the ever-growing demands upon government in Germany radical coalitions destroyed one government after another. Each new government has found itself under the necessity of acceding to these radical demands, and what is to be the end God only knows.

Let us turn to England. She started in with old-age insurance. She started in with the policy which the gentleman from Maryland referred to as social insurance, unemployment insurance. At length England succumbed to the demand for a dole. Finally the burden was so great on the exchequer of England that she was dragged off the gold standard, and the evil consequence of that tragic event is not yet in full evidence.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. Not now. What is it that makes people hungry today? It is lack of employment. If we would reach the vitals of this situation, we must protect our industry and our labor from the products of cheap industry and cheap labor abroad. We Republicans pleaded here in this House for such action at the last session. We next desired to take action at this session of the Congress to stem the increasing tide of unemployment. We said that unless you set up a flexible tariff, which will go up as the money of other countries goes down, we said that unless you take that step you will see more unemployment and more destitution. I said then and I repeat that there are two ways out. Either you must set up this flexible tariff system and protect American labor, or you must go off the gold standard. The latter I considered to be dangerous. However that may be, we are now off the gold standard. By pursuing that course you have instilled fear in the heart of every citizen in this Nation; yes, you have instilled fear in the hearts of other nations, and no man can foretell the wide-spread evil which is bound to follow the debasement of the American dollar.

Let me raise my feeble voice in warning. I will go as far as the next man through a State government to meet any situation of need which arises within the borders of the State, but as long as I have sworn an oath to support this Federal Constitution, as long as I value the American system, I must do my part to save the Federal structure. I cannot vote to launch this Government upon a policy of giving away public money which must be borrowed at a time when we cannot meet our running expenses.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. The gentleman will please excuse me. It is said there is a saving grace in this bill; that the States are to match the money one dollar for three. But on October 1, 1933, that matching clause expires, and from then on it is a question of what State is going to get how much. Let us take, for example, the Governor of the State of Massachusetts. He has never come to the Federal Treasury and pleaded for money, but after you pass this bill his people are going to say to him, "If you want to be governor of this State, do you think that we are going to sit by and see the great State of New York go in and take $75,000,000 out of this fund while we take nothing?"

This bill had its birth in New York. They came to our committee and, through Senator WAGNER, they said that they were contributing $28 for every $100 spent in running the Federal Government. They urged the passage of this bill, undoubtedly, that they might come in for immediate relief. I said, "Have you gotten to the point where you cannot raise money in the great State of New York to feed your men and women who need food?" They would not say that they had. They finally admitted that they could raise more money, but evidently they want to come here and get back out of this $500,000,000 something to compensate them for the 28 percent which they have contributed to the past cost of Federal Government. Seven States can take every cent of this $500,000,000 relief fund, and the pressure from the wealthy States, with their big cities and their millions of unemployed, will be extreme. I undertake to say that there will be numerous charges and counter charges of gross partiality and favoritism if we launch out upon this program.

I know it is no use for me to talk. I have almost lost the courage to rise here and discuss bills; but yet in the last moment, even as I said to the gentleman from Massachusetts, "I do not know whether I should try to speak or not", something urged me to rise and say what I have said. I have helped make the record. I have given you my thought as it is given me to think. I may be wrong and you of the majority may be right, but I am afraid we are going on a way which will mean a complete disruption of our entire Federal system of government.

I understand that an influential adviser of the President recently said, "I think the people voted for 'the left' at the last election, and they are going to get 'the left'"; and we are getting it. God save the people of the United States from the dangers that I see confronting us in the future. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] has expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I shall not make answer to the charge of my good friend from Massachusetts, that those responsible for this legislation are attempting to deceive the public. That is rather a harsh charge. I shall content myself by saying that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is permitted to issue its own obligations to obtain money, and there is left over in the Corporation now fifty or sixty million dollars of funds. No one knows that it will be necessary to use the entire amount of $500,000,000 provided in this bill; and, of course, with the financing program that confronts the Treasury, it is desirable that we make the best showing we can. We do not desire to show an item of one half billion dollars when it is not known that such an amount will be required.

The suggestion has been made that this measure is a form of socialism. I do not know who there is left in this House that is in a position to complain about that. I know I am not. I know the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] is not. He and I have been joint sinners during the former administration in passing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act and other legislation of similar type. I think the gentleman will agree with me that he and I, at least, are estopped from complaining about anything socialistic in this legislation. There are abundant precedents to support this policy of having the Government supply aid, to supply food and clothing and shelter to relieve citizens in distress. We have done it for people in foreign lands; we have done it in various instances for our own citizens at home. That is all we are doing now. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Congress hereby declares that the present economic depression has created a serious emergency, due to wide-spread unemployment and increasing inadequacy of State and local relief funds, resulting in the existing or threatened deprivation of a considerable number of families and individuals of the necessities of life, and making it imperative that the Federal Government cooperate more effectively with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in furnishing relief to their needy and distressed people.

SEC. 2. (a) The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to make available out of the funds of the Corporation not to exceed $500,000,000, in addition to the funds authorized under title I of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, for expenditure under the provisions of this act upon certification by the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator provided for in section 3.

(b) The amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered under section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, to have outstanding at any one time is increased by $500,000,000: Provided, That no such additional notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations authorized by this subsection shall be issued except at such times and in such amounts as the President shall approve.

(c) After the expiration of 10 days after the date upon which the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator has qualified and has taken office, no application shall be approved by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the provisions of title I of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, and the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator shall have access to all files and records of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation relating to the administration of funds under title I of such act. At the expiration of such 10-day period, the unexpended and unobligated balance of the funds authorized under title I of such act shall be available for the purposes of this act.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOLLISTER: On page 2, line 12, strike out the period and add the following: "And all funds so made available shall be subject to the terms of paragraph (b), section 1 of title I of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the corporation to deny an otherwise acceptable application under this act because of constitutional or other inhibitions, or because the State or Territory has borrowed to the full extent authorized by law."

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, the last part of this amendment is identical in wording with language found in paragraph (b), section 1, title I, of the Emergency Relief Act of 1932, which the first part of the amendment specifically incorporates in this bill. This language is inserted so that no State, no matter what its financial condition is, no matter what its constitutional inhibitions are, whether it may or may not have reached the limit of its borrowing power, may still, under this provision, borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for relief purposes.

The sole purpose of this amendment is not to change by one jot or one tittle the form of organization which has been set up in this present bill. It still leaves the discretion in the President; it still leaves discretion in the relief administrator; it still leaves the amount of the fund the same; it still divides the fund into two parts, one which will be permitted to be drawn on for matching purposes and the other for general purposes. All it does is to remove the provision for making a direct grant the giving away of the money of the Federal Government for relief purposes. It simply keeps what I am sure, on sober, second thought we shall all agree ought to be kept. It keeps the Government from going into the direct-relief business. It obligates the States to repay the money when and if they can, no matter how far deferred in the future the repayment may be.

I say if we do not put in this amendment or if we adopt the bill in its present form, we are embarking on the dole system which has brought other countries of this world into the condition they are in today, a system which we shall never be able to stop and which will get worse and worse until the half billion dollars which we are talking about today has reached many billions.

The acceptance of this amendment changes nothing. It makes the money just as much available for relief, but it says that the Government expects the States will pay it back in the future.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Are not the banks and the railroads on the dole system now?

Mr. HOLLISTER. The banks and the railroads have borrowed money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. They borrowed the money, and I am asking that the States do the same thing. If that is a dole, then the State would be on the dole system.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is the gentleman so optimistic as to think that these institutions will pay this money back at any time?

Mr. HOLLISTER. If the present system of legislation is carried to its logical conclusion, most decidedly not.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If the gentleman will permit a further question, it has come from my district that Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or R.F.C., means "releaf for capitalists." Does the gentleman believe in that and not in relief for the poor people?

Mr. HOLLISTER. No; it is relief for everybody if its original purpose had been properly carried out.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. But it has not been followed out in that way.

Mr. HOLLISTER. It has been followed as closely, I think, as the members of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Board could do under the circumstances. I have great respect for the members of the board. I think they are doing the best job they can under the circumstances. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio would tear the heart out of this bill. The effect of the amendment is merely to add $500,000,000 to the funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to be lent to the States under the terms of the Emergency Act of 1932. It is simply an abandonment of the purpose and the philosophy of this bill and a return to the loan system embodied in the Relief Act of 1932.

It has been demonstrated that the relief under that act did not, and could not, meet the necessities of the situation, and the plain fact is that it is ridiculous, if we wish to do so, to attempt to return to the loan system in the case of States and municipalities that have gone the limit of their power to tax, and this is the general rule in this country. States, counties, and municipalities now find themselves helpless in any effort to raise additional funds by taxation. Under the admission of the gentleman, and under the very terms of the amendment itself, States would be relieved from all constitutional limitations in contracting for loans. They would be authorized to borrow in excess of the authority of the constitutional powers of the States. Of course, under such conditions, no legal contract of repayment could be made. All thought of legal contracts is a mere fiction.

The amendment would destroy this bill, and if the committee desires to do that they should vote for it. If not, the amendment should be voted down.

I may say to the membership of the committee that for one I followed the leadership of the President of the United States in 1932 in passing relief legislation. The act of 1932 was an administration measure, having the approval of the President of the United States at that time. The bill now before the House is a bill sponsored and supported by the present administration, and is approved by the present occupant of the White House. It is his method of dealing with the problem of relief. The plan is to set up an administration with the right to go into the States and communities and find out the requirements and then brush aside obstacles that stand in the way of efforts to feed the hungry and clothe the naked and furnish shelter for helpless women and children in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, the good will entertained by myself toward the chairman of the committee, and I am proud to hope by himself toward me, may insure that a comment on his remarks is meant in no discourteous or unfriendly manner. I wish to remind him that through centuries it has been deemed contrary to good parliamentary procedure to instruct a legislative body as to the wishes of a Chief Executive. The precedents are numerous and clear. We may as well frankly recognize the fact that the Congress of the United States has in truth abdicated its responsibilities, yet I beg gentlemen on the other side not to add to the humiliation of the Congress by needless use on the floor of orders that come from the other end of the Avenue.

Now, sir, I should like to say that I did not introduce the subject of socialism into the debate. I had not used the word until some gentleman on the other side by questioning me put me in an awkward position of answering.

When it came to my friend from Massachusetts I told him frankly—because I could afford to—that I did not mean to answer his question. I desired to keep such extraneous topics outside of the discussion.

Here is the straight, clear issue whether you want to give or you want to lend. My friend, the chairman of the committee, exaggerates when he says that this amendment will take the vital part out of the bill. It will still leave all of the obnoxious provisions that I have called attention to, I have no doubt. Now, the question is whether you want to be a giver or a lender, and on that you will either vote up or vote down this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have been somewhat amused at some of the arguments presented this afternoon by the opposition to this bill. My distinguished friend from Massachusetts, Mr. LUCE, for whom I have a very high regard, becomes very sensitive lately when mention is made of the fact that the administration favors a measure.

All the Members of the previous Congress know that when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill was passed in 1932 we were told, not only by message, but in argument on the floor of this House, that the President of the United States, at that time Mr. Hoover, was very anxious to see that bill passed and felt that it should be passed in order to relieve a serious situation.

I heard no such speech made then as the gentleman from Massachusetts has just made, although he was a Member of the House and participated, as I recollect, in that debate.

The gentleman has referred to the fact, as have other speakers in opposition to the bill, that it is a contribution, a gift by the people to the States of this Nation, and yet the gentleman's own party passed bills appropriating millions of dollars for the citizens of foreign countries as a gift, and for no other purpose. [Applause.]

(H. R. 4606) I can see an abundance of reason for supporting this bill when Congress, for the relief of Russia and the relief of those who were living in Belgium, because it was told they were starving, appropriated millions of dollars for their relief. Then why, if in the judgment of the President, relief should be afforded to our own people, suffering women and children, should we not appropriate this money to the various States? It will not do now to say that this is a dole or a contribution which is being made for the relief of suffering for the people of our country, when Congress has granted that relief for the people of foreign countries.

I hope this bill will pass just as it has been reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency. I do not want to offend my friend from Massachusetts, Mr. LUCE, but I think it is generally understood that the administration favors this bill as it is written and believes that it is necessary under the circumstances. It is discretionary with the President. If he feels that all this amount is not needed, he does not have to use it; but, in God's name, if it is needed to relieve starving children and suffering women, let us vote for it. I am sure that it will meet the approval of the people and the taxpayers of the country when we do it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LUCE) there were—ayes 61, noes 180.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The reason I ask recognition at this time is to call attention to a resolution which I introduced on April 3, House Resolution 91, relative to the jurisdiction of the Senate in passing the so-called "Wagner bill." That is a matter of record on page 1132 and page 1133 of the RECORD. I shall not refer to it further. On the following day a long colloquy was had covering several pages of the RECORD, and eventually the so-called "Treadway resolution" was referred by the Speaker to the Committee on the Judiciary. That was on the 4th of April. It was referred to that committee for their consideration of the question involved in the original resolution, and that is as to whether or not such a bill should have come to the House from the Senate or whether the House should not return the bill to the Senate without action. In the meantime the so-called "Lewis bill", identical with the Wagner bill, was introduced, so that the House then naturally had proper consideration of the subject. On April 6 there was still further colloquy on the floor in reference to this subject matter, and on page 1354 of the RECORD the majority leader made the following statement:

I think the House should dispose of the Treadway resolution before we consider either the Senate or House bill.

Mr. Chairman, I have relied upon that statement of the majority leader and have believed that this measure would not come up until such time as the Committee on the Judiciary saw fit to decide the question involved in the original resolution. I do not question the fact that this bill now before us is properly here. Of course, it is. Nevertheless, a constitutional question was presented by my resolution, a question which many Members of the House thought to be very serious. I understand, further, that immediately the Committee on the Judiciary appointed a subcommittee to consider the question, and I understand, indirectly, not officially, that that subcommittee reported its findings to the full Committee on the Judiciary. The question I propound now is, Why was this bill brought up before the committee reported its findings to the House, and what becomes of the statement of the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] that he thought that before either bill should be considered the House should have that report from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take the time of the committee unnecessarily, but in view of the remarks of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] I may say that my remarks with reference to the House bill, quoted by him, perhaps should be classed as surplusage.

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, nothing coming from the gentleman would be so regarded.

Mr. BYRNS. It was unnecessary for me to refer to the House bill, because, of course, the gentleman's objection to the consideration of the Senate bill did not carry with it an objection to the House bill. I felt at the time that it might be possible to dispose of the question raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts in ample time to have the Senate bill quickly considered, passed, and made a law, because I think all will agree that if this is what we intend it to be, a relief measure, it is important that it should become a law as quickly as possible.

There can be no objection to passing the House bill and sending it over to the Senate and permitting the Senate, if it chooses, to pass the House bill, and then to lay the Senate bill, now on the Speaker's desk, on the table. When it appeared that owing to a tremendous amount of business before the Committee on the Judiciary there was going to be some delay in the consideration and report of the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], who is Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, took up this bill, as I think he was justified in doing. It is now before the House, and as the gentleman from Massachusetts says, it is properly before the House.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOEPPEL: Page 2, line 7, after the word "exceed", strike out "$500,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$750,000,000"; and on page 2, beginning in line 17, strike out "$500,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$750,000,000."

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill, and I favor this amendment because I am of opinion that the bill is not far-reaching enough. Five hundred million dollars under the circumstances is insufficient, and I hope that you gentlemen will support this amendment to increase the amount to $750,000,000.

In the early days of this session we were told the House was on fire and that we must act. What did we do? We voted to take $500,000,000 away from the veterans and Federal employees, but today when the American Nation is prostrate, when the blood is flowing from its veins, we are here discussing the question, and you gentlemen are ridiculing the fact that I am trying to bring more money to the impoverished American citizen. I contend that that is just exactly what is wrong with our country today. Members of the Congress today are not considerate enough of the plight of the American Nation. As I mentioned a moment ago, the people of this Nation are lying prostrate. The blood is flowing from their veins, and what do we do? We sit and quibble whether or not we are going to apply a tourniquet or whether we will sew up the wound and let the blood flow freely again. I say we have been derelict in our duty in the past, and we are derelict now when we try to hold down this appropriation to only $500,000,000. It is insufficient. Our friends on the Republican side are opposing this bill because they claim it is a dole. There is no greater dole than the dole the American Nation is giving today in the high interest rates they are paying on Government tax-exempt bonds.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Does not the gentleman think it would be better if we increased this to $500,000,000,000 instead of $500,000,000?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Seven hundred and fifty million is my amendment.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. But if we increase it to $500,000,000,000, does not the gentleman think that would be better? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOEPPEL. Answering the ridiculous question of the gentleman, I fear he is speaking in German currency. We are giving the bondholders of the 4½-percent Liberty loans an annual interest subsidy of $270,000,000. I say if we wish to do something for our people, let us recall those bonds and pay them in currency. Then we will at least save $270,000,000 a year in interest which could be applied to this expenditure for relief purposes.

I should like to call attention to the fact that there is one weakness in this bill, and that is that it provides for the issuance of 4-percent bonds. The American Nation today has over $1,000,000,000 in postal deposits, which billion dollars or more is turned over to the American bankers at 2½ percent. Under this bill the bankers can relend this Postal Savings deposit of one billion to the Government in 4-percent bonds. In other words, you are giving the bankers in this bill $15,000,000. I contend that the right of the American people to be properly taken care of in their distress is paramount to that of the American banker. If we can pass legislation to take from the veterans and Federal employees that which is properly due them, I say that we at the same time can take from the bankers the exorbitant interest rates which we are paying on bonds. At the same time we should enact legislation which will prevent further issuance of tax-exempt securities.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, would it be in order to move to adjourn until such time as the Membership are willing to extend the proper courtesy to a Member of the House while he is addressing the Committee? If so, I should like to make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not recognized for that purpose.

Mr. HOEPPEL. It is pleasing to me, in a sense, and I hope this will be properly recorded in the RECORD, in order that the people throughout the highways and byways of America, the people who are suffering, may know just exactly how this Congress is reacting to a proposition to bring to them the necessary relief which they require and which they should have, and which is not covered in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL] has expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) There is hereby created a Federal Emergency Relief Administration, all the powers of which shall be exercised by a Federal Emergency Relief Administrator (referred to in this act as the "Administrator") to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Administrator shall receive a salary, to be fixed by the President, and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses within the limitations prescribed by law for civilian employees in the executive branch of the Government. The Federal Emergency Relief Administration and the office of Federal Emergency Relief Administrator shall cease to exist upon the expiration of 2 years after the date of enactment of this act, and the unexpended balance on such date of any funds made available under the provisions of this act shall be disposed of as the Congress may by law provide.

(b) The Administrator may appoint and fix the compensation of such experts, and, subject to the provisions of the Civil Service laws, appoint, and in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, fix the compensation of such other officers and employees as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act; and may make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services and rent at the seat of government and elsewhere and for printing and binding), not to exceed $350,000, as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, to be paid by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation out of funds made available by this act upon presentation of vouchers approved by the Administrator or by an officer of the Administration designated by him for that purpose.

(c) In executing any of the provisions of this act the Administrator, and any person duly authorized or designated by him, may conduct any investigation pertinent or material to the furtherance of the purposes of this act, and at the request of the President shall make such further investigations and studies as the President may deem necessary in dealing with problems of unemployment relief.

(d) The Administrator shall print monthly, and shall submit to the President and to the Senate and the House of Representatives (or to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, if those bodies are not in session), a report of his activities and expenditures under this act. Such reports shall, when submitted, be printed as public documents.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FULLER: Page 4, line 2, after the word "and", strike out the words "subject to the provisions of the Civil Service laws, appoint, and, in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended,".

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, you can always tell when those materially interested in civil service and those who want to hold the jobs themselves have placed language in a particular bill. To my amazement and surprise, in a case where it provides for a dole or a charity to help the unemployed, the Civil Service employees have inserted a clause here providing that this law shall be administered by them.

I noticed in the press that the administration says it will dispose of 30,000 of them who have now been in the Service 30 years or more, and will retire them in order to give labor to others. The amendment I have offered does not affect the passage of this bill in any shape or form. It does not go to the heart of any part of the language that is really a part of the bill. Not only that but if we stop to think about it for a moment, this is a bill for the relief of the distressed people of this country. If there is going to be some relief aside from a dole and a gift to people, let us place some people in charge who are out of employment and let them labor under this law.

We all know that in the administration of the emergency law that was passed some time ago it was not a question of politics, and it is not going to be a question of politics here, but in every State where it is more or less controlled by State originations, we have charitable organizations and private citizens who do this work without pay. We have county and State units, and hire a few to look after the funds, generally keeping books, and these employees are paid small salaries. Under the terms and provisions of this bill, we would have to call in the Civil Service to administer this law back in our county, back in our towns in the State from which we come. The Civil Service employees draw substantial salaries. A measure for the relief of the poor and needy—charity—a dole—is certainly one ideal case when the Civil Service should not apply.

This language should be eliminated. There is no reason why it should be retained in the bill and the Civil Service employees be allowed to administer the law. There are plenty of people out of employment who can do this work just as well as those who are under Civil Service. The language of the bill states:

Fix the compensation of such other officers and employees as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this law.

That does not mean here in the Washington office but all out in the States where this money is going to be distributed to feed the hungry and clothe the destitute. Leave it as it has been in the past. Let this law be administered as are the other laws of the country.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman's amendment would in no way prevent the employment of a person who happened to be in the Civil Service if the administration wanted to employ him?

Mr. FULLER. Certainly not.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. This makes it optional.

Mr. FULLER. It leaves it to the Administrator.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. It leaves it optional with the Administrator, just as was done in the case of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act.

Mr. FULLER. That is it exactly. This has been the history of all these bills. The way it is now provided in the bill out in the field, in the little hamlets, or out on the public roads, no officials can draw compensation unless they are taken from the Civil Service list. [Applause.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The purpose of inserting the Civil Service provision in this bill was in order that the bill might not bear any political complexion whatever. The number of employees involved is very trivial. The fund is very limited.

Mr. FULLER. How much does it amount to? Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. If this provision had not been placed in the bill, the charge would have been made that it was an administration measure to be used for political purposes in the various States. This is the reason the provision was included in this humanitarian bill. We thoroughly understand it. It was discussed with the administration and we hope the amendment will not be supported.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. ALLGOOD. The Civil Service provision was not included in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. The employees administering that law were not put under civil service.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That was a business proposition, not a humanitarian one.

Mr. ALLGOOD. They have filled up the Civil Service lists. No more Civil Service examinations will be held, and the people on the outside who need jobs have not a chance in the world of getting them. [Applause.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I will say to the gentleman that I hope he is no more sympathetic toward getting positions for our people than I am.

I may say to him that this provision was inserted in this bill deliberately in order that the country might know it was a humanitarian and not a political measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEEDY: Page 3, line 15, after the word "salary", strike out the words "to be fixed by the President" and insert "not to exceed $8,500."

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take the time of the Committee to make a speech on the proposed amendment. It speaks for itself. It involves a question which I raised in committee. I then stated I could not conceive it possible that any man big enough to administer this relief fund would think of asking the country to pay him more than the Members of Congress themselves receive.

I may add that I think perhaps it would also look better to the country if we were to put a limitation upon the salary to be paid the Federal administrator rather than to leave ourselves open to the charge of empowering the President to do as he pleased with this particular bill in the way of salary.

I offer the amendment and hope it will be incorporated in the bill in the interest of common sense and prudence.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. I think the gentleman is absolutely correct. In fact, in an emergency like this somebody ought to do this relief work for $1 a year.

Mr. BEEDY. It may be difficult to find anybody who could give his entire time without compensation. I think we ought to get a big, broad-gaged humanitarian who would not ask us more than $8,500 a year. I do not think we should leave the burden on the President and leave the door wide open for the exercise of pressure on the Chief Executive, to the end that somebody be given this job at a high salary.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. Certainly.

Mr. STEAGALL. May I ask the gentleman if he does not think, in the light of present developments, we might trust the Chief Executive to limit these salaries to proper amounts?

Mr. BEEDY. I will trust him; but if the gentleman from Alabama were in the President's place, I think he would welcome this particular amendment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Would the salary of $8,500 a year be subject to the 15-percent cut?

Mr. BEEDY. No; because this is a special salary provided for after the passage of the Economy Act. I do not think it would be affected by the Economy Act at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BEEDY) there were—ayes 135, noes 64.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FULLER: On page 4, line 4, strike out the words "fix the compensation of."

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, several of the Members have called my attention to the fact that since the adoption of the amendment I offered a moment ago, these words are superfluous, inasmuch as they occur in line 1, and, therefore, the four words "fix the compensation of" should be stricken out. I have examined the text, and I think this should be done.

This is a perfecting amendment and simply makes the language absolutely clear.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. (a) Out of the funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation made available by this act, the Administrator is authorized to make grants to the several States, to aid in meeting the costs of furnishing relief and work relief in the form of money, service, materials, and/or commodities to provide the necessities of life to persons in need as a result of the present emergency, and/or to their dependents, whether residents, transient, or homeless.

(b) Of the amounts made available by this act not to exceed $200,000,000 shall be granted to the several States applying therefor, in the following manner: Each State shall be entitled to receive grants equal to one third of the amount expended by such State, including the civil subdivisions thereof, out of public moneys from all sources for the purposes set forth in subsection (a) of this section; and such grants shall be made quarterly, beginning with the second quarter in the calendar year 1933, and shall be made during any quarter upon the basis of such expenditures certified by the States to have been made during the preceding quarter.

(c) The balance of the amounts made available by this act, except the amount required for administrative expenditures under section 3, shall be used for grants to be made whenever, from an application presented by a State, the Administrator finds that the combined moneys which can be made available within the State from all sources, supplemented by any moneys, available under subsection (b) of this section, will fall below the estimated needs within the State for the purposes specified in subsection (a) of this section: Provided, That the Administrator may certify out of the funds made available by this subsection additional grants to States applying therefor to aid needy persons who have no legal settlement in any one State or community, and to aid in assisting cooperative and self-help associations for the barter of goods and services.

(d) After October 1, 1933, notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (b), the unexpended balance of the amounts available for the purposes of subsection (b) may, in the discretion of the Administrator and with the approval of the President, be available for grants under subsection (c).

(e) The decision of the Administrator as to the purpose of any expenditure shall be final.

(f) The amount available to any one State under subsections (b) and (c) of this section shall not exceed 15 percent of the total amount made available by such subsections.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 5, line 8, after the word "relief", insert the words "and in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, this is merely a perfecting amendment to make the language conform with the title, and I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In connection with the amendment, as I recall, the existing law carries the words "furnishing relief and work relief and in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment." Is it the intent and purpose of subsection (a) of section 4 to continue the work that has been carried on under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in relieving distress?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is the purpose; yes.

The amendment was agreed to.

With the following further committee amendment:

Page 5, line 15, strike out "$200,000,000" and insert "$250,000,000."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, this is a committee amendment which I explained in my statement to the committee and which I hope will be adopted. I think there is no difference of opinion in the committee about it and I hope there will be no controversy over the proposed amendment.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment.

I am somewhat surprised that the chairman states that in his remarks to the committee he explained this amendment. I listened attentively to the remarks of the chairman in explanation of the bill and asked the chairman to explain to the committee why this amount had been increased from $200,000,000 to $250,000,000. He did not answer my inquiry with regard to the reason of the committee for increasing the amount and I have since carefully examined the full transcript of his statement made to the committee and find no reference thereto made therein.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. May I answer the inquiry of the gentleman?

Mr. TARVER. In just a moment.

This is the portion of the bill dealing with the proportions in which the $500,000,000 shall be used. The first proportion affected here was contained in the Senate bill as $200,000,000 and set out in the House bill when it was introduced as $200,000,000, being the part of the $500,000,000 which is used in matching expenditures made by the States, and leaving a balance of $300,000,000 to be distributed on the basis of need, without regard to what amount may have been expended by the States.

Now, it is proposed by the committee to increase the first-mentioned fund to $250,000,000 and thereby take away from the second fund, which is to be distributed on the basis of need, $50,000,000, leaving the second fund only $250,000,000. Most of the States of the Union, and if I have been correctly informed, 40 of them, are prohibited by their constitutions from making appropriations from public funds for relief purposes. Therefore, only eight of the States, including, I think, Illinois, New York, Michigan, and Pennsylvania, could participate in the first portion of this fund, and it does seem to me that until some reason is advanced by the committee why the amount of $200,000,000 for the benefit of these few States should be advanced to $250,000,000, we ought to be willing to retain in the bill the $300,000,000 for the benefit of the States that are deprived of participating in the first fund.

In these 40 States most of the relief work has been done by charitable organizations and by private contributions. This cannot be considered in the apportionment of the amount carried under subsection (b) of section 4. Only the amounts that have been expended from public funds by the States, which, of course, include any subdivision of the States, can be included.

In my State, and I suspect the same condition exists in many States, while the State is prohibited by the Constitution from making any appropriation for relief, some appropriations are made by counties and by municipalities, but these pale into insignificance compared with the amount of expenditures that are made by charitable organizations and which arise from private contributions.

Now, why should we provide, as I have said, to sum up $250,000,000 for 8 States of the Union and only $250,000,000 for the other 40 States? Why not reject the committee amendment and leave the $200,000,000 as provided in the Senate bill and as provided in the bill of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], upon its original introduction, for the 8 States and let the other 40 States have three fifths of the fund?

I yield now to the gentleman from Maryland who stated he is in position to explain the matter, and I hope that now some member of the committee, either the gentleman from Maryland or someone else, will be willing to tell us why the committee thought it necessary to raise the first amount to $250,000,000 and deprive the second fund of $50,000,000.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The situation is this. It may be improper for me to make the statement, but an amendment was offered to fix the amount at $350,000,000, and there was a good deal of sentiment for it. The Member making that motion changed it to $300,000,000, and it was obvious that it would carry, and so a substitute was moved and the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. TARVER. Then those of you who did not want any change would be better satisfied to leave it as it was originally introduced.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I have said all I want to, and perhaps I have said more than I ought to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LUCE) there were 142 ayes and 49 noes.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. STEAGALL and Mr. TARVER as tellers.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were 183 ayes and 44 noes.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 24, after the word "shall", strike out the remainder of section 4 and insert "be in proportion to the population of each State."

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, this is a sympathetic amendment. I am in favor of the bill. Let me explain the effect of the amendment. Examine the printed copy of the bill. Section 4 provides for the amount available. In subsection (f) it is provided that the amount available to any one State shall not exceed 15 percent of the total amount made available by such section.

The amendment I propose would distribute it according to the population of each State. Mr. Chairman, there is distress in every State in the Union. There is not an exception in a single county in the entire Nation, and unless this bill is amended there is no direction to the administrator as to how this $500,000,000 is to be distributed.

Let me call your attention to the fact that under paragraph (f) it provides that not more than 15 percent shall go to any one State.

Now, 15 percent of $500,000,000 is $75,000,000. Seven times $75,000,000 will amount to $525,000,000 and will more than exhaust the $500,000,000.

So it is possible under the terms of subsection (f), if not amended, for all this money to go to not more than seven States of the Union.

Let us grant relief to every State. This distribution is made upon the application of the Governors of the several States and supervised by the State relief committee or officer under the general supervision of the Governor of the State.

If anyone from your own State writes you and asks whether we passed a relief bill in Congress, you would reply that we did; that we provided for a distribution of $500,000,000. You will then be asked how the citizens of each State are going to know the amount any State will receive. There is distress in every county and State in the Union, and I would not vote to withhold relief; but I do not see how any Member of Congress on either side of the aisle, when he or she knows there is distress in each State in the Union, can afford to vote against an amendment that would insure an equitable and fair distribution of this money to the several States in proportion to the population of each State. I sincerely hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for better order in the Chamber so that I may lay before the committee the most remarkable examples of altruism on the part of Members of Congress that have ever come to my attention. The gentleman whose name this bill ordinarily carries comes from the State of New York. His altruism consisted in presenting to the committee an argument for a bill whereby, as he said, his State would give $28 and get back $15. Nevertheless, such was his great interest in the rest of the country, that his benevolence showed itself to be unbounded benevolence. He committed himself to a bill whereby his State gives $28 and gets back $15.

Now comes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] with an amendment. His State, as the bill stands, will get more money than under his proposal. He asks us to amend the bill so that Oklahoma may receive less of the bounty of the Nation than it otherwise would. I think, Mr. Chairman, we ought to gratify both of these gentlemen; but, unfortunately, in order to do so we would have contradictory provisions, and much as I regard my friend from Oklahoma, I fear the bounty and generosity of the gentleman from New York is in dollars so much larger that I shall have to stand for his gift to the Nation.

Mr. LOZIER, Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma, and Mr. MOTT rose.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, in order to gratify the wishes of the gentlemen who rise to interrogate me, I shall split myself into three parts and yield to all three, but first to my friend from Missouri, whose name stands next to mine on the roll. I follow him on the roll, but I too rarely am able to follow his judgment.

Mr. LOZIER. The gentleman is very gracious in yielding to me, for which I am grateful. Apropos of the claim that New York contributes 28 percent of the revenues of the Nation, I rise to say that there never was a greater fallacy presented to or accepted by the American people. New York does nothing of the kind. New York is the clearing house through which a substantial part of the wealth of 47 other States is reported to the Federal Government for taxation. Many railroad companies operating in other States, great industrial concerns whose plants are in other States, and corporations and individuals conducting extensive business activities from coast to coast are legally domiciled in New York, but much of their wealth is created in other States, and a lion's share of the taxes New York pays are contributions gathered from over all the Nation. I am getting tired of New York and Pennsylvania making a claim that is false in theory and false in fact. Much of the wealth of other States is, for the purposes of taxation, cleared through the States of New York and Pennsylvania because the corporate or individual owners and earners of such wealth are domiciled in the Empire and Keystone States. Where do the great New York and Pennsylvania insurance companies get the enormous assets on which they pay taxes? From 48 States.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOZIER. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentleman dispute the number of people we have there, too?

Mr. LOZIER. Oh, no; but I assert that a large part of the taxes paid by New York come from properties in other States and from new wealth created in other States.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Oklahoma would work an abortion of the whole purpose of this bill. This bill is not designed as a measure to raise funds to distribute as subsidies or dividends to the respective States. This is a relief measure, with competent administrative superintendence to study and ascertain the need of relief in the respective States, and to assign the relief money accordingly. The amendment of the gentleman, without unfavorably characterizing it, would distribute this relief money as if it were a dividend fund, which it is not.

Mr. HASTINGS. But you place a limitation of 15 percent; and if you can place a limitation of 15 percent that shall go to a State, why could you not put on a limitation which will provide that the money shall be distributed in proportion to the population of the several States?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Some people so fear a new idea that they are afraid to brush down the cobwebs lest the ceiling may fall, and the limitation of 15 percent upon the amount that might be distributed to a particular State is to allay apprehensions in that direction.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. If it is good to put a 15 percent limit upon it, why would it not be good to assure every State of getting some of it?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. We assure them according to their needs.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Are they not all in need?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. This is not a dividend fund, it is not a subsidy that can be distributed upon the basis of population.

Mr. HASTINGS. Why place the limitation of 15 percent?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. To prevent possible abuse of the fund on the part of some States.

Mr. HASTINGS. Then, to prevent further abuse, I offer my amendment.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I take it under the provisions of this bill it is mathematically possible for some seven States to get the entire amount available under the bill. Can the gentleman inform us what assurance any particular State, such as the State of Oklahoma or my own State, the State of Oregon, would have under the circumstances of getting anything under this bill?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. The gentleman tempts me to repeat a classic rebuke: "O, thou of little faith." When the time comes that the administrators of the laws of my country cannot be trusted with a fund as sacred as this, let us tear down the American flag and forget we are Americans. [Applause.]

Mr. MOTT. May I inquire if that is the best answer the gentleman can give?

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. McKEOWN. I have an amendment to offer to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HASTINGS) there were—ayes 70, noes 150.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Those who favor taking this vote by tellers will stand and remain standing until counted. [After counting.] Four Members have risen; not a sufficient number. Tellers are refused.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKEOWN: Page 5, line 7, after the word "States", insert "and to the Secretary of the Interior not to exceed $10,000,000 for aid of Indians with which to make per capita payments all reimbursable from tribal property upon such terms agreed upon by and between the tribal authorities and the Secretary."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane. The amendment requires the money to be given to the Secretary of the Interior instead of to the States under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. McKEOWN. It is by the director of the relief fund.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BULWINKLE). The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McGUGIN: On page 5, line 14, strike out lines 14 to 25, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. McGUGIN. I am unless it is straightened up in better shape than it is now.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman is not opposed to the bill he is not entitled to recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment read?

By unanimous consent, the Clerk again reported the amendment offered by Mr. McGUGIN.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. Any State desiring to obtain funds under this act shall through its Governor make application therefor from time to time to the Administrator. Each application so made shall present in the manner requested by the Administrator information showing (1) the amounts necessary to meet relief needs in the State during the period covered by such application and the amounts available from public or private sources within the State, its political subdivisions, and private agencies, to meet the relief needs of the State, (2) the provision made to assure adequate administrative supervision, (3) the provision made for suitable standards of relief, and (4) the purposes for which the funds requested will be used.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] became so hasty in the consideration of the bill a moment ago; that the Membership of this House should be shut off from offering reasonable and fair amendments to the bill. This is the point I should like to bring before the House: Here is a bill, the purpose of which is for the relief of the people of this country, predicated upon the theory that the States themselves are now so insolvent that they cannot take care of their own, yet there is a provision in the bill which does violence to that theory and to that principle, and that provision is that one half the funds provided by this bill cannot be used unless the States will match one third of it.

This damnable program that has grown up in this country of so-called "Federal aid", to be matched by the States, has led directly to the impoverishment of the States themselves. You are telling 48 States they can have $250,000,000 provided they will further increase the tax burdens upon their homes and their farms by matching one third of it; telling the bankrupt States that is what they must do in order to obtain the benefits under section 4, subsection (b).

If, indeed, this be a bill for relief because the States are unable to care for their own, then there should not be in this bill this one third matching provision, and it should be stricken from the bill. That is the question which I should have liked to have placed before this House fairly and squarely upon its merits, but I was denied any opportunity to offer an amendment to strike out that provision by the hasty motion of the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. STEAGALL, chairman of the committee.

Now, this House is either a legislative body or it is not a legislative body; and if we are going to consider amendments, let us consider them; and if not, then let us not profess to consider them. Bring all your bills in here with a gag rule denying the right of amendment, or bring them in under the general rules and let us consider them on the floor of this House. I believe 435 Members of this House are capable of passing upon these amendments without being shut off and denied the opportunity to offer amendments which go to the important parts of a bill.

I would have no exception to the House of Representatives refusing to go along on an amendment that I offered. That is the judgment of the House to exercise itself, but I do criticize the effort being made and the program being carried out to shut off reasonable and fair amendments. It is hypocrisy to bring bills in under the general rules of the House and then be shut off from an opportunity to offer amendments.

I submit to you that it is at least a question worthy of the consideration of this House as to whether or not it is wise in a relief bill to say to the 48 States, most of whom are unable to balance their budgets, that in order for them to participate in one half of the benefits of this bill they must match it with increased tax burdens upon their own people. However, it is a question on which the House gave no consideration because of the motion of the chairman of the committee.

I yield back the balance of my time.

the pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I regret as much as anyone in this body that our country is in a condition requiring legislation of this character; and I am supporting this bill because it is now a necessity. I am very much surprised at the attitude of our friends on the right who held the reins of power for 12 years. They came into power when the country was in a prosperous condition; they went out of power with the country in the midst of this depression, yet we see them vote almost in a body sometimes to refuse to give this relief to the people of the country who are now in distress. But this is not my purpose in getting this time.

This bill ought to be carefully administered. If it is, then we shall have set a noble precedent that will be followed hereafter.

As I interpret this bill, when the grants of money are made to the States, the States have the absolute right to use it for the purpose of relieving distress through providing employment. I desire to ask the author of the bill, who sits by my side, whether I am correct in my conclusion on this one point. We, in my State, are taking the turn-back we get from the tax on gasoline and building the lateral post roads that lead into the great highways that have been built by the State and National Governments, over which the United States mail is carried. They are, in the sense of the Constitution, post roads. I want to know of the chairman, and I ask him this question that the RECORD may show his interpretation: Have the States the authority to use the funds that may be given them under this bill in connection with State and county funds in giving labor to those in the community in the building of these post roads?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I ought to say to the House that not being the actual author of the bill I cannot have the fullest confidence in my interpretation of it, but in my judgment the words "work relief" carry the authority or opportunity as to which the gentleman has addressed his question.

Mr. GLOVER. I am very glad to get this information; and I wanted it in the RECORD in order that our people in administering this fund may know they can use it in this way. Money used in this way is not wasted. We all know that much money has been wasted. When it is administered in this manner, you get a dollar's worth of road construction for every dollar given for relief.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment. I shall only consume a few minutes, because I know the House wants to vote on this bill. I am in favor of this measure and shall vote for it. We cannot permit American citizens to suffer and starve in the midst of plenty. We all deplore the extraordinary conditions that make this bill necessary. We have in the past appropriated various sums to relieve the victims of drought, floods, and earthquakes, not only in our own country but in foreign nations. The present emergency is without parallel in recent times, and no government can remain inactive when any substantial portion of its citizenship is suffering from hunger, cold, and destitution.

However, it seems rather shocking to me that at a time like this, when we are considering measures to relieve destitution and starvation in this country, and when we are undertaking to expand currency and credit in order to raise commodity prices and restore to normal employment the millions of our fellow citizens who are walking the streets in idleness, and when we are seeking to preserve our economic and political system from collapse, that lobbyists like Ogden Mills, the former Secretary of the Treasury, and others should be all over this Capitol undertaking to prevent the constructive legislation of this administration to restore the dollar to its normal purchasing power and to raise commodity prices.

I mention this fact because I have just introduced a resolution to investigate the activities of Ogden Mills and the other lobbyists who are at this moment in the Capitol exerting their influence for the purpose of defeating constructive legislation that will restore this country to a normal condition. [Applause.] My resolution also proposes to investigate the activities and plans of foreign governments and international bankers to propagandize the country with a view of seeking to cancel the war debts and maintaining the abnormal value of our currency at home and abroad to the detriment of American labor, agriculture, and industry. Newspaper dispatches from France state that the French Government is appropriating a large sum of money for propaganda purposes in the United States. One paper quotes the figure set aside for this purpose by the French Government at 66,000,000 francs. What a parody it is to behold the French Government appropriating money for propaganda purposes in the United States when she professes her inability to pay the just and honest obligations owing to the American people. Through what agencies she proposes to work in her attempt to mold public opinion in this country is unknown. It seems to me that it is high time for Congress to expose these nefarious activities.

It will also be interesting to uncover the well-directed and highly organized lobbying activities that are being conducted for the purpose of maintaining the gold dollar at an abnormal level, which is rapidly bringing bankruptcy and ruin to the great majority of the American people. Such lobbying is vicious and indefensible and should be exposed to the sunlight of public opinion. The methods and means and objectives of those who are conducting these harmful activities should be fully exposed. We should make an example of these lobbyists that will deter others from engaging in similar activities for a long time in the future. The President and the Democratic Party promised to drive the money changers from the temple. It is equally important that we drive the lobbyists from the Capitol. [Applause.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. The Administrator upon approving a grant to any State shall so certify to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which shall, except upon revocation of a certificate by the Administrator, make payments without delay to the State in such amounts and at such times as may be prescribed in the certificate. The Governor of each State receiving grants under this act shall file monthly with the Administrator, and in the form required by him, a report of the disbursements made under such grants.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRUAX: Page 7, line 24, after the word "grants", insert "the Governor of each State shall file a statement that no foreclosures of real estate shall be made by State officials during the period for which said Federal aid is asked."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the amendment is not germane to this particular section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. GOSS. As I understood the amendment from its reading by the Clerk, it requires the Governor of each State to file with the administrator a document declaring that no foreclosures shall be made. This might easily interfere with State laws. We in the House are not able to know that we could legally require the Governors to file such a document.

Furthermore, the bill requires that the Governor of each State receiving grants under this act shall file monthly with the administrator, and in the form required by him, a report of the disbursements made under such grants.

I cannot see that the subject of foreclosures comes under this section.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, the amendment provides——

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman must talk to the point of order and not to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio care to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. TRUAX. The amendment provides that no foreclosures shall be made by State officials; in other words, by liquidators of closed State banks appointed by the Governor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio is not germane either to the section or the bill, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. As used in the foregoing provisions of this act, the term "State" shall include the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico; and the term "Governor" shall include the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask for order.

Mr. Chairman, I have been solicitous for order because I wish to explain to every Member the nature of the motion to recommit. The motion to recommit refers to a phrase in existing law and does not of itself set out the intent.

If the amendment should be adopted, it will carry out the views of those who think that this money should be lent, as under the legislation previously instructing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Members who believe in lending will answer "aye"; those who believe in giving will answer "no."

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. It is more blessed to give than to receive.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, "By their fruits ye shall know them." The members of the minority party, if you noticed, voted almost as a unit against this measure. They call this a gift, and they say that it is not in the province of the National Government to give to individuals. Secondly, they say that we are trying to hide this gift by incorporating it under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Let us look at the record of the Republican Party during the last 12 years. Under the Harding administration they gave Teapot Dome and other valuable oil fields to Doheny and Sinclair. Were these not gifts? They say they were not gifts. A rose with another name has the same sweet smell. They were gifts—gifts constituting our richest natural resources, the heritage of our children. Was there any voice raised on the other side of the House at that time against these gifts, not to the poor and needy but to multimillionaires? Did not Calvin Coolidge sit as Vice President and know all about it? Did not Hoover sit as Secretary of Commerce? Did they object? Not until Senator Walsh, that magnificent man with a magnificent intellect, uncovered the gift you Republicans had tried to cover, were Daugherty and Denby sent out of the Cabinet and Fall sent to the penitentiary.

During Coolidge's administration we gave back to Mellon and others refunds of their income taxes, and you tried to hide them by not allowing them to be published.

During Hoover's administration of the last 4 years may I call your attention to the fact that he tried to cancel $11,000,000,000 of international debts by secret negotiation. This in the final analysis, if it had been consummated, would have been a gift at the expense of the taxpayers of this country. I ask you, was there any voice raised on the part of the Members on the left here against it?

I believe you have no occasion to say that you are opposed to a gift to the people when you have permitted in the last 12 years these things under the unspeakable Republican leadership of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover. Under Harding and Coolidge came an artificial prosperity, and we were urged to buy, buy, buy until it hurt. Prosperity would last forever. Under Hoover we were solicited to purchase foreign bonds and securities by international bankers, and high officials in the Cabinet said they were good. When the crash came in 1929, Hoover at first refused to recognize it, then said it was temporary and "prosperity was around the corner." They brought on this condition of dire distress and now refuse to permit us to relieve it.

On November 8 the people of the United States made up their minds they wanted a new deal. They sent a great humanitarian down to the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. This man has vision and wisdom and courage, and we are trying by this bill to give him the power and the authority to help the people who are down and out, the forgotten men and women.

I believe, in all fairness, we should give this authority to a man whom we trust, a man who will show his humanitarian spirit toward all the people—not only those who are up high, but those who are lowly, the everyday American citizen—the forgotten man. [Applause.]

The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] stated openly on the floor of this House, in reply to a direct question, that even in the case of dire distress of the people, should the local government or the State government be unable to or neglect to or refuse to furnish aid, he would still oppose the giving of aid by the Federal Government. And he calls himself a humanitarian. I submit that the noble founder of the Republican Party, Abraham Lincoln, would never have taken such an ignoble view of the functions of government. But the leadership of the Republican Party for the past decade or two is as far removed in ideals and principles from the leadership of Lincoln's day as the darkest night is from the light of day.

They call this socialism. If this be socialism, then the responsible leadership of the Democratic Party is socialistic, the large majority of the Congress is socialistic, and the overwhelming majority of the people of the United States are backing them whole-heartedly in that kind of socialism.

They call this an innovation. Thank God, we have a man at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue who has during the past few weeks smashed a few precedents in order to secure justice and relief. He has shown himself a militant, progressive leader of action.

We have a pilot at the helm of the ship of state who is unafraid; a pilot who knows what course to take in this devastating storm of depression; a pilot who has not only the loyal support of the majority of his crew but the unbounded confidence of the vast majority of the passengers. The ship will be brought safely into port with the Stars and Stripes flying from its masthead notwithstanding the petty opposition of a few reactionaries and the technical obstruction of a discarded leadership. If the leaders of the Republican Party persist in this course, they will eventually plunge their party into the same political oblivion as that suffered by the Whig Party prior to the Civil War. The signs of dissolution and decay are evident. "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad." I make no charge against the rank and file who have been misled, but the leadership of the Republican Party during the past 12 years has been mad with power. Now it is mad with envy and fear lest the motto "Justice to all and special privileges to none" becomes a wholesome reality. [Applause.]

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House, with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BULWINKLE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4606) to provide for the cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House, with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the so-called "Civil Service amendment".

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the committee amendment to section 4 (b).

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment upon which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 2, after the word "and", strike out the words "subject to the provisions of the Civil Service laws, appoint, and, in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LUCE) there were 175 ayes and 87 noes.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 215, nays 161, not voting 55, as follows:

[Roll No. 17]

YEAS—215

Abernethy	DeRouen	Keller	Richards
Adair	Dickinson	Kelly, Ill.	Robertson
Adams	Dies	Kemp	Robinson
Allgood	Dingell	Kenney	Rogers, N.H.
Ayers, Mont.	Dockweiler	Kerr	Rogers, Okla.
Bailey	Doughton	Kloeb	Romjue
Beam	Douglass	Kniffin	Rudd
Beiter	Doxey	Kocialkowski	Ruffin
Berlin	Drewry	Kopplemann	Sadowski
Biermann	Driver	Kramer	Sanders
Black	Duffey	Lamneck	Sandlin
Bland	Duncan, Mo.	Lanham	Schaefer
Blanton	Dunn	Larrabee	Schuetz
Bloom	Durgan, Ind.	Lee, Mo.	Schulte
Boland	Eagle	Lesinski	Secrest
Boylan	Eicher	Lloyd	Shallenberger
Brennan	Ellzey, Miss.	Lozier	Sirovich
Briggs	Faddis	McClintic	Smith, Va.
Brown, Mich.	Farley	McCormack	Smith, W.Va.
Browning	Fernandez	McDuffie	Snyder
Brunner	Fitzgibbons	McKeown	Somers, N.Y.
Buchanan	Fletcher	McMillan	Spence
Buck	Ford	McReynolds	Stubbs
Bulwinkle	Foulkes	Major	Studley
Burch	Fuller	Maloney, La.	Sullivan
Burke, Calif.	Gasque	Martin, Colo.	Sutphin
Busby	Gavagan	May	Swank
Cady	Gillespie	Mead	Sweeney
Caldwell	Gillette	Meeks	Tarver
Cannon, Mo.	Glover	Milligan	Taylor, Colo.
Carden	Granfield	Mitchell	Taylor, S.C.
Carley	Gray	Monaghan	Thompson, Ill.
Carpenter, Kans.	Green	Montet	Truax
Carpenter, Nebr.	Greenwood	Moran	Turner
Cary	Gregory	Morehead	Umstead
Castellow	Griffin	Murdock	Utterback
Chapman	Griswold	Musselwhite	Vinson, Ga.
Clark, N.C.	Haines	Nesbit	Vinson, Ky.
Cochran, Mo.	Hamilton	Norton	Wallgren
Coffin	Harlan	O'Connell	Walter
Colden	Hart	O'Malley	Wearin
Cole	Hastings	Oliver, Ala.	Weaver
Collins, Miss.	Hildebrandt	Oliver, N.Y.	Weideman
Colmer	Hill, Ala.	Owen	Werner
Cooper, Tenn.	Hill, Sam B.	Palmisano	West
Cox	Howard	Parker, Ga.	White
Cravens	Hughes	Parks	Wilcox
Crosby	Jacobsen	Patman	Willford
Cross	Jeffers	Peyser	Williams
Crowe	Jenckes	Pierce	Wilson
Cullen	Johnson, Okla.	Ramsay	Wood, Ga.
Cummings	Johnson, Tex.	Randolph	Wood, Mo.
Deen	Johnson, W.Va.	Rankin	Woodrum
Delaney	Kee	Rayburn

NAYS—161

Andrew, Mass.	Disney	Jones	Parker, N.Y.
Andrews, N.Y.	Ditter	Kahn	Parsons
Arens	Dobbins	Kelly, Pa.	Peavey
Arnold	Dondero	Kinzer	Perkins
Ayres, Kans.	Doutrich	Knutson	Pettengill
Bacharach	Dowell	Kurtz	Polk
Bacon	Eaton	Kvale	Powers
Bakewell	Edmonds	Lambertson	Prall
Beedy	Eltse, Calif.	Lambeth	Ragon
Blanchard	Englebright	Lea, Calif.	Ramspeck
Boehne	Evans	Lehlbach	Ransley
Boileau	Focht	Lemke	Reece
Bolton	Foss	Lewis, Colo.	Reed, N.Y.
Britten	Frear	Lewis, Md.	Reilly
Brown, Ky.	Gibson	Luce	Rich
Burke, Nebr.	Gilchrist	Ludlow	Rogers, Mass.
Burnham	Goldsborough	Lundeen	Sears
Byrns	Goodwin	McCarthy	Seger
Carter, Calif.	Goss	McFadden	Shoemaker
Carter, Wyo.	Guyer	McFarlane	Simpson
Cavicchia	Hancock, N.Y.	McGrath	Sinclair
Chase	Hancock, N.C.	McGugin	Smith, Wash.
Christianson	Hartley	McLean	Snell
Church	Healey	McLeod	Stalker
Clarke, N.Y.	Henney	Maloney, Conn.	Steagall
Cochran, Pa.	Hess	Mansfield	Strong, Pa.
Collins, Calif.	Higgins	Mapes	Strong, Tex.
Condon	Hill, Knute	Marland	Sumners, Tex.
Connery	Hoeppel	Marshall	Taber
Connolly	Hoidale	Martin, Mass.	Taylor, Tenn.
Cooper, Ohio	Hollister	Merritt	Thom
Crosser	Holmes	Millard	Thomason, Tex.
Crowther	Hooper	Mott	Thurston
Crump	Hope	Moynihan	Tinkham
Culkin	James	Muldowney	Tobey
Darrow	Jenkins	O'Brien	Traeger
Dirksen	Johnson, Minn.	O'Connor	Treadway
Turpin	Whittington	Wolcott	Woodruff
Watson	Wigglesworth	Wolfenden	Young
Welch	Withrow	Wolverton	Zioncheck
Whitley

NOT VOTING—55

Allen	Corning	Huddleston	Reid, Ill.
Almon	Darden	Imhoff	Richardson
Auf der Heide	Dear	Kennedy, Md.	Sabath
Bankhead	De Priest	Kennedy, N.Y.	Scrugham
Beck	Dickstein	Kleberg	Shannon
Brand	Fiesinger	Lanzetta	Sisson
Brooks	Fish	Lehr	Stokes
Brumm	Fitzpatrick	Lindsay	Swick
Buckbee	Flannagan	McSwain	Terrell
Cannon, Wis.	Fulmer	Martin, Oreg.	Underwood
Cartwright	Gambrill	Miller	Wadsworth
Celler	Gifford	Montague	Waldron
Chavez	Harter	Peterson	Warren
Claiborne	Hornor	Pou

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Miller (for) with Mr. Beck (against).
Mr. Warren (for) with Mr. Brumm (against).
Mr. Dear (for) with Mr. Wadsworth (against).
Mr. Martin of Oregon (for) with Mr. Buckbee (against).

General pairs:

Mr. Bankhead with Mr. Gifford.
Mr. Corning with Mr. Stokes.
Mr. Pou with Mr. Allen.
Mr. Chavez with Mr. Fish.
Mr. Fitzpatrick with Mr. Reid of Illinois.
Mr. Fiesinger with Mr. Swick.
Mr. Lindsay with Mr. Waldron.
Mr. Gambrill with Mr. Brooks.
Mr. Huddleston with Mr. Cannon of Wisconsin.
Mr. Kleberg with Mr. Darden.
Mr. Celler with Mr. Claiborne.
Mr. Almon with Mr. Harter.
Mr. McSwain with Mr. Imhoff.
Mr. Montague with Mr. Terrell.
Mr. Sabath with Mr. Richardson.
Mr. Underwood with Mr. Lanzetta.
Mr. Dickstein with Mr. Flannagan.
Mr. Cartwright with Mr. Kennedy of New York.
Mr. Auf der Heide with Mr. Hornor.
Mr. Fulmer with Mr. Brand.
Mr. Kennedy of Maryland with Mr. Peterson.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Florida, Mr. PETERSON, is absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment upon which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 15, strike out "$200,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$250,000,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TARVER) there were—ayes 208, noes 53.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit the bill, and upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LUCE moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency with instructions to report the bill back to the House with the following amendment:

"Page 2, line 12, strike out the period and add the following: "'and all funds here made available shall be subject to the terms of paragraph (b) of section 1 of title I of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the Corporation to deny an otherwise acceptable application under this act because of constitutional or legal inhibitions or because the State or Territory has borrowed to the full extent authorized by law.'"

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion is not germane to the bill. This is not a loan bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that this is a limitation and overrules the point of order. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 263, not voting 59, as follows:

[Roll No. 18]

YEAS—109

Andrew, Mass.	Ditter	Lambertson	Rich
Andrews, N.Y.	Dondero	Lambeth	Rogers, Mass.
Arnold	Doutrich	Lanham	Sanders
Ayres, Kans.	Doxey	Lehlbach	Seger
Bacon	Eaton	Luce	Shallenberger
Bailey	Edmonds	Ludlow	Simpson
Bakewell	Ellzey, Miss.	McFadden	Snell
Beedy	Eltse, Calif.	McGugin	Stalker
Blanchard	Englebright	McLean	Strong, Pa.
Boehne	Evans	McLeod	Sumners, Tex.
Bolton	Focht	McMillan	Taber
Britten	Foss	Marshall	Taylor, Tenn.
Burnham	Gibson	Martin, Mass.	Tinkham
Busby	Goodwin	May	Tobey
Carter, Calif.	Goss	Merritt	Traeger
Carter, Wyo.	Griswold	Millard	Treadway
Cavicchia	Guyer	Morehead	Turpin
Chase	Hancock, N.Y.	Moynihan	Waldron
Christianson	Hartley	Parker, Ga.	Watson
Clarke, N.Y.	Hess	Parker, N.Y.	Whitley
Cochran, Pa.	Higgins	Perkins	Wigglesworth
Collins, Calif.	Hollister	Pettengill	Wolcott
Colmer	Holmes	Powers	Wolfenden
Connolly	Hope	Ragon	Wolverton
Cooper, Ohio	Jenkins	Ransley	Woodruff
Crowther	Kahn	Rayburn
Culkin	Kinzer	Reece
Darrow	Kurtz	Reed, N.Y.

NAYS—263

Abernethy	Dobbins	Kenney	Reilly
Adair	Dockweiler	Kerr	Richards
Adams	Doughton	Kloeb	Robertson
Allgood	Dowell	Kniffin	Robinson
Arens	Drewry	Knutson	Rogers, N.H.
Ayers, Mont.	Driver	Kocialkowski	Rogers, Okla.
Beam	Duffey	Kramer	Romjue
Beiter	Duncan, Mo.	Kvale	Rudd
Berlin	Dunn	Lamneck	Ruffin
Biermann	Durgan, Ind.	Larrabee	Sadowski
Black	Eagle	Lea, Calif.	Sandlin
Bland	Eicher	Lee, Mo.	Schaefer
Blanton	Faddis	Lemke	Schuetz
Bloom	Farley	Lesinski	Schulte
Boileau	Fernandez	Lewis, Colo.	Sears
Boland	Fitzgibbons	Lewis, Md.	Secrest
Boylan	Fletcher	Lloyd	Shoemaker
Brennan	Ford	Lozier	Sinclair
Briggs	Foulkes	Lundeen	Smith, Va.
Brown, Ky.	Frear	McCarthy	Smith, Wash.
Brown, Mich.	Fuller	McClintic	Smith, W.Va.
Browning	Fulmer	McCormack	Snyder
Brunner	Gasque	McDuffie	Somers, N.Y.
Buck	Gavagan	McFarlane	Spence
Bulwinkle	Gilchrist	McGrath	Steagall
Burch	Gillespie	McKeown	Strong, Tex.
Burke, Calif.	Gillette	McReynolds	Stubbs
Burke, Nebr.	Glover	McSwain	Studley
Byrns	Goldsborough	Major	Sullivan
Cady	Granfield	Maloney, Conn.	Sutphin
Caldwell	Gray	Maloney, La.	Swank
Cannon, Mo.	Green	Mansfield	Sweeney
Carden	Greenwood	Mapes	Tarver
Carley	Gregory	Marland	Taylor, Colo.
Carpenter, Kans.	Griffin	Martin, Colo.	Taylor, S.C.
Carpenter, Nebr.	Haines	Mead	Thom
Cary	Hamilton	Meeks	Thomason, Tex.
Castellow	Hancock, N.C.	Milligan	Thompson, Ill.
Chapman	Harlan	Mitchell	Thurston
Church	Hart	Monaghan	Truax
Clark, N.C.	Hastings	Montet	Turner
Cochran, Mo.	Healey	Moran	Umstead
Coffin	Henney	Mott	Utterback
Colden	Hildebrandt	Muldowney	Vinson, Ga.
Cole	Hill, Ala.	Murdock	Vinson, Ky.
Collins, Miss.	Hill, Knute	Musselwhite	Wallgren
Condon	Hill, Sam B.	Nesbit	Walter
Connery	Hoeppel	Norton	Wearin
Cooper, Tenn.	Holdale	O'Brien	Weaver
Cox	Hooper	O'Connell	Weideman
Cravens	Howard	O'Connor	Welch
Crosby	Hughes	O'Malley	Werner
Cross	Jacobsen	Oliver, Ala.	West
Crosser	James	Oliver, N.Y.	White
Crowe	Jeffers	Owen	Whittington
Crump	Jenckes	Palmisano	Wilcox
Cullen	Johnson, Minn.	Parks	Willford
Cummings	Johnson, Okla.	Parsons	Williams
Deen	Johnson, Tex.	Patman	Wilson
Delaney	Johnson, W.Va.	Peavey	Withrow
DeRouen	Jones	Peyser	Wood, Ga.
Dickinson	Kee	Polk	Wood, Mo.
Dies	Keller	Prall	Woodrum
Dingell	Kelly, Ill.	Ramspeck	Young
Dirksen	Kelly, Pa.	Randolph	Zioncheck
Disney	Kemp	Rankin

NOT VOTING—59

Allen	Claiborne	Huddleston	Ramsay
Almon	Corning	Imhoff	Reid, Ill.
Auf der Heide	Darden	Kennedy, Md.	Richardson
Bacharach	Dear	Kennedy, N.Y.	Sabath
Bankhead	De Priest	Kleberg	Scrugham
Beck	Dickstein	Kopplemann	Shannon
Brand	Douglass	Lanzetta	Sirovich
Brooks	Fiesinger	Lehr	Sisson
Brumm	Fish	Lindsay	Stokes
Buchanan	Fitzpatrick	Martin, Oreg.	Swick
Buckbee	Flannagan	Miller	Terrell
Cannon, Wis.	Gambrill	Montague	Underwood
Cartwright	Gifford	Peterson	Wadsworth
Celler	Harter	Pierce	Warren
Chavez	Hornor	Pou

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Wadsworth (for) with Mr. Dear (against).
Mr. Brumm (for) with Mr. Warren (against).
Mr. Beck (for) with Mr. Miller (against).
Mr. Allen (for) with Mr. Corning (against).
Mr. Stokes (for) with Mr. Pou (against).
Mr. Buckbee (for) with Mr. Lanzetta (against).
Mr. Fish (for) with Mr. Auf der Heide (against).
Mr. Swick (for) with Mr. Martin of Oregon (against).
Mr. Reid of Illinois (for) with Mr. Imhoff (against).
Mr. Bacharach (for) with Mr. Lindsay (against).

Additional general pairs:

Mr. Cannon of Wisconsin with Mr. Gifford.
Mr. Huddleston with Mr. Ramsay.
Mr. Claiborne with Mr. Terrell.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I was present, but listening to one of my colleagues talk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. TERRELL, is absent on account of illness. If present, he would have voted "no."

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. FIESINGER, is absent on account of illness. If present, he would have voted "no."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. DOUGLASS, was unavoidably called away and asked me to state that if present he would vote "no."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the following Members are unavoidably absent; if present, they would have voted "no" on the motion to recommit and would vote "yea" on the passage of the bill: Messrs. SABATH, RICHARDSON, FITZPATRICK, DARDEN, FIESINGER, ALMON, CHAVEZ, SIROVICH, DOUGLASS, GAMBRILL, LEHR, CELLER, DICKSTEIN, KENNEDY of New York, PIERCE, PETERSON, MCSWAIN, UNDERWOOD, KLEBERG, KENNEDY of Maryland, FLANNAGAN, BANKHEAD, BRAND, BROOKS, HORNOR, CARTWRIGHT, and MONTAGUE.

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. LEHR, is absent on account of important business.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 331, nays 42, not voting 58, as follows:

[Roll No. 19]

YEAS—331

Abernethy	Boehne	Caldwell	Colden
Adair	Boileau	Cannon, Mo.	Cole
Adams	Boland	Carden	Collins, Calif.
Allgood	Boylan	Carley	Collins, Miss.
Andrews, N.Y.	Brennan	Carpenter, Kans.	Colmer
Arens	Briggs	Carpenter, Nebr.	Condon
Arnold	Britten	Carter, Calif.	Connery
Ayers, Mont.	Brown, Ky.	Carter, Wyo.	Connolly
Ayres, Kans.	Brown, Mich.	Cary	Cooper, Ohio
Beam	Browning	Castellow	Cooper, Tenn.
Beiter	Brunner	Cavicchia	Cravens
Berlin	Buchanan	Chapman	Crosby
Biermann	Buck	Christianson	Cross
Black	Bulwinkle	Church	Crosser
Blanchard	Burch	Clark, N.C.	Crowe
Bland	Burke, Calif.	Cochran, Mo.	Crowther
Blanton	Burke, Nebr.	Cochran, Pa.	Crump
Bloom	Byrns	Coffin	Culkin

Cullen	Hastings	McLean	Schulte
Cummings	Healey	McLeod	Scrugham
Darrow	Henney	McReynolds	Sears
Deen	Hess	Maloney, Conn.	Secrest
Delaney	Hildebrandt	Maloney, La.	Seger
DeRouen	Hill, Ala.	Mansfield	Shoemaker
Dickinson	Hill, Knute	Mapes	Sinclair
Dies	Hill, Sam B.	Marland	Sirovich
Dingell	Hoeppel	Marshall	Smith, Va.
Dirksen	Holdale	Martin, Colo.	Smith, Wash.
Disney	Holmes	May	Smith, W.Va.
Ditter	Hooper	Mead	Snyder
Dobbins	Hope	Meeks	Somers, N.Y.
Dockweiler	Howard	Milligan	Spence
Dondero	Hughes	Mitchell	Steagall
Doughton	Jacobsen	Monaghan	Strong, Pa.
Doutrich	James	Montet	Strong, Tex.
Dowell	Jeffers	Moran	Stubbs
Drewry	Jenckes	Mott	Studley
Driver	Jenkins	Muldowney	Sullivan
Duffey	Johnson, Minn.	Murdock	Sutphin
Duncan, Mo.	Johnson, Okla.	Musselwhite	Swank
Dunn	Johnson, Tex.	Nesbit	Sweeney
Durgan, Ind.	Johnson, W.Va.	Norton	Tarver
Eagle	Kahn	O'Brien	Taylor, Colo.
Eaton	Kee	O'Connell	Taylor, S.C.
Edmonds	Keller	O'Connor	Taylor, Tenn.
Eicher	Kelly, Ill.	O'Malley	Thom
Eltse, Calif.	Kelly, Pa.	Oliver, Ala.	Thomason, Tex.
Englebright	Kemp	Oliver, N.Y.	Thompson, Ill.
Evans	Kenney	Owen	Thurston
Faddis	Kerr	Palmisano	Tobey
Farley	Kinzer	Parks	Traeger
Fernandez	Kloeb	Parsons	Truax
Fitzgibbons	Kniffin	Patman	Turner
Fletcher	Knutson	Peavey	Turpin
Focht	Kocialkowski	Perkins	Umstead
Ford	Kopplemann	Pettengill	Utterback
Foss	Kramer	Peyser	Vinson, Ga.
Foulkes	Kurtz	Pierce	Vinson, Ky.
Frear	Kvale	Polk	Wallgren
Fuller	Lambertson	Powers	Walter
Fulmer	Lambeth	Prall	Wearin
Gasque	Lamneck	Ragon	Weaver
Gavagan	Larrabee	Ramsay	Weideman
Gibson	Lea, Calif.	Ramspeck	Welch
Gilchrist	Lee, Mo.	Randolph	Werner
Gillespie	Lehlbach	Rankin	West
Gillette	Lemke	Ransley	White
Glover	Lesinski	Rayburn	Whitley
Goldsborough	Lewis, Colo.	Reece	Wilcox
Granfield	Lewis, Md.	Reilly	Willford
Gray	Lloyd	Richards	Williams
Green	Lozier	Robertson	Wilson
Greenwood	Ludlow	Robinson	Withrow
Gregory	Lundeen	Rogers, N.H.	Wolcott
Griffin	McCarthy	Rogers, Okla.	Wolfenden
Griswold	McClintic	Romjue	Wolverton
Guyer	McCormack	Rudd	Wood, Ga.
Haines	McDuffie	Ruffin	Wood, Mo.
Hamilton	McFadden	Sadowski	Woodruff
Hancock, N.C.	McFarlane	Sanders	Woodrum
Harlan	McGrath	Sandlin	Young
Hart	McGugin	Schaefer	Zioncheck
Hartley	McKeown	Schuetz

NAYS—42

Andrew, Mass.	Doxey	Merritt	Snell
Bacon	Ellzey, Miss.	Millard	Stalker
Bailey	Goodwin	Morehead	Sumners, Tex.
Bakewell	Goss	Moynihan	Taber
Beedy	Hancock, N.Y.	Parker, Ga.	Tinkham
Bolton	Higgins	Parker, N.Y.	Treadway
Burnham	Hollister	Reed, N.Y.	Watson
Busby	Jones	Rich	Whittington
Chase	Lanham	Rogers, Mass.	Wigglesworth
Clarke, N.Y.	Luce	Shallenberger
Cox	Martin, Mass.	Simpson

NOT VOTING—53

Allen	Claiborne	Huddleston	Pou
Almon	Corning	Imhoff	Reid, Ill.
Auf der Heide	Darden	Kennedy, Md.	Richardson
Bacharach	Dear	Kennedy, N.Y.	Sabath
Bankhead	De Priest	Kleberg	Shannon
Beck	Dickstein	Lanzetta	Sisson
Brand	Douglass	Lehr	Stokes
Brooks	Fiesinger	Lindsay	Swick
Brumm	Fish	McMillan	Terrell
Buckbee	Fitzpatrick	McSwain	Underwood
Cady	Flannagan	Major	Wadsworth
Cannon, Wis.	Gambrill	Martin, Oreg.	Waldron
Cartwright	Gifford	Miller	Warren
Celler	Harter	Montague
Chavez	Hornor	Peterson

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Dear (for) with Mr. Wadsworth (against).
Mr. Corning (for) with Mr. Allen (against).
Mr. Pou (for) with Mr. Stokes (against).
Mr. Lindsay (for) with Mr. Bacharach (against).
Mr. Lanzetta (for) with Mr. Buckbee (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Warren with Mr. Brumm.
Mr. Huddleston with Mr. Reid of Illinois.
Mr. Brand with Mr. Beck.
Mr. Major with Mr. Fish.
Mr. Cady with Mr. Swick.
Mr. Shannon with Mr. Waldron.
Mr. Claiborne with Mr. Harter.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DOUGLASS] is unavoidably absent. He asked me to state that if he were here he would vote "yea."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. TERRELL] is absent on account of illness. I am authorized to state that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, the following gentlemen are unavoidably absent, and if present would have voted "yea" on the passage of the bill: Messrs. SABATH, IMHOFF, RICHARDSON, FITZPATRICK, CANNON of Wisconsin, ALMON, DOUGLASS, MARTIN of Oregon, CHAVEZ, MILLER, DICKSTEIN, CELLER, AUF DER HEIDE, FIESINGER, GAMBRILL, KENNEDY of New York, KLEBERG, SISSON, TERRELL, PETERSON, LEHR, UNDERWOOD, BROOKS, DARDEN, CARTWRIGHT, BANKHEAD, MCMILLAN, MCSWAIN, KENNEDY of Maryland, FLANNAGAN, MONTAGUE, and HORNOR.

Mr. CADY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "yea."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the room listening when his name was called?

Mr. CADY. No; I was in the telephone booth.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CANNON] is unavoidably absent. If he were here he would have voted "yea."

Mr. WEST. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. IMHOFF] is unavoidably absent. If he were here he would have voted "yea" on the final passage of this bill, would have voted "nay" on the motion to recommit, and would have voted "yea" on the Fuller amendment.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON] is unavoidably absent on account of serious illness in his family.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. STEAGALL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE PRESENT CONGRESS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech made by my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEIDEMAN] over Radio Station WJBK on last Friday evening, April 14, 1933.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Hon. CARL M. WEIDEMAN over WJBK, Detroit, Mich., Friday, April 14, 1933:

My friends of the radio audience and the Forgotten Man's Club, I appreciate the courtesy extended to me by station WJBK to address you concerning the work of the present Congress. Having been in session for the short period of 5 weeks, it has passed a tremendous amount of important legislation, including—

The emergency banking bill.
The economy bill (which I voted against).
The reforestation bill.
The farm relief bill.
The beer bill.

The majority of the Members of Congress have given the President their support on these measures, as part of the administration plan which is designed to help relieve the general unemployment and economic condition now prevailing throughout the entire country.

These bills are a part of a whole plan which is intended to bring about some measure of prosperity in our country. Time only can tell whether or not the President has the correct solution of the problem.

Even with the emergency legislation which has been passed to date, we have merely scratched the surface of abuses which we face and which have been prevalent and growing during the last 12 years of Republican administration.

There still are to be brought before the Congress about 10 bills, which will complete the President's emergency program. Among the bills to be considered are—

The Federal securities bill.
A State bank relief bill.
A farm loan bill.
The Tennessee River (Muscle Shoals) project.
The 30 hour a week bill.
Gasoline tax bill.
Wagner bill for unemployment relief.
Tariff relations bill.
Public works bill.
Home mortgage relief bill.

Your Congressman believes that the citizens of this city are willing to give these measures a trial to see what the result will be, having expressed themselves so decisively at the polls last November. It is the intention of the Members of Congress to go just as far in supporting the President as their conscience and good judgment permit. Your President has assumed a great responsibility. Not all Members vote for all emergency legislation; their loyalty to a cause has been severely strained in voting for some of the measures already proposed, believing that some measures did not go far enough and that other measures went too far.

If the proposed program does not get the desired results, I predict that in January, after a fair trial of the President's program, should it prove unsuccessful or deficient in certain matters, Congress shall go forward and attempt to remedy the defects in the present legislation.

I believe that the newer Members of Congress are the most progressive group ever sent to Congress, but their records are being written now, and in 2 years when it is complete you will know whether or not your representatives have been loyal to you or whether or not they have jumped through the hoop at the crack of the whip of reactionaries.

I believe that the most important requisite that any public official should have is courage, courage to follow the interests of the common people, the reasoning of his own mind after a fair analysis of any subject and the courage to follow his reasoning to its ultimate end.

There can be no ultimate solution of our problems until laws are passed which abolish the curse of money which now controls our Government, the abolition of the large rates of interest, restriction of hours of labor, unemployment insurance, old-age pensions, extension of the laws governing deposits in Postal Savings, a Government bank properly controlled, the guaranty of deposits in banks, and the decentralization of wealth to be accomplished through inheritance and income or accretion taxes.

In connection with the decentralization of wealth let me cite the findings of a personal research along this line. Shortly after my arrival in Washington I became engaged in conversation with Congressman EDGAR HOWARD, of Nebraska, a real progressive Democrat and the man who introduced a resolution at the last session forcing pitiless publicity of the loans made by the Republican administration through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. He informed me that Andrew Mellon, our late Secretary of the Treasury, and the Mellon family controlled more wealth than the combined assessed valuation of the States of Nebraska and South Dakota.

I immediately sent to the Library of Congress for figures on wealth of the Mellon family and for the assessed valuation of Michigan. I found, my friends, that this one family controlled more wealth than the assessed valuation of real and personal property in the great State of Michigan.

For the moment the most interest on approaching legislation seems concentrated on the Black bill, better known to us as the 30 hour a week bill. Briefly, this bill provides that no man or woman engaged in certain industries not essential to health and the sustaining of life shall work more than 30 hours a week or 6 hours a day for 5 days a week. The primary purpose of the bill is to furnish more work to a larger number of people.

My office has been deluged with telegrams and letters since the bill passed the Senate and was placed in a House committee for consideration. In most instances the letters have not been received from the forgotten man, whose ideas on such matters I covet most, but from a group of men who do not let themselves be forgotten in Washington. I speak of the corporations and the employers of labor.

Nearly all employers are united in opposition to the passage of this measure. While there are features in the bill which need altering, I can see no honest reason why every man, woman, and child in this country should not have 2 days of rest and recreation every week.

If not, then why our modern improvements and labor-saving devices in the factory and on the farm? Why the production of more food than we can eat, more workingmen than we can find employment for, and facilities for making more clothes than we can wear if men and women outside of a chosen few must continue to struggle, and fear the future, the same as they have down through the ages?

If our toil has not benefited those whose labors and faith have borne the brunt and hardships of modern life, our civilization is a failure.

Another matter of supreme importance is the proposed guaranty of bank deposits. We are all stopping now, studying and analyzing the system which has prostrated this great city of ours.

Is not it ridiculous, this banking system of ours as it has existed in the past? If I wanted to borrow $500 from any of you or you wanted to borrow $500 from me we would demand good security.

Yet, you and I have for years walked into a bank and deposited thousands of dollars with a cashier whom we did not know. Probably you had thousands on deposit in a bank and you didn't know a single officer and had no more idea than "the man in the moon" as to how the money was invested. It would seem from the results that we might as well have invested it in the moon.

My friends, the fundamentals of handling money are simple. The great trouble is that international bankers have complicated the system with the purpose to entangle and deceive you. They tell us that we must trust experts in banking. It has been a "heads I win, tails you lose" proposition too long. We are entitled to a guaranty on the money we place in the keeping of others, and if we can fight hard enough we will get it.

It is bitter history now that, after our bank crashes, committee after committee called at the Treasury Department, all loudly proclaiming they represented the stockholders, but none the depositors.

I felt it my duty as a representative of the people of my district to learn what was going on behind closed doors. I called at the office of the Treasury Department and asked admittance to these conferences, which was denied by Mr. Watkins. I believed then and I believe now that I, as your Congressman, had a right to know the true condition of our banks, but the master bankers didn't want all facts made public. The truth is, we didn't know the facts then, nor do we know them now.

All we know of what was said or done has been the statements, guarded and indefinite, that have been forced by an insistent press which has joined our demand that some attention be paid to the 800,000 people in this city who trusted our banks and our bank examiners.

A few days later I learned that our welfare funds were depleted, that women and children left penniless by this awful catastrophe would be refused the necessities of life, unless relief money deposited in these banks was released. Again, I demanded action through a letter written to Jesse H. Jones, a Republican chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, on March 31. In this letter I stated in part:

"Without taking any position and regardless of the banking situation of the city of Detroit, and without determining which group is right or wrong in the local fight concerning reorganization of banks, I am asking you to become interested in the sorry plight of these numerous citizens of Detroit to release immediately further moneys, to be deposited for the use and benefit of the city of Detroit so that it can carry out this relief work and keep the citizens from actual starvation.

"This is no time to quibble. People are actually starving in Detroit and I fear the consequences unless something is done immediately in the way of aid to those sorely distressed people. If necessary, I think you should disregard all rules and regulations and red tape to release this money. Hungry mouths know no technicality. I implore you to assist me in this measure and to help our city immediately."

In conclusion I wish to say something concerning the adjusted-service certificates and the bonus bill.

The time is not opportune to force consideration of the bill. We are hopeful that the administration will consider it in connection with present plans and request its enactment. I believe that its passage would help the country more than any legislation that has been proposed, and, besides, would save the Government $112,000 a year and abolish a useless commission. However, the President must not be disturbed at this time in his efforts to relieve destitution, save the homes and farms of the people and to give jobs to the unemployed, including the veterans.

The bill is not dead; it is very much alive; if present proposals, when enacted—should this bill not be included—do not expand the currency and do not furnish employment to the jobless, the administration and public sentiment, I am sure, will demand its present passage.

The bill can be passed in the House by a two-third majority. We are informed that a two-third majority of the Senators are against it. We do not want to make a gesture; we want the bill passed; and in not forcing consideration at this particular time we are working in the interests of its final passage. Ask your Senators and Congressmen how they will vote on this.

I know—and regret exceedingly—that veterans all over the Nation are losing their homes and their families are in distress because they cannot collect this money. It makes my heart bleed to think about the misery and despair that will be caused by the passage of the so-called "economy bill"; that bill is going to deprive each congressional district of $1,000,000 a year; such money would probably turn over 15 times during the year; therefore the small merchants and business men generally in each congressional district in the United States are going to lose $15,000,000 a year in buying power, commencing July 1. That is an added reason why the measure should be enacted now.

In closing, I want to say that the Members of Congress have confidence in our President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, knowing that his heart is with the oppressed and the down-trodden, and he is making a sincere effort to relieve your condition, and the Members of Congress will cooperate with him in attempting to bring about a speedy recovery to normalcy so that you may again enjoy all of the necessities of living and those common luxuries which you have become accustomed to, such as the radio, the automobile, electric appliances, and other things commensurate with the decent American standard of living. I thank you.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF (H.R. 4606)—EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I question the wisdom of granting Members 5 legislative days within which to frame speeches and put them in the RECORD for political purposes every time a bill comes up for consideration. The time to discuss a bill is when the bill is under consideration.

The Government Printing Office is trying to save money these days and the Government is interested in trying to save the taxpayers' money.

Does not the gentleman think an extension of 5 days is more time than is necessary for the particular purpose for which it is asked?

Mr. STEAGALL. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the Members are overworked. I see no reason why they should not have 5 days as well as 1 day, 2 days, or any lesser time.

I hope the gentleman will not press his objection, although it means nothing to me personally.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to object to requests that seem to be reasonable, but I sometimes think the granting of too much time is not a good thing.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I shall, of course, vote "aye" on the final passage of this meritorious legislation, although I am compelled to vote "nay" on the amendment to strike out the Civil Service provision.

This bill places at the disposal of the States, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the sum of $250,000,000 against thrice that sum provided by the States for "relief and work relief" for the unemployed, and the further sum of $250,000,000 as an unconditional grant to the States for the same laudable purposes.

The urgent need for this legislation is apparent to all and is intended to extend aid to the millions of our citizens who are in distress and who are suffering for lack of sufficient food, clothing, and shelter. It is clearly the duty of the Government to assist in this worthy enterprise—indeed, it is one of its very noblest functions—and our Republican friends are really not serious in their opposition, I am sure, for they do not want our citizens to starve and go hungry and improperly clad so long as it is possible for us to alleviate those unhappy conditions, which are a disgrace to our institutions and system of laws. This is the very least that we can do for the men, women, and children of America who are the unfortunate victims, if you please, of the greed, the avarice, and the cupidity of a small group, who in the past have been the sole beneficiaries of all the favors, gratuities, special privileges, and largess that have been bestowed upon them under the sanction of law and authority by the agencies and instrumentalities of the Government. There is, therefore, my colleagues, no valid argument or reason that can be advanced in opposition to this relief measure.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot, however, vote in favor of striking the proviso to apply the principle of civil service to those who are to be entrusted with the administration of this act, for I have already indicated that I do not consider this in the nature of a political patronage bill. It is undoubtedly true that the other party has violated these salutary principles on many past occasions, but the fact that they have done wrong is certainly no justification for our doing so. The proposed amendment is un-Democratic and unworthy of the party of Cleveland and Wilson, the outstanding champions of civil-service reform, and I shall therefore vote against it and follow the leadership of the able chairman of the committee reporting this bill, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that I shall vote for this proposed relief bill whether or not the amendment under consideration is adopted.

The present problem of relief is tremendously burdensome to communities as well as States. As far back as 2 years ago I told the director of the community chest in my city of Hartford, Conn., that the Federal Government would eventually be compelled to enter into this question of relief for the destitute. That time has come.

The question before you today is not whether the Government shall or shall not give aid. The giving of aid at this particular time is a recognized governmental responsibility. The question before us, however, is the manner in which aid should be extended by the Federal Government. The amendment now under consideration is an attempt to answer that question. The amendment asks that the States pay back any moneys secured under this act when and if able.

I am a director of a charity organization. Whenever as an act of charity my organization gives an individual relief in the form of money we at the same time require him to sign an agreement to repay at such time as he may be able. In this way we are in position to aid the individual in maintaining his own self-respect. Through the extension of financial aid under such terms we do not break down the individual's spirit nor pauperize him through the granting of an outright dole.

The amendment under consideration attempts to accomplish this same desirable purpose. I do not believe there is an individual in this House nor in the Congress who wants to degrade any State by compelling it to accept an outright gift in the form of a dole. Let the States retain their respectability in these unparalleled days, so that when the time comes no State, including my own, shall be stigmatized because it received a dole from the National Government.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, in the Seventy-second Congress we passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill, which provided $300,000,000 to aid the States in handling their unemployment relief problems.

All of that money has been expended to date except about the sum of $60,000,000. There is no indication that the unemployment-relief problem is getting any less burdensome, but, on the contrary, there is much evidence that the cities and States are getting less able every day to handle their local relief problems.

The pending bill simply adds $500,000,000 to the National Government's contribution to the unemployment-relief work of this country.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] opposes this bill because under the terms of the measure the money is given to the States or rather presented to them as a gift, while under the terms of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act the money was to be loaned to the States.

The gentleman from Massachusetts is also opposed to the bill because he claims that there has been no showing that States are unable to handle their own unemployment-relief work.

While it is true that by the terms of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act the money given to the States to aid them in their unemployment-relief work was intended to be a loan, there are few people today, I take it, conversant with the circumstances under which the loans were made, but who will agree that in the end all advances made by the National Government to the various States in the shape of unemployment-relief assistance through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act will in the end turn out to be gifts.

Many of the States of the Union have constitutional provisions against borrowing money from the National Government or anybody else, and therefore various subterfuges were invented to permit these States to get their share of the appropriation for relief work provided in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act.

Mr. Speaker, there is ample evidence in the hearing before the Banking and Currency Committees of the House and the Senate tending to show that the great majority of the States are unable to adequately handle their unemployment-relief problems.

Our present industrial depression has brought more wreck and ruin to our citizens, financially and otherwise, than has ever followed any industrial panic that this country or the world has ever experienced.

We are told that the pending bill constitutes unprecedented legislation. Since the beginning of the present administration Congress has been passing unprecedented legislation, and undoubtedly this session of Congress will go down in history as a Congress that paid no attention to legislative precedent.

Our country at the present time is confronted with a condition and not a theory, and the President and Congress really have no precedent to follow. The question before Congress is not whether or not such legislation as the pending legislation was ever passed in this country before, but rather whether or not the pending bill constitutes legislation necessary in this crisis of our country's history.

Fundamentally, I believe relief problems are local problems and then State problems, but there may come a time when relief problems become national problems. In this great industrial crisis States lines have become obliterated, and it is the duty of the National Government to assist the various States in the handling of the great work of feeding and clothing their armies of unemployed, who through no fault of their own are unable to take care of themselves.

Under the terms of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill, and also under the terms of the pending bill, it may well be assumed that no State or States will get relief from the fund provided in this bill unless, in the judgment of those having charge of that fund, the State or States have done the best they could to meet their own relief problems.

Congress must necessarily delegate to some person or persons the matter of determining when, where, and how national relief assistance shall be distributed among the States.

It is of vital importance to every State in this Union, the smaller States as well as the larger States, that our unemployed people be fed, clothed, and housed in this trying hour, in order that the agitators and propagandists of communism may not find fertile fields in which to sow the seeds of national dissension.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I have requested this time in order to ask the majority leader if he has any information as to whether the expansion program which has been announced contains any provision for an adequate tax structure to accompany it step by step?

Mr. BYRNS. I have no information on the subject.

Mr. KVALE. Would the gentleman be willing to try to ascertain whether such plans are in contemplation? I think it is of vital importance.

Mr. BYRNS. I shall make an effort along that line.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the majority leader a question. As I understand the program, tomorrow is going to be confined to the consideration of Muscle Shoals legislation?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. There is to be general debate on the bill tomorrow?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. There will be no reading of the bill, of course, because 6 hours of general debate is provided.

Mr. BYRNS. Nothing will be up tomorrow except general debate on the Muscle Shoals bill. The debate will necessarily have to go over until Monday because of the length of time provided.

INVESTIGATION OF THE "AKRON" DISASTER

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to House Concurrent Resolution 15, the Chair appoints as members of the Joint Committee to investigate the Akron disaster the following Members of the House: Mr. DELANEY, Mr. MCSWAIN, Mr. HARTER, Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts, and Mr. HOPE.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DARDEN, for 3 days, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. CELLER, for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

To Mr. PETERSON, for 1 week, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. CLAIBORNE, at the request of Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri, for 2 days, on account of illness.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A joint resolution of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S.J.Res. 13. Joint resolution authorizing the Attorney General, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, to release claims of the United States upon certain assets of the Pan American Petroleum Co. and the Richfield Oil Co. of California and others in connection with collections upon a certain judgment in favor of the United States against the Pan American Petroleum Co. heretofore duly entered; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until Saturday, April 22, 1933, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. O'CONNOR: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 111. Resolution providing for the consideration of H.R. 5081; without amendment (Rept. No. 50). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. O'CONNOR: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 112. Resolution providing for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 157; without amendment (Rept. No. 51). Referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4507) for the relief of Bogustas De Kartowski; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H.R. 5124) granting a pension to Mary Tompkins; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DARDEN: A bill (H.R. 5152) granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Virginia to replace and maintain a bridge across Northwest River in Norfolk County, Va., on State Highway Route No. 27; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. TARVER: A bill (H.R. 5153) to amend an act entitled "An act to equip the United States penitentiary, Atlanta, Ga., for the manufacture of supplies for the use of the Government, for the compensation of prisoners for their labor, and for other purposes", approved July 10, 1918 (U.S.C., title 18, sec. 794); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DUNN: A bill (H.R. 5154) to establish a Banking Commission for the purpose of protecting all moneys deposited in the banks of the United States and its possessions; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. ALMON: A bill (H.R. 5155) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes", approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Roads.

By Mr. WHITLEY: A bill (H.R. 5156) to amend the act relating to the filing of judgments of Federal courts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: A bill (H.R. 5157) to authorize appropriations for emergency highway construction with a view to increasing employment, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Roads.

By Mr. RANKIN: A bill (H.R. 5158) providing for the exercise of power conferred by section 8 of article I of the Constitution: to coin money and to regulate the value thereof; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. EAGLE: A bill (H.R. 5159) to provide for regulated expansion of currency and credit, to reduce the national debt, to raise the price level of commodities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH: A bill (H.R. 5160) to regulate the value of money in accordance with paragraph 5, section 8, article I, of the Constitution of the United States; to reestablish the gold standard; to provide for its maintenance and stabilization; and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. DIES: Resolution (H.Res. 114) authorizing the investigation of lobbying activities; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. BRENNAN: Resolution (H.Res. 115) to investigate unfair methods of competition in the cement industry; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SHOEMAKER: Resolution (H.Res. 116) authorizing the investigation of the unlawful and secret plottings of the several revolutionary organizations or individuals who are now enjoying the asylum and sanctuary of the Government of the United States; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. SNYDER: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 160) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States authorizing Congress to restrict the income derived from capital; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. O'MALLEY: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 161) proposing an amendment to the Income Tax Act of 1932 providing for an emergency surtax of 50 percent on the net income of all foreign subsidiaries of American corporations, individuals, partnerships, or manufacturers; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, memorializing Congress to pass Senate bill no. 1197, known as the "Frazier bill", providing that existing farm indebtedness shall be refinanced by the Government of the United States; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, memorializing Congress that appropriate action be taken to place in the hands of a judicial tribunal the determination of damages suffered by owners of property bordering the Lake of the Woods, and to authorize the Department of Justice to compromise and adjust the valid claims arising out of the fluctuation of the level of said lake; to the Committee on Claims.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLOOM: A bill (H.R. 5161) for the relief of Wiener Bank Verein; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. CONNERY: A bill (H.R. 5162) granting a pension to Mary A. Weisse; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DEEN: A bill (H.R. 5163) for the relief of Calvin M. Head; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WILCOX: A bill (H.R. 5164) for the relief of William A. Somerville; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. IMHOFF: A bill (H.R. 5165) granting a pension to Emma Moore; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KRAMER: A bill (H.R. 5166) granting a pension to Charlotte M. Spalding; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KVALE: A bill (H.R. 5167) for the relief of Francis H. Bellew; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. POLK: A bill (H.R. 5168) granting a pension to Annie Stouder; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Washington: A bill (H.R. 5169) granting a pension to Adam Johnson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STALKER: A bill (H.R. 5170) for the relief of the American-La France & Foamite Corporation of New York; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

616. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of United Irish Societies of Brooklyn, N.Y., urging the passage of Senator BLACK's measure regulating the working hours of railroad employees; to the Committee on Labor.

617. Also, petition of the American Manufacturers Export Association, urging the immediate negotiation of reciprocal tariffs by the United States Government with other national governments, looking toward the freer interchange of commodities mutually advantageous; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

618. Also, petition of Typographical Union, No. 6, of New York City, endorsing the bill introduced by Senator BLACK; however, they emphatically protest against the inclusion in the bill of the amendment whereby the newspaper and periodical industry is excluded from the provisions of the bill; to the Committee on Labor.

619. By Mr. GIBSON: Petition of Burlington Post, No. 2, American Legion, department of Vermont, opposing removal of the regional office of the Veterans' Administration at Burlington, Vt.; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

620. Also, petition of American Legion, Department of Vermont, pledging its support of the national commander of the American Legion; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

621. By Mr. HOWARD: Resolution adopted by the Nebraska Senate, memorializing the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States concerning "call money" for the packers; to the Committee on Agriculture.

622. By Mr. IMHOFF: Petition of Mrs. W. A. Bricker, Anna H. McCalla, Essie Dyke, and 97 others of Middleton Township, Columbiana County, Ohio, asking Congress for an appropriation for the purchase of wheat to be made into flour and distributed to the needy through the medium of the American Red Cross; to the Committee on Appropriations.

623. By Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota: Resolution by the St. John's and Mamre locals of the Farmer's Union, St. James, Minn., to insure passage of the Frazier bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

624. Also, resolution by the National Farmers' Holiday Association, Pine County unit, Hinckley, Minn., urging passage of legislation that will give farmers loans at 3 percent interest, including amortization; to the Committee on Agriculture.

625. Also, resolution by the members of the Watonwan County Farmers' Cooperation and Educational Union of America, Local 270, to insure passage of the Frazier bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

626. Also, resolution by the stockholders of the Wilkin County National Farm Loan Association, for the passage of the Shipstead agricultural bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

627. Also, resolution from the Little Falls Township United of the Morrison County (Minnesota) Farm Bureau Association, for the continuation of farm agents; to the Committee on Agriculture.

628. By Mr. KVALE: Petition of Veterans of Foreign Wars, Post No. 1562, Faribault, Minn., favoring parity of naval armaments of the United States with other countries; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

629. Also, petition of Raymond Dewane, of Morris, Minn., favoring revaluation of the gold ounce; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

630. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of the Associated Cooperage Industries of America, St. Louis, Mo., opposing the 30-hour week bill in the cooperage industry; to the Committee on Labor.

631. By Mr. MAPES: Petition of Grand Rapids League of Catholic Women, Grand Rapids, Mich., Mrs. E. J. Marin, chairman of legislation, protesting against the equal-rights amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

632. By Mr. O'MALLEY: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, urging the Congress of the United States to enact legislation requiring all shipments of coal in interstate commerce to be accompanied by a sworn statement of the shipper, specifying the percentage of the ingredients and other qualities of the coal which affect its heating value, including the British thermol units per pound when the coal is dry, the percentage of ash when the coal is dry, the percentage of sulphur when the coal is dry, and the volatile matter in the coal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

633. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, urging the Congress of the United States to take prompt and favorable action on the farm relief bill which has been presented to the Congress by President Roosevelt; to the Committee on Agriculture.

634. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, urging the Congress of the United States to provide the necessary machinery and credit to make possible loans to the financial institutions having frozen assets upon satisfactory collateral; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

635. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, urging the Postmaster General to issue a series of special stamps in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the white man's discovery of Wisconsin; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

636. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of the Associated Cooperage Industries of America, opposing the passage of the 30-hour work week; to the Committee on Labor.

637. By Mr. SMITH of West Virginia: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of West Virginia, memorializing Congress to pass such legislation as will permit the Federal Government to acquire lands on headwaters of Ohio and Potomac Rivers, for the purpose of flood control; to the Committee on Flood Control.

638. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of West Virginia, relating to the allocation of Federal relief funds appropriated under the Federal Reforestation and Flood Control Unemployment Relief Act; to the Committee on Flood Control.

639. By the SPEAKER: Petition of Board of Supervisors of Mason County, Ill., requesting that the garden-seed supply be allocated by the Illinois Emergency Relief Commission; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE

SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1933

(Legislative day of Monday, Apr. 17, 1933)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a.m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. BRATTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	La Follette	Robinson, Ind.
Ashurst	Couzens	Lewis	Russell
Austin	Cutting	Logan	Schall
Bachman	Dickinson	Lonergan	Sheppard
Bailey	Dieterich	Long	Shipstead
Bankhead	Duffy	McAdoo	Smith
Barbour	Erickson	McCarran	Steiwer
Barkley	Fletcher	McGill	Stephens
Black	Frazier	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	George	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Borah	Glass	Murphy	Townsend
Bratton	Gore	Neely	Trammell
Brown	Hale	Norbeck	Tydings
Bulow	Harrison	Norris	Vandenberg
Byrd	Hastings	Nye	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hayden	Overton	Wagner
Capper	Hebert	Patterson	Walcott
Caraway	Johnson	Pittman	Walsh
Clark	Kean	Pope	Wheeler
Connally	Kendrick	Reed	White
Coolidge	Keyes	Reynolds
Copeland	King	Robinson, Ark.

Mr. REED. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. DAVIS] is still necessarily detained from the Senate on account of illness.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] is necessarily detained from the Senate. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

THE LATE SENATOR HOWELL, OF NEBRASKA

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a note of appreciation, addressed to the Secretary of the Senate, from Mrs. Alice C. Howell, expressing thanks for flowers sent and courtesies extended by Senators upon the occasion of the death of Hon. Robert B. Howell, late a Senator from the State of Nebraska, which was ordered to lie on the table.

CHAIN STORES: SALES, COSTS, AND PROFITS OF RETAIL CHAINS (S.DOC. NO. 40)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, submitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 224, Seventieth Congress, a report relative to sales, costs, and profits of retail chains, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 6

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to enact legislation to provide pay and allowances for the adjutant general of the Territory of Hawaii

Whereas the act of Congress of June 3, 1916 (ch. 134, sec. 66, 39 Stat. 199), provides for the appointment of the adjutant general of the Territory of Hawaii by the President of the United States of America; and

Whereas the adjutant general of the Territory of Hawaii is an officer of the United States; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America appropriates annually a sum of money for the support of the National Guard of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii, seventeenth regular session (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it hereby is, urgently requested to provide, by appropriate legislation or otherwise, the same pay, subsistence, rentals, and transportation for the adjutant general of the Territory of Hawaii as officers of corresponding grade of the Regular Army are or may be entitled to by law; and be it further

Resolved, That duly authenticated copies of this resolution be transmitted to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii, the Secretary of War of the United States, and each of the two Houses of the Congress of the United States of America.

THE SENATE OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
Honolulu, T.H., April 5, 1933.

We hereby certify that the foregoing concurrent resolution was adopted by the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii on March 31, 1933.

GEO. P. COOKE,
President of the Senate.
ELLEN D. SMYTHE,
Clerk of the Senate.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, April 5, 1933.

We hereby certify that the foregoing concurrent resolution was adopted by the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii on April 5, 1933.

HERBERT N. AHUNA,
Speaker House of Representatives.
EDWARD WOODWARD,
Clerk House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter from Charles M. Thomas, chairman committee on economics, Federation of Civic Associations of the District of Columbia, relative to proposed curtailment of appropriations for the public schools of the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate two petitions signed by 40 citizens of the State of Louisiana, praying for a senatorial investigation of alleged acts and conduct of Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate 2 memorials and 6 letters and 2 telegrams in the nature of memorials, signed by 1,480 citizens of the State of Louisiana, endorsing Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, condemning attacks made upon him, and remonstrating against a senatorial investigation of his alleged acts and conduct, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ASHURST presented the following memorial of the Senate of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Senate Memorial 2

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist, the Senate of the Eleventh Legislature of the State of Arizona, respectfully represents:

Whatever its origin, the economic depression from which the Nation is suffering owes its continued existence to the withdrawal from circulation, for reasons which will not here be reviewed, of a great portion of the national currency and of the various forms of money credit.

This shortage of currency and of money credit must be relieved before prosperity can return.

There must be an expansion of the Nation's circulating mediums of exchange—an expansion which will not increase the burden of taxation.

The bonded debt of the United States, in round figures, is $21,000,000,000, an indebtedness which is costing the taxpayers approximately $1,000,000,000 per annum.

It is withholding from circulation a vast sum of money which otherwise would be invested in employment-making, business-stimulating enterprises.

Wherefore your memorialist urges that the Congress enact legislation (and the submission of a constitutional amendment if necessary) looking to an increase of the national currency in the amount of the national bonded debt; that a date be fixed on which the interest on United States bonds will cease, and that the new currency be employed in the retirement of all such bonds; and your memorialist submits that while saving the taxpayers a billion dollars annually in interest, such action will release the stupendous sum now being hoarded through investment in Government bonds, for investment in lucrative private enterprises, and start into forward motion the endless chain of circulating wealth which inevitably brings prosperity.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

Adopted by the Arizona State Senate Eleventh Legislature, March 12, 1933.

W. J. GRAHAM, Secretary of Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Assembly Joint Resolution 24 relative to memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact a moratorium on foreclosures of real-property mortgages and on sales under deeds of trust on real property

Whereas a period of depression exists in the State of California, throughout the United States, and the world, accompanied by general inability to procure loans from any source; and

Whereas in several States legislation providing temporary relief from foreclosure and sale of homes and farms, subject to a mortgage or deed of trust, has been enacted or proposed; and

Whereas in the present emergency it is imperative that the home and farm owners throughout the United States be afforded adequate relief from foreclosure and sale of their homes and farms subject to a mortgage or deed of trust; and

Whereas it lies within the power of the Congress to enact relief legislation; and

Whereas in various parts of the United States force and intimidation have been and are now being employed to prevent foreclosure of mortgages on real property and sales under deeds of trust on real property: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California most respectfully urges and petitions the special session of the Seventy-third Congress to enact legislation declaring a moratorium in respect to the sale of farms, dwelling houses, and outbuildings, whether on execution, under power of sale contained in a mortgage or deed of trust, or in an action for the recovery of a debt or the enforcement of a right secured by mortgage or other lien; and be it further

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of California requests the honorable Senators and Representatives in the National Congress representing this State in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States to use every honorable means to secure the enactment of such legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly be, and he is hereby, directed to send copies of this resolution to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Member of the Senate and House of Representatives from the State of California.

Mr. JOHNSON also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Assembly Joint Resolution 9, relative to memorializing Congress to adopt legislation with reference to manufacture of arms, munitions, and implements of war

Whereas one of the main causes for the maintenance of large military and naval establishments, and which is a standing menace to peace between nations, is to be found in the fact that patent rights on and the manufacture of arms, munitions, and implements of war are in the hands of international combinations of capitalists, who sell their products indiscriminately to the governments of the world and promote the sale of such products by arousing and encouraging feelings of national prejudice and jealousy and by employing the press and the officers of the Army and Navy to produce periodical war scares in different countries; and

Whereas this menace to international peace can be eliminated and the ultimate disarmament promoted by having the Government manufacture its own equipment and articles used for war purposes: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California earnestly memorializes and petitions Congress to enact legislation to the end that all patent rights for arms, munitions, and other equipment to be used for war purposes should be acquired by the Government; and be it further

Resolved, That in order to obtain international acceptance of the intent and purpose of this resolution we respectfully urge that the President of the United States, by appropriate means, have this subject matter presented at future international disarmament conferences; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is hereby directed to transmit forthwith upon its adoption to the President of the United States and to the Senators and Members of Congress of the State of California.

RELIEF OF UNEMPLOYMENT—GRANTS TO STATES

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask that there may be printed in the body of the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency a telegram which I have just received from the mayor of the city of New York calling attention to the unemployment situation.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, N.Y., April 21, 1933.

Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D.C.:

The city of New York, through its taxpayers and citizens, has responded most generously to the cause of unemployment relief during the past 3 years without stint or reluctance.

The citizens' relief groups and private agencies have expended almost all of their resources and are experiencing difficulty in carrying on this great work.

The city's emergency home- and work-relief operations are caring for over 200,000 families, which is steadily increasing. As a matter of fact, the increase in the number seeking and receiving relief from public funds has increased over 100 percent during the past 4 months. Fifty-five thousand new family applications are being received monthly through the home-relief bureaus. Public-relief expenditures have increased 80 percent during the past 6 months. The usual public relief extended by the city, such as child welfare, veteran relief, care of the blind, dependent children, health, hospitals, etc., is not included. Emergency funds being expended through public agencies, New York City, at the present time is $7,000,000 per month.

Relief to the unemployed has now become a matter of serious concern insofar as the city of New York, and I believe other municipalities, are concerned, and not only is it a matter of assistance to the municipalities from State governments but it is a mandate on the Federal Government to place all resources possible to aid the municipalities. The Lewis-Wagner bill, now before the House and Congress, providing for the appropriation by the Federal Government of $500,000,000, should be expedited and enacted into law at the earliest moment, and I would suggest the following amendments:

The bill provides that $250,000,000 shall be made in grants to States and municipalities on a 1-to-3 basis. I would respectfully recommend that the bill be amended to have the grants to States made on a 1-to-2 basis. This amendment would give the State and city of New York a better opportunity for the raising of its funds through taxation.

JOHN P. O'BRIEN, Mayor.

Mr. WAGNER presented a telegram from Hon. John P. O'Brien, mayor of the city of New York, identical with the above telegram presented by Mr. COPELAND, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

6-HOUR DAY, 5-DAY WEEK—DETROIT REFERENDUM

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a copy of the initiatory petition to the council of the city of Detroit referendum to vote in that city on the 30-hour week for motormen, conductors, and coach operators of the department of street railways.

I desire to call attention to the fact that the petition was circulated January 18, 1933, and 48 hours later sufficient signatures were obtained. On January 21 there were 16,500 signatures on the petition. On January 25 the council placed it upon the ballot; on March 6 it was voted upon, and the vote for the ordinance was 51,941 and against the ordinance 26,747.

There being no objection, the referendum petition was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INITIATORY PETITION

To the honorable the Common Council of the City of Detroit:

We, the undersigned, being qualified electors of the city of Detroit, respectfully present this initiative petition and pray that the proposed ordinance hereinafter set forth be adopted by your honorable body and in case it shall not be so adopted petitioners further pray that it be submitted to a vote of the electors of the city pursuant to the provisions of sections 1 to 9 of chapter II, title III, of the charter of the city of Detroit. The proposed ordinance is as follows, to wit:

An ordinance to relieve unemployment of motormen and conductors and coach operators of the department of street railways of the city of Detroit by limiting the weekly hours of work and sharing available work.

It is ordained by the people of the city of Detroit:

SECTION 1. Motormen and conductors and coach operators employed by the department of street railways of the city of Detroit shall work not to exceed 30 hours each week and shall be paid on an hourly basis.

The purpose and substance of the ordinance is:

To share available work amongst motormen, conductors, and coach operators of the department of street railways of the city of Detroit by adoption of 30-hour-week limitation with pay on an hourly basis.

This petition was circulated on January 18, 1933, and so strong was public sentiment that 48 hours later sufficient signatures were obtained.

On January 21, 16,500 signatures were filed with the city clerk—over 3,500 more than the legal requirements.

On January 25 the common council placed it upon the ballot, at the primary election on March 6, 1933, and on that day the people voted 2 to 1 in favor of it.

Official vote

For the ordinance	51,941
Against the ordinance	26,747

The election was certified on March 14, 1933. City Clerk R. W. Reading declared the ordinance to be law, and effective from March 22, 1933. (See Legal News of Mar. 22, 1933.)

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask that there be printed in the RECORD, following the statement of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], a letter which I have received from the mayor of Mishawaka, Ind., in reference to the Black bill.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITY OF MISHAWAKA, IND., April 18, 1933.

Hon. ROYAL S. COPELAND,
United States Senator, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: It is my recollection that you voted for the Black 30-hour week bill when it was before the Senate.

As mayor of this city, I beg to call your attention to the fact that on March 1 of this year the 6-hour day, 5-day week plan was inaugurated in our street department, in which we employ over 50 men regularly and at times have as many as 150 extra.

So satisfactory have we found this plan that we recently extended it to the park and golf departments, and we are contemplating its extension to the water and electric departments. We find that the men make more money and do far more efficient work for the city in the 6-hour day than under the "staggering" system.

It is the writer's observation that President Roosevelt is desirous of establishing a minimum wage in connection with the 30-hour week. The wage scale to which we have steadfastly adhered allows 50 cents an hour for common labor.

It is because we believe in this plan that I am writing to commend you for the position you have taken in regard to the labor problem in this crisis, and to cite an example of the practical working, especially in municipal life, of the plan.

With assurance of my high personal regard, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

MASON L. PETRO, Mayor.

FOREIGN DOLLAR BONDS INTEREST PAYMENTS ON WHICH ARE IN DEFAULT

Mr. FLETCHER presented a statement of the American Council of Foreign Bondholders, Max Winkler, president, New York City, entitled "Foreign Dollar Bonds Interest Payments on Which Are in Default", which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(Letter No. 26)

NEW YORK CITY, April 19, 1933.

FOREIGN DOLLAR BONDS INTEREST PAYMENTS ON WHICH ARE IN DEFAULT

PART III

Without any immediate prospects of a turn, the tide of default, which commenced in January 1931, still flows on, the latest item on the list being an issue of the Colombian Agricultural Mortgage Bank, interest on which should have been paid on April 15. News of another interest payment, missed by the same bank on the 1st of the month, came too late for inclusion in our last bulletin.

No explicit statement has been made regarding default on the Colombian Government's 6-percent bonds, but bondholders have been officially warned that it will surely be incurred unless the conflict with Peru ends speedily. However, the market took a decidedly hopeful view of this situation and advanced prices 7 points in the first 8 days of the current month, which was, perhaps, unduly optimistic, especially with regard to the January bonds, which now carry 3½ months' accrued interest.

Classification of 136 defaulted loans under heads of their respective listings shows that 78 percent of the total outstanding principal amount is for loans listed on the New York Stock Exchange; 10½ percent is for listings by the curb association; and 11½ percent is for unlisted bonds. But this ratio is changed if current market valuations are substituted. In this case we find 82 percent stock-exchange listings, 10½ percent curb, and 7½ percent unlisted.

At least 136 bond issues, on which one and a half billion dollars are outstanding, are now in default with regard to interest payments. No attempt has been made to pile on the agony. The number of issues in default can easily be increased to 150 if the several offerings of one loan were to be counted singly, as they are in some cases by the stock exchange. Certain bond issues, on which default is imminent, are not included.

Lows for all time were mostly recorded in 1932, but in some instances pertain to 1931 or 1933. A few cases in which phenomenally low prices were paid for bonds onerated by accrued interest, which the market knew would be defaulted on the next coupon date, have received special treatment in this review by addition of 2 or 3 points to the quotation since, evidently, the buyer of a bond for $20, plus $30 accrued interest scheduled for default, is really paying $50.

Current values for bonds which have not been sold for weeks, and for which the market quotation shows a spread of 10, 15, or more points, are not readily estimated, but such bonds generally belong to groups which have lately shown a trend indicating whether the true current market is nearer the bid or the offering price.

All figures are represented as approximate, but the picture shown, as of the first week in April 1933 is believed to be fairly accurate and usefully informative:

New York listings	Outstanding	Market valuation		Issues
		Low	Current
Stock exchange	$1,175,274,700	$103,403,250	$168,995,730	87
Curb association	153,309,000	11,065,940	21,466,570	21
Unlisted	170,472,800	11,634,800	15,521,290	28
Total	1,499,056,500	126,103,990	205,983,590	136

Total current market value of the bonds, although only 13½ percent of par, is now nearly 65 percent over the aggregate of lows. Since little improvement in the economic conditions of defaulting countries has been registered, this more favorable rating must be attributed to a sensible realization by the market that former valuations were absurdly low and were inspired by a panicky feeling here. Moreover, since many of the inherently bad risks are still priced as low as ever, the average appreciation of the better class defaulted bonds has been much more than 65 percent. The market rating still needs adjustment, but it is closer to intrinsic values than it was last year.

Of the total outstanding, $462,392,300, or 31 percent, is for Europe and $1,036,664,200, or 69 percent, for America, but it should be remembered in this connection that the 3 Kreuger and 2 Russian loans account for $219,006,000 of the European quota.

Current market value of defaulted foreign bonds listed on the New York Stock Exchange, namely $168,995,730, compares with $4,886,594,458, the official compilation of current market value of all foreign bonds so listed. This is less than 3½ percent, and has been instrumental in reducing the average price of the stock exchange totals to 61.24 for foreign government bonds and 51.73 for foreign company bonds.

Only two foreign bond issues in default, listed on the stock exchange, exceed $10,000,000 in current outstanding market value, namely, Vienna 6's of 1952 and Brazil 6½'s of 1926–57, although 39 of the 87 listed issues in default are outstanding in over $10,000,000 principal amount.

Defaulted stock exchange issues declined to 9 percent of par, and have since risen to 14½ percent. Curb foreign bonds in default fell to 7½ percent and recovered to 14 percent. Unlisted defaulted issues dropped to 7 percent and rose afterwards to 9 percent.

Current market value of the defaulted curb bonds exceeds that of the unlisted bonds by 38 percent, although there are 28 unlisted issues in default and only 21 curb issues, the outstanding par value of which is considerably lower.

A large proportion of the foreign defaulted bonds listed on the New York Stock Exchange is quoted daily in the morning and evening newspapers; a smaller proportion of those listed on the curb also receive this publicity, but the market prices of unlisted bonds can be ascertained only by tiresome inquiry for each issue by name. Even so, conflicting reports are given by different authorities, and actual sales effected are generally unobtainable.

Since few investors are familiar with statistics of the unlisted foreign bond market, the following particulars of 28 loans in default may be of interest:

Number and bond issues	Nationality	Outstanding
2 (corporate)	Swedish	$96,409,500
7 (4 banking and 3 corporate)	Hungarian	18,435,500
5 (2 provincial and 3 municipal)	Brazilian	16,200,800
6 (1 provincial, 3 municipal, and 2 banking)	Colombian	10,405,900
1 (national)	Greek	9,405,900
1 (national)	Salvadoran	9,008,100
2 (1 provincial and 1 municipal)	Argentine	4,804,500
1 (corporate)	Costa Rican	1,700,000
1 (banking)	Panamanian	1,447,500
1 (national)	Bolivian	1,296,000
1 (provincial)	Peruvian	1,189,000
Total principal amount outstanding		170,472,800

Recently, the current market value of these bonds was $15,521,290, of which $7,229,720 pertains to the Swedish Match loans and $2,394,000 to the Greek Government loan, leaving only $5,897,570 for the remaining 25 bond issues.

However, this small sum of less than $6,000,000 represents at least $60,000,000 paid in cash by American investors, and is deserving of such protection as might be afforded by listing somewhere.

Wars in South America are still playing havoc with government revenues which should be available for dollar bond service. The Sellier & Bellot Munition Co., of Czechoslovakia, declared a 20-percent dividend on April 10. Is that where our money is going?

The market now esteems Austrian defaulted bonds highly, and is somewhat better inclined than it was toward Hungarians, but Yugoslavia is entirely out of favor. It hardly seems possible that a 7-percent consolidated municipal bond of Hungary should be worth as much as two 7-percent national government bonds of Yugoslavia.

It is, to a certain extent, possible to account for the seeming discrepancy. Coupons of Austrian obligations, including provincial municipal, and corporate issues, may be cashed rather freely with representatives of important central European, including Austrian, financial institutions, at approximately 75 percent of the face value.

The market for coupons on Hungarian bonds varies between 35 and 45 percent of the face value, and even at these levels it is not always easy to effect transactions. While the cashing of coupons on Yugoslav bonds has not as yet been reported, the council learns, on good authority, that offers ranging up to 40 percent of the face value of the coupons in question have been made.

AMERICAN COUNCIL OF FOREIGN BONDHOLDERS, INC.,
MAX WINKLER, President.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF THE PUBLIC LANDS COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. KENDRICK, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, reported favorably the following nominations, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar:

Theodore A. Walters, of Idaho, to be First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, vice Joseph M. Dixon; and

Thomas F. Thomas, of Utah, to be register of the land office at Salt Lake City, Utah, vice Eli F. Taylor.

BILLS AND A JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

A bill (S. 1503) to provide for the redistribution of the overbalance of population in industrial centers by aiding in the purchase of subsistence homesteads, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 1504) for the relief of Walter J. Bryson Paving Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STEIWER:

A bill (S. 1505) for the relief of Thomas E. Reed; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1506) to amend the United States mining laws applicable to the Mount Hood National Forest within the State of Oregon; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

A bill (S. 1507) for the relief of J. A. Tippit, L. P. Hudson, Chester Howe, J. E. Arnold, Joseph W. Gillette, J. S. Bounds, W. N. Vernon, T. B. Sullivan, J. H. Neill, David C. McCallib, J. J. Beckham, and John Toles; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1508) providing for the final enrollment of the Indians of the Klamath Indian Reservation in the State of Oregon; and

A bill (S. 1509) to credit the Klamath Indian tribal funds with certain amounts heretofore covered into the Treasury for reimbursement of appropriations; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 1510) to amend the act entitled "An act to adjust water-right charges, to grant other relief on the Federal irrigation projects, and for other purposes", approved May 25, 1926, with respect to certain lands in the Langell Valley irrigation district; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

A bill (S. 1511) granting a pension to Mary E. Allen (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BONE:

A bill (S. 1512) to authorize acquisition of complete title to the Puyallup Indian Tribal School property at Tacoma, Wash., for Indian sanatorium purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 45) to authorize an appropriation of $10,000 for the expenses of participation by the United States in the Seventh International Congress of Military Medicine and Pharmacy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE TENNESSEE VALLEY—AMENDMENT

Mr. NORRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to Senate bill 1272, the Muscle Shoals and Tennessee Valley development bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE—AMENDMENTS RELATIVE TO THE CURRENCY

Mr. PATTERSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the so-called "Thomas amendment" to House bill 3835, the farm relief bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. HAYDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the amendment proposed by Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma to House bill 3835, the farm relief bill, which s ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be nted in the RECORD, as follows:

)n page 6, lines 1 and 2, to strike out the figures "$100,000,000" l insert in lieu thereof "$250,000,000."

)n page 6, line 6, after the word "ounce", to strike out the iod, insert a semicolon and the following words: "but no such rment shall be accepted unless such government gives assur- e, satisfactory to the President, that it will not melt or debase own coins to make such payment in silver."

)n page 8, after line 7, to insert the following as a new agraph:

(g) Whenever the Government of the United States and one more foreign governments have agreed to measures for stabiliz- the price of silver, the Secretary of the Treasury, in his dis- tion, is authorized to sell silver now or hereafter deposited in Treasury, or to purchase silver with silver certificates issued in same manner as is provided in this section, for the purpose of isting in the maintenance of such stabilized price."

RELIEF OF UNEMPLOYMENT—AMENDMENT

Mr. HAYDEN submitted an amendment intended to be)posed by him to the bill (H.R. 4606) to provide for co- eration by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, ordered to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 8, after line 5, to insert the following new section:

"SEC. 8. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to make available out of the funds of the Corporation not to exceed $50,000,000, to be used by the Administrator for the purchase of wheat which shall be delivered to the American National Red Cross, to be used for the purposes and in the manner provided in the joint resolution entitled 'Joint resolution authorizing the distribution of Government-owned wheat and cotton to the American National Red Cross and other organizations for relief of distress', approved July 5, 1932. The amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered under section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, to have outstanding at any one time is increased by $50,000,000."

On page 8, line 6, strike out "8" and insert "9."

CONDITIONS IN CUBA

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the situation in Cuba has assumed a serious aspect. A number of Senators, including the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], have recently challenged the attention to the tragic conditions existing in Cuba. More than a year ago I presented to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of State memoranda, in which I discussed the confused and dangerous situation in Cuba, and also presented my views as to what course should be pursued in order to avert revolution. I was opposed to intervention, but believed that the situation was so perilous that a certain course should be taken to avert the coming conflagration. I deem it not improper—indeed, at the present moment entirely proper—to have the communication to the President inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

OCTOBER 9, 1930.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am deeply concerned with the recent trend of events in Cuba. My interest is not of recent origin but dates from a visit paid to Cuba in 1897 at the request of some of my colleagues in the House of Representatives. The Cubans had revolted against the authority of Spain, and the question was being discussed in Congress as to whether the United States would recognize the belligerency of the insurgents, intervene, or maintain neutrality. Under General Weyler shocking brutalities had been committed and the situation in Cuba was most tragic. Widespread starvation existed throughout the island, and the revolution brought a train of sorrows and evils which cannot be described.

After spending weeks in the war-stricken section of Cuba, I returned and reported conditions to my colleagues. With the aid of the United States Cuba was soon liberated from Spanish supremacy and the Cuban people thereafter established a republican form of government.

Since that time, as I have just stated, I have been deeply interested in Cuba and the Cuban people. Sometime prior to the election of General Machado in the year 1924, the Cuban Government, with the aid of the United States, prepared a measure which was later enacted into law, designated as the Crowder Electoral Code, the purpose of which was to secure a free and untrammeled exercise of the right of suffrage by the Cuban people in order that they might better maintain the representative form of government contemplated by the Cuban Constitution of 1901. This constitution, like our own, created an executive, a legislative, and a judicial branch of government, with specific and clearly defined powers.

General Machado was elected in November 1924, upon a platform pledged to a free and unrestricted right to the exercise of suffrage by the Cuban people. On December 20, 1925, 6 months after his inauguration, he caused to be enacted by the Cuban Congress a bill suspending the Crowder Electoral Code until the year 1928, thus removing many of the safeguards provided for in said code to insure honest and fair elections. This law, among other things, provided:

(a) For the repeal of article 287 of said code;

(b) It forbade the reorganization of the existing three parties or the creating of new parties, except under the most impossible conditions;

(c) The pre-empting of the powers of the delegates to party conventions and lodging all of such powers in the executive committees of such three existing parties, as therein provided for, and abolishing primary elections.

Article 287 of the Crowder Code prohibited members of congress, persons holding public office or in the employ of the government, from acting as delegates, except where they were specifically elected by the people. This obviously salutary provision of the Crowder Code having been repealed by the act of December 20, 1925, members of congress and those enjoying public office under the Machado regime immediately assumed control of the executive committees of the three existing parties, and as a consequence thereof the entire political machinery of the government was brought under the complete domination and control of President Machado.

Under such circumstances Machado, on June 21, 1927, submitted to the Cuban Congress a project for the amendment of the constitution of 1901. This project was passed by both houses of congress, approved by the President, and published in the Official Gazette on the same day that it was submitted, to wit, June 21, 1927. The bill, as passed by congress, provided for the holding of a constitutional convention approximately 7 months after the passage and approval of the act.

This project for constitutional change so enacted by the Cuban Congress provided, among other things, for—

(a) The extension of the presidential term of office from 4 to 6 years, with no reelection, and the proroguing of President Machado's tenure for an additional period of 2 years.

(b) Abolition of the office of vice president.

(c) Increasing the membership of the senate from 24 to 36 members.

(d) Proroguing the tenure of the 24 incumbents for periods of 2 and 4 years and providing that thereafter senators shall be elected for a period of 9 years, rather than 6 years, as provided in the constitution of 1901.

(e) Extending the terms of office of the members of the house from 4 to 6 years, proroguing of the tenure of the incumbents for a period of 2 additional years.

(f) Proroguing the term of office of the incumbent provincial governors, provincial councils, municipal mayors and councils, and members of the boards of education, except the mayor and council of the city of Habana, which was to be federalized.

Delegates to the constitutional convention to be held pursuant to the above provisions were selected by the executive committees, which, as I have before stated, were largely, if not completely, composed of members of the house and senate of the Machado regime. This act aroused the opposition of a very substantial element of the Cuban people theretofore affiliated with the three existing parties, and since no reorganization of the said parties was permitted under the act of December 20, 1925, these citizens of Cuba organized the Union Nationalista Party, which organization undertook to hold meetings for the purpose of perfecting the party organization and placing candidates in the field for election as delegates to the constitutional convention. The meetings, the evidence shows, were repeatedly broken up and dispersed by the military forces and all efforts of the members of this organization to carry out their purpose were completely frustrated. Thereafter pretended elections were held, resulting in the alleged election of delegates to the constitutional convention, all of whom had been theretofore selected by the said executive committees of the three existing parties. The convention so constituted was thereupon convened.

Article 115 of title XIV of the Cuban Constitution of 1901 contains the following unusual provision:

"The constitution shall not be amended in whole or in part except by a resolution adopted by two thirds of the total number of members of each colegislative body.

"Six months after an amendment has been agreed upon, a constitutional convention shall be convened, the duties whereof shall be limited to either approving or rejecting the amendment voted by the colegislative bodies, which latter shall continue in the performance of their duties with absolute independence of the convention.

"Delegates to the said convention shall be elected by each province in the proportion of 1 for every 50,000 inhabitants and in the manner that may be provided by law."

It will be observed from the foregoing provisions that the constitutional convention was limited to either the approval or rejection of the amendments submitted by the Cuban Congress. Notwithstanding this provision, however, the constitutional convention, in pursuance of the public statement made by President Machado some 4 days before the convention met, proceeded to and did entirely change the provisions of the measure submitted by the Cuban Congress. Among the many changes so made was one which permitted the reelection of President Machado for a period of 6 years at the ensuing election of 1928. The action of the constitutional assembly was duly promulgated by President Machado without submission to the people.

President Machado then caused the Cuban Congress to pass a second measure further suspending the Crowder Electoral Code, and this measure, like the previous one, among other things, prevented the reorganization of the existing three parties, the centralization of the power of the said political organizations in the executive committees thereof, and the elimination of party conventions. Thereupon the said existing three parties, acting through their executive committees, proceeded to nominate President Machado for reelection as the alleged unanimous choice of the said three parties. At this point the Union Nationalista organization again attempted to perfect a political organization, only to be met with the same opposition, their meetings being broken up and dispersed by the military forces and the headquarters of the organization was placed under the control of a squad of soldiers.

Under these circumstances the election of November 1, 1928, was held, and although I am reliably informed that not more than 5 percent of the qualified voters cast their ballots at this election, the Machado organization reported that President Machado had been reelected by a large majority of the Cuban people. The effect of this pretended election was to maintain President Machado in power for a further term of 6 years, nowithstanding the fact that the constitution of 1901 specifically provided that the presidential term should be for a term of 4 years and that no person could hold office for more than two consecutive terms.

Inasmuch as the action of the constitutional convention was clearly in violation of the constitution of 1901, it is patent that President Machado's reelection on November 1, 1928, was in violation of the fundamental laws of the Republic, and that by reason thereof the Machado government is not and cannot be held to be, under any conceivable theory, a duly constituted government within the duly accepted meaning of this term.

It is quite evident, from a most dispassionate consideration of the policies pursued by Machado since his advent to office, that he has been actuated by but one obvious purpose, namely, to perpetuate himself in power, and to accomplish this he has subverted the entire scheme of constitutional, representative government contemplated by and provided for in the constitution of 1901.

Machado's arrogation of power has appeared to be without limit. The functions of the legislative and judicial branches of the Government have been exercised through presidential decrees contrary to the express provisions of the constitution and the Organic Act of 1909.

A large military organization has been created and maintained that has consumed from 20 to 25 percent of the total national revenue, while at the same time vitally necessary activities of the Government, such as public health, sanitation, education, and agriculture have been neglected.

External loans have been negotiated entailing the imposition of extremely burdensome taxes upon a people already overtaxed. These loans have been made ostensibly to carry forward so-called "public-works projects", many of which, however, were nonessential, such as the new capitol building that, to date, has required an expenditure of a sum in excess of $20,000,000.

Cuba, with the end of the first half of the current fiscal year, will have an accumulated deficit of some $50,000,000, with no possible means of liquidation, and a rapidly descending revenue under budgetary estimates.

The right of free speech and lawful assembly have been abolished, and a government adequate for the protection of life, liberty, and property, as contemplated by the Platt amendment and the subsisting treaty with the United States, is no longer existent. Labor has been denied the right of organization and the wages of the laborer reduced to a starvation level largely as the result of governmental interference.

This situation was brought to the attention of the American public by an investigation conducted by the American Federation of Labor officials as far back as 1927, and subsequently confirmed by numerous impartial investigations, such as that conducted by William English Walling as set forth in an article appearing in the May issue of Current History of this year, and of Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart, of Harvard University, in an article set forth in the January issue of Current History of this year, and by the Foreign Policy Association in an extensive report published in 1929.

President Machado, as shown by the investigations just mentioned and repeatedly confirmed to me by members of the Cuban Congress, has been able to bring about this dictatorship by the diversion of a very substantial portion of the revenues of the national lottery, amounting to several millions of dollars annually, and by the ruthless employment of the military forces of the nation as an instrumentality of intimidation and coercion. He now proposes to further perpetuate his unconstitutional regime by the oncoming election of November 1 next, at which time there will be elected two thirds of the membership of the Senate for a period of 9 years and one half of the membership of the House of Representatives for a period of 6 years. On the information which has come to me from numerous reliable sources, I am convinced that this pretended election is opposed by the vast majority of the voters of Cuba, who are prevented from expressing their will by virtue of the illegal acts of the Machado regime hereinbefore referred to. It is this situation that has precipitated the recent alarming disturbances that have occurred in the island. In my opinion, our Government has not been fully advised as to the deplorable conditions in Cuba, nor has it had cognizance of the tyranny and oppression of the Machado regime and of the methods employed by Machado to suppress liberty and to bring the people under his despotic rule. As I have indicated, there is no freedom of speech or of the press. Any criticism of the Machado administration is prohibited, newspapers are suppressed, and those who have spoken in favor of constitutional government have been driven from the island or have been imprisoned. In my opinion, the Machado government would have been overthrown some time ago had it not been for the feeling fostered by Machado that he was supported by the United States and that the military arm of the latter would protect his administration.

The relation of the United States to Cuba because of the provisions of the Platt amendment is unique and somewhat extraordinary. If it were not for these provisions there would be no duty resting upon the United States to interfere in the domestic affairs of Cuba. The United States has intervened upon two different occasions since 1903, basing its intervention upon what were construed to be obligations arising under the Platt amendment. If there is any obligation upon the United States to maintain in Cuba a government "adequate for the protection of life, liberty, and property", then it would seem that when a situation exists such as we find in Cuba today—a condition under which there is no liberty and where a despotic and tyrannous dictatorship is regnant—the United States should, at least, indicate that it is not giving encouragement to or support of such despotic rule and would look with disfavor upon any policy destructive of constitutional government and which denies liberty and justice to the Cuban people.

Indeed, it might and perhaps should go farther, in view of the transcendent importance of the election called for November 1, 1930, and indicate that it does not approve of any plan which designed to frustrate the will of the people and deny them the right to select and vote for persons to represent them in the Cuban Congress.

In my opinion, if the people of Cuba were permitted to hold a free and fair election in November next and were given to understand that the United States would not intervene to perpetuate the Machado regime, the revolutionary movement now gaining headway would subside and peace would be restored. However, with martial law prevailing, constitutional guaranties suspended, the people subjected to intimidation and terror, men of influence and standing in whom the people have confidence imprisoned or driven into exile, and the freedom of speech and the press destroyed or denied, a free and fair election is not possible, and forces will be created that will culminate in revolution.

I had the honor, upon a number of occasions, to invite the attention of your predecessor and of the State Department to the unsatisfactory conditions in Cuba, and took the liberty of suggesting that the confidence placed in Machado was not justified, and the more than friendly support, moral and otherwise, given him by this Government would strengthen his ambitions for power and eventuate in a train of evils which might involve the United States. The rule of Machado will inevitably result in social and political disturbances ending in revolution. A revolution in Cuba would be most unfortunate. It would result in the loss of life and the destruction of property and would add to the woes now visited upon the Cuban people.

Cordially and sincerely,

WILLIAM H. KING.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

PROPOSED EMBARGO ON MUNITIONS SHIPMENTS

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD statements of members of the Foreign Relations Committee, appearing in the Washington Herald of April 19, in reference to the arms-embargo resolution, House Joint Resolution 93, which is now before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

I also ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter from John Bassett Moore to Representative FISH; also an editorial from the Washington Herald of April 19, 1933, regarding the same resolution.

Mr. President, this resolution involves three grave consequences:

First. It involves the constitutional question of Congress delegating its war-making power to the Executive.

Second. It involves the violation of our Federal policy of neutrality.

Third. It is, in effect, an authorization of intervention in a conflict between nations.

Judge Moore points out that a country that ships arms and munitions of war to one country, while denying such shipments to another, is by international law an actual participant in war on the side of the country to which it sends munitions.

It is an act of intervention which denies neutrality. In other words, we have declared ourselves a party to the war, and are involved in that war and subject ourselves to the retaliatory attacks of the country which we seek to penalize.

In passing such resolution, therefore, the jurist finds we are abandoning our American policy of neutrality set up by Washington and Jefferson. We are jeopardizing our Monroe Doctrine. We are authorizing "entangling alliances." We make ourselves the cat's-paw of Great Britain, which urges this neutrality violation on us without daring to do itself what it asks of us. We, in fact, give the Executive a carte blanche to involve us in war under the pretense of aiding peace. We pass to the Executive the war power which the Constitution granted Congress. We become a rubber stamp, and abdicate our sworn duty as representatives of the people to protect their sons from war.

Even a party majority in full power does well to think twice before committing the country to an international policy condemned by our leading jurist as an abandonment alike of the neutrality law of nations and the American policy since Washington.

There is another phase of the question which we who sit in this Chamber may do well to consider. I refer to present cloak of concealment of facts, and the likely public charge that we are passing a resolution under false pretenses.

As I called attention here on March 3, 1933, during the past 15 months we exported to Japan alone over $100,000,000 worth of war materials to be converted over there into arms and ammunition—though we shipped in 1932 to all countries, Japan included, only a paltry $1,668,000 worth of finished arms and ammunitions, subject to the proposed resolution.

War powers have their own gun and munition plants. What they want of us is the raw or semimanufactured materials.

It is the weak country, the people without gun and munition plants, that need arms and ammunition.

This resolution puts us in the position of helping the war power, while choking the weak country and making it a prey to war of conquest—the very thing that is now happening with Wall Street financing the deal with "dollar bonds" and war supplies, and London and Paris as partners in the spoils.

American branch banks in Japan and Manchuria, and Japanese branch banks in Wall Street, are handling the business—while we pass the whitewash brush called an "embargo" on arms to protect the peace of the world.

American branch factories and utilities, with a direct capital investment of $60,000,000 in Japan—as revealed by the Commerce Department—are doubtless at this moment busy converting American materials shipped to Japan into arms and munitions for Japanese warfare, while employing Japanese labor.

The "dollar bond" issues of Japan to the amount of nearly $400,000,000, floated by American private bankers and trust companies, are listed on the New York Stock Exchange to invite American investors to be partners of Japan in its war of conquest. You may read the quotations on these Jap "dollar bonds" in your morning and evening paper.

This resolution is the whitewash brush. We pose for peace by making Congress do the whitewash act. We pose for peace, while all our financial activity is in aid of war. Then we turn over to the Executive the constitutional franchise, delegated to us by the founding fathers, and thereafter have nothing to say.

If this resolution is passed it will develop some job in explaining to our constituents the abdication of our congressional responsibility. It seems to me the old way is preferable to the new—to refuse to "pass the buck" of responsibility under the Constitution—to refuse to depart from the neutrality doctrine of America—to make no excuses, because we will then have nothing to excuse. A plain statement of the facts is better any time than concealment.

We will not have to say that we passed a "peace resolution" and then shipped 90 percent of our export lead to Japan to conquer China; that we "ducked" our constitutional duty and gave the President power to send our sons to war.

Prohibition of the shipment of arms to filibustering parties, financed by private capital such as Wall Street, would be justifiable. Such power, however, already resides in the Executive, it appears, as when the Government in our early history stopped an alleged filibustering expedition supposed to have been undertaken by Aaron Burr.

But the joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 93, which passed the House and is now before the Senate, does not deal with private individuals or expeditions, but with "a dispute or conflict between nations."

It prohibits at the President's pleasure shipments of "arms or munitions of war from any place in the United States to such country or countries."

It deals with warring "countries" and not with private parties or filibusters.

And on that, our leading international jurist, John Bassett Moore, plainly tells Congress:

> The prohibition of the neutral government itself to supply arms and munitions of war is based upon the unquestionable fact that the supply of such articles to a fighting force is a direct contribution to its military resources, and as such is a participation in the war; and, if a government does this, it virtually commits an act of war.

Listen again to Jurist Moore, in direct reference to the resolution now before the Senate:

> The pending resolution is, I do not hesitate to affirm, opposed to the settled policy and the highest interests of the United States, also to the provisions of our Federal Constitution.

This resolution is based on the League of Nations' so-called theory of "war to end war." The League of Nations dares not put into practice its own theory, but says: "Let Uncle Sam do it."

Great Britain dares not itself violate the neutrality law of history by adopting this embargo, but says: "Let Washington do it."

And the White House says: "O.K., if we can make Congress responsible for the act."

Congress, therefore, is to authorize the United States to adopt the League of Nations policy of "war to end war", which the League dares not enforce itself. We are to be the blind tools of Great Britain and authorize intervention in "conflict between nations", which Great Britain has not the courage or candor to undertake.

We are to do this against the neutrality policy of 140 years of American history. We are to authorize "foreign entanglements" against the warnings of Washington and Jefferson. We are to desert our sworn fealty to the Constitution to serve the League, to which we do not belong, and to serve Great Britain, from whom we declared our independence in order to become a nation.

Is American neutrality a thing of the past, as now in effect declared? Is the Constitution dead, as between Wall Street and London? Furthermore, is the Constitution dead as between Congress and the people of the United States?

Finally, is this a clever ruse to commit us to the League and its allied powers in fact, though not in name, by a joint resolution of Congress supporting the League's basic creed of "war to end war"—with the United States authorizing the policy of war under a cloak of peace?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota to print in the RECORD the papers referred to by him.

There being no objection, the papers were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JOHNSON OPENS FIGHT TODAY ON ARMS EMBARGO—ROBINSON OF INDIANA AND LEWIS TO JOIN DETERMINED DRIVE TO PREVENT SENATE ACTION

A small but determined group in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday prepared for a finish fight against the administration's arms-embargo resolution.

The battle will start today, when the measure, which already has passed the House, comes up for consideration in the committee.

JOHNSON TO LEAD

The fight will be led by Senator HIRAM JOHNSON, Republican, of California, who has support of Senator LEWIS, Democrat, of Illinois, and Senator ARTHUR R. ROBINSON, Republican, of Indiana.

ROBINSON said:

"This confers an extraordinary power on the President of the United States. It is a power never given to a President in our history.

"Even in this day of dictators no dictator has the absolute power to declare war or peace. I will fight this proposition because I believe it will involve us in war and I do so without consideration of the political party to which the President belongs."

LEWIS PREDICTS WAR

LEWIS said:

"I am against it. I fought it before the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate when it was first considered here.

"I am unwilling that other countries should have the power to dictate to the United States, particularly when the warring nations can involve us in matters which are of no concern to us.

"Warring nations should not be permitted to have the power to interfere with the orderly shipment of supplies by this Nation. The proposed embargo power would surely lead us into wars."

NEW YORK, N.Y., March 27, 1933.

The Honorable HAMILTON FISH, Jr., M.C.,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. FISH: Although I am unable to appear at the hearing on the so-called "arms-embargo resolution" on March 28, I feel it to be my duty to write you a few lines on the subject. I will first state the objection to the proposed measure as it stands, and will then point out how it may readily be made to conform to international law.

It will soon be 20 years since the outbreak in Europe of what eventually became known as the "World War." Following that unfortunate event there developed, in the ordinary course of things, a war madness, manifested in the exaltation of force, and the belittling of the enduring legal and moral obligations which lie at the foundation of civilized life. Peaceful processes fell into disrepute. We began to hear of the "war to end war"; and pacifists, enamored of this shibboleth, espoused the shallow creed that international peace could best be assured by the use of force or threats of force. We were told that preexisting international law had suddenly become obsolete, and that the world had entered upon a new era in which the general tranquillity was to be maintained by "sanctions", by boycotts, and by war. But the final stage was reached in the spawning of the notion, now rampant, that peoples may with force and arms exterminate one another without breach of the peace, so long as they do not call it war. This may appropriately be called the stage of bedlam. In all this, however, students of history will find nothing new. The development of such manias normally characterizes the progress of a great war, just as their decline marks the return to sanity.

To the final stage to which I have referred belongs the supposition that the law of neutrality no longer exists, and that in future there will be no more neutrals. It is on this theory that the proposed resolution is essentially based. It is true that the resolution does not in terms say so; and it is equally true that less is just now said about this phase of the subject than was said not long ago. But it is only on this theory that the sweeping terms of the resolution can be defended.

As a lifelong student and administrator of international law, I do not hesitate to declare the supposition that neutrality is a thing of the past to be unsound in theory and false in fact. There is not in the world today a single government that is acting upon such a supposition. Governments are acting upon the contrary supposition, and in so doing are merely recognizing the actual fact. In the winter of 1922–23, there was held at The Hague an international conference to make rules for the regulation of the activities of aircraft and radio in time of war. The parties to this conference were the United States, France, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, and the Netherlands. I had the honor to represent the United States in the conference and to be chosen to preside over it. We were able in the end to reach a unanimous agreement, which was incorporated in a general report. An examination of this report will show that it was largely devoted to the definition of the rights and duties of belligerents and of neutrals in time of war, and that it treated as still existing the Land War Neutrality Convention, the Convention for the Adaptation of the Geneva Convention to Maritime Warfare, and the Convention Concerning Neutral Rights and Duties in Maritime Warfare, all made at The Hague in 1907. The conference by which the report was adopted took place more than 2 years after the making of the Versailles Treaty and the Covenant of the League of Nations; the various delegations, it should be needless to state, acted under the authority and instructions of their respective governments; and yet the idea that the law of neutrality had become obsolete never was suggested. So far as I am aware, not a single party to the Versailles Treaty or a single member of the League of Nations has ever actually taken the position that the law of neutrality is a thing of the past. The principal powers in the League have on occasion taken precisely the opposite position. The fact is notorious that, after the Greeks were egged on to make war on the Turks and war actually came, Great Britain decided to remain neutral in the conflict, into which Canada and perhaps some of the other self-government Dominions unequivocally announced that they would not be drawn without their consent. In other recent wars Great Britain has pursued a neutral course. Other governments have done the same thing. No government, so far as I am advised, has repealed its neutrality laws. Those of the United States still remain on the statute books; and, if they are to be repealed, it should be done directly and not by implication or by embarking on a lawless course in the name of peace.

We hear much today of the duties of the United States as a "world power", and the supposition seems widely to prevail that we have only lately reached that eminence. I am too good an American to think so poorly of my country and its achievements. The United States has always been a world power. It acted as a world power when, on the outbreak of the wars growing out of the French Revolution, its first President, George Washington, with Thomas Jefferson as his Secretary of State, proclaimed our neutrality. It acted as a world power when, some years later, it suppressed the activities of the Barbary pirates. It acted as a world power when, in 1812, it went to war in defense of neutral rights. It acted as a world power when it proclaimed the Monroe Doctrine. It acted as a world power in extending its trade and opening up foreign countries to its commerce, as it so effectually did by peaceful processes during the Presidency of Gen. Andrew Jackson. It acted as a world power when it refused to permit the intervention of foreign nations in our Civil War. It acted as a world power when it forbade the further maintenance of the European empire set up in Mexico by French arms during our Civil War. It acted as a world power when, in the administration of President Grant, with Hamilton Fish as his Secretary of State, it brought about, through the greatest of all international arbitrations, the amicable settlement of the Alabama claims, and in so doing made a signal contribution to the further development of the law of neutrality. It is useless to continue the specification of instances. Nations, like individuals, may increase their power by combining with a due attention to their own business the extension of their friendly offices to brethren in trouble, and by conserving their militant resources for occasions when their vital interests are at stake. A nation that undertakes to meddle with every foreign disturbance is bound to become an international nuisance, to its own detriment as well as to the annoyance of other countries. Power is neither gained nor kept by such methods.

It is obvious that certain recent agitations have been and still are carried on under radically erroneous impressions as to the legal significance of the supply of arms and munitions of war to the parties to armed conflicts. The statement is often made that the trade in contraband is lawful, and the statement is also often made that such trade is unlawful. These statements may seem to be conflicting; but, when properly understood, they are both correct. Because there is much dispute as to what the term "contraband" includes, and because it has so far been deemed proper to limit the burdens to which a neutral power is subject, international law has not up to the present time required neutral governments to prevent their citizens from manufacturing, selling, and shipping contraband, including arms and munitions of war, in the regular course of commerce. Hence, in the sense that a neutral government is not obliged to suppress such trade, the trade is lawful. On the other hand, however, international law recognizes the right of a party to a war to prevent such articles from reaching its adversary, and, if it seizes them, to confiscate them. In other words, international law, treating the trade as being, in an international sense, intrinsically unneutral and unlawful, permits the parties to the struggle to inflict the penalty, and to this the trader's government cannot object. The trader conducts the business at his peril.

But, while a neutral government is not obliged to suppress the contraband trade of its citizens, it is forbidden itself to supply contraband to a belligerent, and particularly is forbidden itself either to sell or to give to him munitions of war. Neutrality, in the legal sense, embraces not only impartiality, but also abstention from participation in the conflict (Moore, Digest of International Law, vol. 7, sec. 1288, p. 863). The prohibition of the neutral government itself to supply arms and munitions of war is based upon the unquestionable fact that the supply of such articles to a fighting force is a direct contribution to its military resources, and as such is a participation in the war; and, if a government does this, it virtually commits an act of war. If it does this in behalf of one of the parties, it abandons its neutrality and is guilty of armed intervention; and if it does it for both parties, although it may be said to be impartial, it does what neither of the parties themselves can do; namely, fights for each against the other. It is not long since the United States became, through an inadvertent failure to observe these elementary principles, involved in an unfortunate incident affecting a great and friendly American country, the Republic of Brazil. Happily the intervention quickly ended, as the government in behalf of which it was committed abruptly disappeared, and in a few days we duly recognized its successor, as 15 other governments promptly did.

From the elementary principles of international law above set forth it necessarily follows that, if a government bans the shipment of arms and munitions of war to one of the parties to an armed conflict and permits it to the other, it intervenes in the conflict in a military sense and makes itself a party to the war, whether declared or undeclared.

The pending resolution is, I do not hesitate to affirm, opposed to the settled policy and the highest interests of the United States and also to the provisions of our Federal Constitution. If adopted, it would enable the President (1) to make international engagements of the most far-reaching kind at his will, without the advice and consent of the Senate, and (2) to carry us into war without the prerequisite constitutional declaration of war by Congress. Perhaps it may be answered that by the proposed resolution the Senate would voluntarily abdicate its constitutional powers regarding international engagements, and that the Congress would likewise abdicate its constitutional powers regarding the declaration of war. This argument might be accepted if the Senate and the Congress could constitutionally divest themselves of their constitutional powers and commit everything to the Executive. But, as they were unwilling to do this during the so-called World War, when it was proposed to give the President complete dictatorial powers, I can only suppose that the present extraordinary agitation is due to the misleading and somewhat deafening clamor of those who, in the name of peace, would confer upon the President an unlimited right to engage in hostilities. I refrain from saying "an unlimited right to make war" only out of deference to the profound and learned authorities who assure us that war can be abolished either by calling it peace or by refraining from calling it war. This is, I may remark, a favorite notion with those who demand that the Kellogg Pact shall be equipped with "teeth" in order that it may masticate alleged "aggressors" and otherwise benignantly bite and gnaw its way to universal peace and concord. Unfortunately, there are many who appear to have been infected with these confused notions, which have been so industriously propagated in the United States. But, judged by the course of the principal members of the League of Nations during the past 10 years, and by their attitude toward the hostilities lately in progress in the Far East and elsewhere, such notions appear never to have had any real charm for the responsible authorities of the countries which would have been required to make the chief sacrifices in blood, in treasure, and in tears. To say this is not to impeach their wisdom or their sincerity. It may merely indicate that, having had enough of war, they long for real peace and an opportunity to recuperate.

Should the proposed measure become a law, no gift of prophesy is required to foretell what will follow. Groups moved by interest, or swayed, consciously or unconsciously, by propaganda, will clamor at the White House and at the Department of State for the unneutral application of the ban m favor of those whom they like or approve and against those whom they dislike or disapprove. We are assured that we may trust our authorities to resist such importunities, and to refrain from doing things that would involve the country in trouble. In other words, we are told that our authorities may be relied upon to refuse to exercise the powers so sweepingly conferred upon them. This is indeed a singular argument. Couched in the language of irresponsibility, it is not only self-stultifying but also unjust. The burdens and cares resting, especially at the present juncture, upon those who administer our affairs, are already grave and harassing enough without imposing upon them the pastime of playing with war. Within the terms of the pending resolution, our Government would be asked to set itself up in rash and arrogant judgment upon the acts of other nations and on the merits of their conflicts, with a view to give or to permit military aid to one as against another. Before committing ourselves to this presumptuous program spun of the wild and flimsy fantasy that when nations fall out and fight, the question of the "aggressor", which still baffles students even of ancient wars, lies upon the surface of things and may be readily, safely, and justly determined by outsiders, of whose freedom from individual interest or bias there is no guaranty, we should reflect upon the fact that, had such a notion heretofore prevailed, we might and in all probability should ourselves have been the victim of it. As a marshaling of all the incidents would unduly prolong this letter, I will call attention to only two.

During our Civil War we were more than once menaced with the possibility of intervention, and, had it taken place, no one can say how fateful would have been the consequences. But, as an American, I share with my fellow countrymen, as members of a great and united people, the universal sense that it is well that we were not permanently divided.

On April 6, 1898, there assembled at the White House the diplomatic representatives of six great European powers, who made in behalf of their governments what was called "a pressing appeal to the feelings of humanity and moderation of the President and of the American people in their existing differences with Spain." We need not question the motives of the governments by which this remonstrance against our armed intervention was made. The President of the United States did not question their motives in his answer; but, with the conscious dignity that became himself as well as his great office, he expressed the confident expectation that the remonstrating powers would equally appreciate the effort of the United States "to fulfill a duty to humanity by ending a situation, the indefinite prolongation of which had become insufferable." Two weeks later the Congress of the United States adopted a resolution under which the Government intervened with arms. The governments that had remonstrated against this step evidently did not regard Spain as the aggressor in the unhappy controversy between that country and the United States. The implication was clearly and directly to the contrary; and according to the theory on which the pending resolution rests, the remonstrants, when the United States forcibly intervened, might appropriately have declared an embargo upon the shipment of arms and munitions to this country, while continuing to supply Spain with the implements of war. All this might, on the new theory, have been done in the name of peace; and if the United States had exhibited resentment, this might have been treated only as further proof of its malevolent and aggressive disposition. It is better to reflect on such things while the opportunity still exists. It would be inexcusably short-sighted to assume that what has happened before will never happen again. We might also remember that our war for independence was treated by the great majority of powers merely as an act of rebellion against lawful authority. We waged the War of 1812 in support of disputed claims of national right. Many of our own people, including General Grant, have condemned our War with Mexico as an unjust aggression; but I am not aware that any of them has taken the ground that the general interest or the cause of peace would have been advanced if the powers of the world, some of which were not then themselves above suspicion, had combined their forces to oppose or to crush us.

If the real purpose back of the pending resolution is simply to prevent the United States from furnishing implements of war to those who are engaged in armed strife, this may readily be done by providing for a comprehensive, nonpartisan embargo on the shipment of arms to all countries engaged in armed strife, whether international or civil. Such an embargo would naturally be announced and imposed by public proclamation. Of this no foreign power could complain. There are already various countries which, in accordance with their laws, impose such a ban. This is entirely proper under international law. Whether such an inhibition would, without the cooperation of all other neutral nations, tend to limit the area, the destructiveness or the duration of wars is a conjectural matter on which I do not now undertake to pass. Nor do I intend to discuss the question how far such a policy may tend to render weaker nations, financially unable to maintain munitions factories of their own, incapable of asserting or of defending their rights against larger powers. Considerations such as these lie within the domain of policy. The general bans, where they exist, are based upon the belief that, as the supply of arms and munitions constitutes a military aid, it is better and safer to forbid it altogether. In imposing upon itself such a restriction a nation acts within its undoubted rights and gives no just cause for reproach.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN BASSETT MOORE.

EMBARGO PLAN UNWISE

Doubtless there will be—certainly there ought to be—a fight to the finish against the adoption by the Senate of any such arms-embargo resolution as that which has just been jammed through the House.

It is proposed by this resolution to authorize the President to enter into arrangements with foreign governments to prevent the shipment of arms whenever and wherever he thinks best.

No resolution dealing with such an intricate foreign problem has any place on the legislative program of this extraordinary session of Congress, which was called to relieve the emergency here at home.

Adoption of this resolution will not relieve the domestic emergency but may aggravate it by new threats of war.

But the resolution is as unwise as it is untimely, because, as Representative BECK, of Pennsylvania, pointed out:

"It seeks to vest in the President of the United States, to a large extent, the supreme issue of war and peace, for with this power his ability to implicate us in any part of the world seems reasonably clear."

As this student of the Constitution rightly contended, this resolution would empower the President, in case of war or in case of its threat, "not merely to form an alliance with other powers to boycott one or both of the nations involved in the conflict", but also to select "which of the two warring nations he regards as the aggressor and which this Nation will favor by allowing munitions of war to be sent by our citizens, and which it will discriminate against."

By the Federal Constitution the power to declare war is placed with the Congress. There it should remain.

And the way to keep the power to make war where the Constitution put it is to reject outright the arms-embargo resolution which the House has approved and sent to the Senate.

The American people look to their Senators in Congress, Democrats and Republicans alike, to hold this unwise and untimely proposal in the Committee on Foreign Relations until the Congress meets in regular session next January.

Then there will be ample time to subject this un-American provocative and dangerous proposal to that careful study and ample debate which will expose the reckless folly of this latest attempt to lure the United States into a war-breeding alliance with foreign powers.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 4606) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EDUCATION—ADDRESS BY DR. WILLIAM F. RUSSELL

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have here a copy of a very able radio address of William F. Russell, Ph.D., LL.D., dean Teachers College, Columbia University, on April 16, 1933, on the subject of education. It is a timely and admirable discussion of the relation of the American school system to the Government. I ask permission to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

EDUCATION A LIBERTY WE PRIZE AND A RIGHT WE WILL MAINTAIN

To discuss the place of education in the United States today, with which you are familiar, would appear at first sight to be the elucidation of the obvious. But it happens sometimes that we least understand what is closest to us. Because we have never lived under any other form of government it is possible that we take our blessings for granted; and because schools are open and well attended, it may never have occurred to us to examine what they really are trying to do.

I believe that education has played a commanding role in the life of America. I shall try to make plain what it is that makes the United States different from any other nation on earth, and how schools and colleges and teachers have helped to make it so.

It is well said that distance lends enchantment and that familiarity breeds contempt. This is natural and human. This is well illustrated in the case of the soldiers who returned from France. We know that the war was no bed of roses, and there was little pleasure in the mud of the trenches, ankle-deep in water, waiting for a high-explosive shell. Nevertheless veterans delight to recall those days. Flanders' fields glow with poppies—and with memories.

It is this same trait that colors our view of history. One of the periods of the past, most pleasant to recall, is the time when "knighthood was in flower"; and as we ride by ancient ruins of castles in Europe or stand on the turrets of the walls at Carcassonne, we see visions of happy knights and nobles, minstrels and magicians. Those were the days of romance.

But if we take off our rose-colored spectacles, and reconstruct in our imaginations what we know to be the truth, those were actually days of discomfort and distress. The castle was uncomfortable. Windows without glass were covered by tapestries to keep out the cold. There was grime and filth, disease, and lack of sanitation. Uncomfortable as conditions were, the people could be happy if there were order and quiet.

But why else were the castles perched high on the hills or hidden in the swamps? Only to give protection against hostile invasion. We complain today of bandits in Mesopotamia, or Macedonia, or Manchuria, or Manhattan; we are distressed by disorder; but in the days of old when knights were bold, every journey required an escort; travel and trade were prosecuted at grave personal risk; and war prevailed almost all the time.

This state of affairs drove men into fortified castles for their self-protection, and once inside the walls you can readily understand that they had to submit to the will of the lord. Each did as he was told. The farmer, the woodchopper, the shepherd, no matter how hard he worked, had to give up the lion's share of what he produced. He could eat and sleep, but he had few rights, and what was worse, there was no chance for him to do anything different—not for him or his children. The few at the top had all the privilege; the great mass had only to slave and obey.

In general, this was the sort of life lived by most of your ancestors and mine since the beginnings of history. Chained to the station of birth, the doors of opportunity shut, insecure as to life and property, your ancestors and mine longed for the day to come when a man's life would not depend upon the whim of a tyrant, when he would be entitled to the fruits of his labor, when his children would have a chance.

The history of how we changed from that day to this is complicated. We know that the early German tribes long ago developed the rudiments of popular control; that the English barons at Runnymede wrested certain rights from a reluctant king; but the big advances toward democracy in England came during the rule of the Stuarts and Cromwell, and this was just the time when Englishmen began to settle in America. On this side of the Atlantic we can trace the emergence of a new kind of government based upon the ideals of liberty and equality. It appeared in the first colonial agreements, it flourished in the Revolutionary War, it was written into the Declaration of Independence, it was incorporated in the Constitution, and it was developed from Washington to Jefferson and John Marshall, from Jackson to Lincoln, and down to the present day. In truth, the United States was a "new nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal." For the first time in history a great people covering a wide expanse of territory had developed a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people". "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed."

Liberty and equality—these are the fundamental ideals of the United States.

What is liberty? Burke said that it was, first, to have the right to choose our governors; second, to have the right to cashier them for misconduct; and, third, to have the right to frame a government for ourselves.

What is equality? It does not mean that we are all alike, equally tall or short, bright or dull, rich or poor. It means that all of us shall have essentially an equal voice in our Government, that we stand measurably equal before the law, and that every one of us, particularly our children, as nearly as we can provide, shall have an equal chance to do the work in the world and render the service that his talent, industry, and character warrant. When there is equality no child is born to serve a particular master nor is he bound to the station of his birth.

I hope that the clarity of this idea will not become dimmed by generality or vagueness of words. I am trying to make plain what I think our country wants to be. Its aim and ambition have little to do with wealth and prosperity as such, with radios, bathtubs, or automobiles; with banks, mines, and oil wells; with good roads or safe harbors. These are found both in democracies and autocracies. The ideal of our country goes deeper. Our ancestors tried to put into real life the dreams of ages past. They tried to bring possibilities within the reach of hopes. To you and me they left the legacy of liberty and equality, and they came nearer to realizing these ideals on a larger scale than in any other country on earth. If you ever weary of the words "liberty" and "equality", go back to the ideas behind them; and when you become impatient or distressed with the life we lead when times are bad, ask yourself if you would like to go back to knighthood or to tyranny or slavery. You do not have to use much imagination. Think what is happening to many unhappy people in certain so-called "civilized countries" at this very moment.

America grew to love liberty and equality. There was nothing automatic about this development. It was no natural growth. Nothing is farther from the truth than the belief that the "fierce spirit of liberty" and "hope of equality" pervaded all the early settlers alike; that all the newcomers embraced these ideals, and then there ensued a process of gentle evolution. In fact, I think it can be argued successfully that just the opposite is the case; that men, when left to follow their natural tendencies, drift steadily into despotism, and that equality is foreign to all the instincts of man. No; there was nothing unconscious about the development of American ideals. Liberty and equality were bought at the price of great effort and sacrifice.

What happened, was roughtly, this: Most of the colonies were settled under grants by the King to favored individuals. This put a ruling class in power at the start. These large landowners imported the poor, the humble, the destitute to work for them. Class lines were sharply drawn. The rich exploited the poor. Even in the colonies like Plymouth, which started with everybody poor and nearly equal, distinctions of class and caste came only too soon. As a colony grew older, it tended to become less democratic. Liberty and equality would have vanished from the American scene had not two factors operated. The first of these was the frontier constantly extending into the West. The seaboard might lie in the clutches of royal governors and wealthy landowners, but on beyond, at the edge of the Indian country, there was a chance for the man of no wealth; and into these settlements went those enticed by ideals of democracy or driven by a sense of oppression. The second factor was the presence of fearless and humane analysts of our social order, men like Samuel Adams, Thomas Paine, and Jefferson who hesitated neither to preach nor to complain. By the patriots on the seaboard, by the democratic communities in the backwoods, stimulated by stupidity of English misrule, the struggle for liberty and equality was maintained. Often there was a period of quiet. Occasionally there was a recession as there has been in these recent years. But the struggle went steadily on. Never was it a quiet growth. Never was it a mere exercise of the suffrage. It was a constant and bitter fight.

One of the best illustrations of this struggle for freedom and equality in the United States is found in the history of our education. You know, of course, in certain colonies education developed rapidly. By 1650 Massachusetts had an excellent school system, and Maryland almost at the start led the way in its educational organization. But did you know that from the early days until 1825 there was almost a steady decline? By 1800 our education was at its lowest ebb. The wealthy sent their sons to private schools; a few charity schools were maintained for pauper children; the rest had no schooling at all. The story of the way in which our present system of public schools got its start should be an inspiration to us all.

You see, the United States, about the time when Washington was President, began to go through the industrial revolution. Prior to this the bulk of the manufacturing (as the name implies) had been done by hand. When spinning and weaving were performed on the wheel and hand loom, the work could be done at home just as well as anywhere else. In fact, it was more advantageous so, for the weaver could run a small farm in summer, weave on rainy days and in the winter, and sell or trade the cloth himself. When Samuel Slater, who had worked in factories in England, was able to duplicate from memory the carefully guarded secrets of the power machines, he started the factory system in America. No longer could one worker compete with steam or water, and many machines could be driven as easily as one, provided they were under one roof. This meant that the worker lost his independence. No longer did he own his own loom. No longer was he his own boss. Together with many others, he became a factory hand and worked for an owner who bought the raw material, paid a wage, and sold the product. This industrial revolution put many men in the power of one; it brought country people to the city; it crowded miserable tenements; it stimulated vice, immorality, and disease; it forced miserable conditions of work and long hours of labor by men, women, and children.

James Truslow Adams, writing of these times, says:

"'In collecting our help', wrote one (New England millman), 'we are obliged to employ poor families, and generally those having the greater number of children.' 'Tending machines', wrote another, 'did not require men, but was better done by girls from 6 to 12 years of age.' * * * In one Rhode Island plant in 1801 Josiah Quincy found 100 of them at work for from 12 to 25 cents a day, there being 'a dull dejection in the countenances of all of them.' Possibly three quarters of the operatives were young women, but sometimes an entire family let themselves out. In one case, for example, a man signed a contract for $5 a week for himself, $2 for his 16-year-old son, $1.50 for his 13-year-old son, $1.25 for his daughter of 12, $0.83 for his boy of 10, $2.33 for his sister, $1.50 for her son of 13, and $0.75 for her daughter of 8." (Adams, James Truslow. The Epic of America, Boston, 1933, p. 131.)

On June 15, 1825, the Senate of the State of Massachusetts received a report of a survey of hours of children's labor and their opportunity for schooling. Instances were cited of 354 boys and 584 girls. Six worked only 11 hours a day, many at least 12 hours, and most from daylight to dark. Only 27 boys and 71 girls had any opportunity whatever to go to school, and even this was "for 4 weeks" or "for 8 weeks" or "for 2 months, because of lack of water", which kept the factory closed. All through the records of legislatures, patriotic societies, and labor organizations of that time are found analyses of conditions and protests and evidences of pressure upon lawmakers for the correction of evils. The committee on education of the New England Association of Farmers, Mechanics, and Other Workingmen concluded their report of April 3, 1832, as follows:

"Your committee cannot, therefore, without the violation of a solemn trust, withhold their unanimous opinion that the opportunities allowed to children and youth employed in manufactories to obtain an education suitable to the character of American freemen, and the wives and mothers of such, are altogether inadequate to the purpose; that the evils complained of are unjust and cruel; and are no less than the sacrifice of the dearest interests of thousands of the rising generation of our country to the cupidity and avarice of their employers. And they can see no other result in prospect as likely to eventuate from such practices than generation on generation reared up in profound ignorance and the final prostration of their liberties at the shrine of a powerful aristocracy: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That a committee of vigilance be appointed in each State represented in this convention, whose duty shall be * * * to get up memorials to the legislatures of their respective States praying * * * for some wholesome regulations with regard to the education of children and youth employed in manufactories." (Commons, J. R. Documentary History of American Industrial Society, Cleveland, 1910, V, pp. 198–199.)

Petitions of this kind had a powerful effect, and it was not many years until free public schools had been established in almost every industrial State, with child labor laws and compulsory attendance regulations.

Thus it is plain to be seen that the prevention of child labor and the development of compulsory education for all children was not primarily a humanitarian idea, conceived by leaders like Horace Mann and Henry Barnard, to be conferred by kindly taxpayers upon a grateful people. Rather, public education was the result of an organized demand by the people themselves. They were angry. They knew what they wanted—and they got it.

The American public school is a response to the demand for liberty and equality; and every added offering and every educational improvement has its origin there. Kindergartens and libraries, adult and physical education, teachers of music and art, school doctors, dentists and nurses, adequate equipment and fireproof buildings, free textbooks, transportation, schools for blind, deaf, and crippled, and vocational education—each was provided by representatives of our people, school-board members or legislators, because citizens demanded these opportunities for our children. None of these improvements come by natural evolution. They were the achievement of years of struggle on the part of millions of militant citizens.

Make no mistake! Teachers did not force the school system upon the American taxpayer. Teachers did not expand the educational offering. Teachers did not compel the extension of opportunities more equally to all. Teachers were merely employed to do what the public wanted; and it was the public that overpowered the miser, the exploiter, and the autocrat.

I have attempted to show the relation of the American school system to the national purpose of our country. Tenaciously, by bitter struggle, both in Europe and America, our fathers labored. The advance was not steady. There were periods of wavering, of halt, and occasionally there were recessions. But from each period of difficulty the old ideals emerged stronger than ever before.

In the midst of the present crisis we are deluged with proposals as to the way out. We hear alluring talk of fascism, communism, and assumption of governmental power by self-selected engineers and technologists. Let us be sure that we appraise all these in the light of the American ideal. President Roosevelt and the Government at Washington, in masterly fashion, are demonstrating to us and to the world that a firm hand and a clear plan can operate with respect for liberty. They know that for too many years the world has lived under tyrants. Let us also recall the ages when we lived in ignorance; and when we hear suggestions of returning to the days of the little red schoolhouse and when we see legislatures forced to question every educational offering beyond the barest minimum, let us clearly recall conditions as they were when children did not have a chance. For the price of liberty is eternal vigilance, and public education, dear to the hearts of the American people, is a liberty we prize and a right we will maintain.

FARMERS' UNION LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by John A. Simpson, president of the National Farmers' Union, over the National Broadcasting System on Saturday, April 22, 1933.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEGISLATIVE REPORT—FARMERS' UNION ACTIVE

Since our last radio talk, March 25, the Farmers' Union legislative program has received unusual recognition in the United States Senate. Our program and organization were recognized first by the Senate Agricultural Committee granting an open hearing on the farm relief bill. This lasted for 4 days. You would find a report of this hearing most interesting. I am sure you could secure a copy by writing your Senator, asking him to mail you a copy of the hearing before the Senate Agricultural Committee on H.R. 3835. A thorough study of these hearings will be worth a lot more to you than newspaper reports as to what the farm bill contains and what the Farmers' Union plan of marketing embraces.

The 5th of this month the Senate Agricultural Committee, after the conclusion of the open hearings on the farm bill, unanimously put the Farmers' Union cost-of-production plan into the bill. It is found on page 25 of the bill and entitled "Part 3."

A letter from Hon. Paul Nesbitt, of Chama, N.Mex., says that after reading the testimony of the various witnesses before the Senate Agricultural Committee on the farm bill he is not surprised that the Senate was convinced of the merits of the Farmers' Union cost-of-production plan.

Immediately after receiving a favorable report from the Senate Agricultural Committee, I sent out a call asking our members over the United States to send delegates to Washington; also to wire and write Congressmen and Senators. An avalanche of telegrams and letters came to Washington. Over 200 Farmers' Union members from 21 States were here for a week or more assisting me in my efforts to convince Members of the United States Senate the Farmers' Union cost-of-production plan should remain in the bill. We also secured conferences with the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, and with the head of the Farm Loan Board, Mr. Morgenthau. A committee of 5, selected from the delegation of 200, together with myself, were also granted a hearing with the President.

After several days of debate in the Senate the Farmers' Union cost-of-production amendment was adopted by a vote of 47 to 41. It was a great victory for the one farm organization that had the courage to stand for what they believed right regardless of who opposed it.

To you farmers listening in, if that is the kind of an organization you like to have represent you here in Washington, join with us and make us stronger; or if you do not believe in it, remain on the outside where you hinder what we are trying to do.

I want to take time to mention that our members in Ohio, Michigan, and Pennsylvania, where they have self-organized as a result of these radio talks, were well represented here in Washington and did splendid work in behalf of the National Farmers' Union legislative program with their Senators and Congressmen.

My own home State, Oklahoma, sent the largest delegation, 46. The best recommendation that I can bring to any audience is the fact that for 14 years the Oklahoma State Farmers' Union in their annual conventions each year elected me their president, and always respond to every request I make as national president.

It is to the credit of anyone to gain the approval of strangers, but it is doubly true of he who has the approval of his home folks.

While the delegates were here in Washington they also did effective work on the Frazier bill and the Wheeler bill. I am sure their work was a factor in the Wheeler bill receiving 33 votes in the Senate on the 17th of this month. About 60 days ago, in the last session of Congress, in a test vote it only received 18. The Wheeler bill provides for the remonetization of silver and is known as "S. 70."

In all our contacts with Members of the House and Senate, and we had meetings in which as many as 48 Congressmen and Senators attended, we thoroughly impressed on them that the Farmers' Union is against all bond issues. We consider it almost a crime for this Government to issue bonds and pay bankers interest every time the Government needs money. We are firmly convinced that if it is safe for the Government to sign an interest-bearing obligation, it is much safer to sign a United States Treasury note that is a noninterest-bearing obligation.

THE FARM RELIEF BILL

They tell you the farm organizations sponsored the administration's farm relief bill. I shall give you some first-hand information and let you draw your own conclusions as to whether those who wrote the bill were real representatives of the farmers of this Nation.

On page 8 of the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture of the United States Senate on H.R. 3835, Secretary of Agriculture Henry Wallace gave the committee the list of names of those who wrote this bill. I find he gives 34 names. I do not have the time to give you all of these names and tell you who they are. I shall only give you a few of the most prominent ones.

First, I find that great farmer, Mr. E. F. Creekmort, who labors for the American Cotton Cooperative Association at a meager salary of $75,000 per year, either getting his pay out of the taxpayers of the Nation or the 5-cents-per-pound cotton turned in by the farmers who belong to the cotton association. This friend of the farmer helped write the bill.

I find Mr. C. E. Huff, president of the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, represented by M. W. Thatcher. Mr. Huff was a country preacher, serving as a minister without pay. He now patriotically draws $15,000 per year and expenses from the Farmers' National Grain Corporation. This patriot, through his representative, Mr. Thatcher, helped write this bill.

I observe among those of the brain trust, who assisted in constructing this wonderful piece of legislation, the name of Dr. J. Phil Campbell, director of extension, Athens, Ga. I presume you farmers in Georgia listening in feel like you were well represented when this bill was drawn.

Here are another bunch of patriots who rendered valiant service in the construction of this farm-relief measure. They are editors of commercial agricultural papers. The prosperity of these papers depend upon the advertising they receive from the big-business interests that exploit the farmers. Here they are: Dr. Tait Butler, editor Progressive Farmer, Memphis, Tenn.; C. V. Gregory, editor Prairie Farmer, Chicago, Ill.—Gregory farms the paved streets there in Chicago; Mr. Dan Wallace, editor The Farmer, St. Paul, Minn.; Mr. Dante M. Pierce, with the Wallace Publishing Co., Des Moines, Iowa. You farmers were certainly well represented among the authors of this great proposed piece of legislation.

I wish I had the time to analyze every one of them. I do not. However, I must not omit the last signature on the list, that great farmer, H. I. Harriman, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

One year ago the National Grange, the American Farm Bureau, and the Farmers' Union agreed on a marketing program and prepared a bill that was approved by the Committee on Agriculture of the United States Senate and by the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives. In the Senate it was known as the "McNary bill, S. 5027." We prepared a pamphlet and sent it to each Member of the House and Senate; in fact, scattered them all over the United States. I read from page 3 of that pamphlet:

"The Marketing Act should be amended immediately by the inclusion of the debenture plan, equalization fee, or any other method which will make it effective in controlling surpluses, in making tariffs effective on farm crops, and in securing for American farmers cost of production on those portions of their crops sold for consumption in our own Nation; nothing less is a remedy for the agricultural-marketing problem."

The Farmers' Union in three national conventions adopted that kind of a program unanimously, and as late as March 11, this year, in a Nation-wide convention in Omaha reiterated our allegiance to the principles of "cost of production for that portion of our crops consumed in this country."

The only crime I committed was being loyal to the Farmers' Union by supporting the program adopted in their national convention. I was one farm leader in Washington who did not surrender.

As the bill passed the House, title I, section 3, reads as follows:

"The Federal Farm Board and all departments and other agencies of the Government are hereby directed to sell to the Secretary of Agriculture at such price as may be agreed upon all cotton now owned by them."

In the hearings I suggested to the committee that there was great opportunity for scandal in this provision. Upon this suggestion the committee amended it to read, "That the Secretary of Agriculture should not pay more than the market price on the day of purchase. My suggestion probably saved the taxpayers of this Nation not less than $30,000,000.

To you farmers listening in, let me say that you need someone to help you here in Washington who does not surrender.

LEGISLATORS OR RUBBER STAMPS

I have been doing legislative work in Washington for the last 20 years. It is my judgment that in all that time there was never a higher standard of Members of the House and Senate than in this session of Congress. The vast majority of them are sincere, able men and women, willing to do their very best in the interest of the people who sent them here.

They have been handicapped in many instances by the demands from their home folks for them to follow the President, right or wrong. The newspapers of the country have fed the Nation that kind of froth and foam—a lot of hooey. Some of you listening in have written, others have wired your Congressman and Senators, commanding them to vote for some pending bill that the sender of the telegram or letter had never read. I warn you to be careful about instructing your Congressmen and Senators concerning bills that you have never seen. You should want your Congressman to be faithful to his oath of office and be a Congressman instead of being disloyal to that oath by becoming a rubber stamp.

It is strange how the press can deceive the public with statements that are so inaccurate. Ten-year-old children would discover the inaccuracies. For instance, one of the editors of the Sioux City Tribune, Sioux City, Iowa, had a front-page editorial the 13th of this month in which the editor stated that I had dismally failed in my efforts before the Senate Agricultural Committee to even get consideration for the Farmers' Union cost-of-production plan. It was a long editorial, with every paragraph just as big a misstatement of facts. The Associated Press had carried the fact that the 5th of this month the Senate Agricultural Committee had unanimously placed the Farmers' Union cost-of-production plan in the bill. The very day the Tribune carried this editorial the United States Senate, by a vote of 47 to 41, adopted the Farmers' Union cost-of-production plan and placed it in the farm bill. This fact was carried in the Associated Press everywhere. It is a mystery why the Sioux City Tribune should so absolutely misrepresent the truth, and more strange is the fact that some of its readers were led to believe the statements in the editorial. This is just a sample of the more than a thousand clippings I have received where newspapers have misrepresented the Farmers' Union and myself, as its national president. So far as I am concerned, it is of small importance. I am immune. Your Congressman, your Senators are not immune. You should treat them fairly and know the facts before you form opinions of what they are doing.

DISARMAMENT

Among peace societies doing effective work in behalf of abolishing war is the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. They are right now in an active campaign all over the United States getting signatures to a disarmament petition. The Farmers' Union believes in every honest effort toward ending war. We also believe world-wide disarmament is necessary to outlawing war. When these disarmament messengers present their petition we recommend every patriotic citizen sign.

QUACK REMEDIES

All kinds of cures for the ills that beset the farmer are bobbing up in Congress these days. One of these is a bill for requiring a certain percent of alcohol in all motor fuel. The theory is that it would help corn farmers by using large quantities of corn for making industrial alcohol.

The Department of Agriculture is making an investigation of the subject, and a few days ago called those interested into a conference. I listened for 2 hours without getting much practical information. About that time the chairman asked me for any statement I should like to make. I told him I had no statement to make, but I should like to ask the experts present a few questions. The privilege was granted me, and I asked those interested in alcohol the wholesale price of alcohol per gallon at the present time. They told me 40 cents per gallon. I asked from what this 40 cents per gallon alcohol was made. They answered that it was made of blackstrap molasses. I asked why they did not make it out of 15-cents-per-bushel corn. They said that it would make the alcohol cost more; that blackstrap molasses was a cheaper material for making alcohol than 15-cents-per-bushel corn. I then asked what the wholesale price of gasoline was, and they told me that a standard grade of gasoline was a little less than 3½ cents per gallon. I then suggested to those present that in the first instance all the crude oil belongs to farmers; that it was a farm crop just as much as cotton or wheat. I also called their attention to the Government reports that practically every State has oil potentialities. Some of the States where oil is still undiscovered are reported by the Government geological surveys as having almost every acre an oil possibility.

I am sure it would be interesting to many farmers listening in, that in States where oil has been discovered many times farmers get annual rents for leases given on the underground crop. For many years in Oklahoma I received a dollar per acre on 400 acres of land that was more than a hundred miles from the nearest oil well. It was rent money from my beneath-the-surface crop. It paid my taxes.

I am forced to this conclusion: It would be folly to require the users of motor fuel to purchase 40-cent-a-gallon fuel when there is an overproduction of 3½-cent-per-gallon fuel. It would be discrimination to say to the farmers who have oil beneath the surface of their farms, "We will, by legislation, cut off the market for a certain percent of your fuel oil." It would be like passing a bill for the cotton farmers in which all clothing had to be made of cotton.

I am not sure but what certain interests bring up these side issues for the purpose of muddying the waters and getting our attention away from the real issues.

BROADCASTING GETS RESULTS

We have received many, many letters from our program of this station a month ago. Not only have we received these letters but the results have been splendid. Here is a letter from Mangum, Okla., that says more than a thousand people listened in from that town. Here is one from Guthrie Center, Iowa, stating that neighbors whose radios were out of commission came in wagons to listen in during the Farmers' Union hour. Our national secretary reports that the largest self-organized local for this month is Oberlin local, at Blanchard, Mich. They organized and sent in 80 male members and 59 women, a total of 139. One of the songs in today's program was dedicated to this local.

I recommend that all over the United States you call county meetings for Saturday, April 29, these meetings to be held in your courthouse at 2 p.m. that day; that you discuss these various questions and adopt resolutions, mailing a copy to the President of the United States, to your Congressman, and your Senators. That will be four copies. Also agree to write individual letters. By all means do not neglect to resolve against the Government issuing any more interest-bearing obligations. Declare in favor of the Wheeler bill, the Frazier bill, and cost of production. You can afford to do this much to help yourselves. You farmers who gather at these courthouses where you have no Farmers' Union, form a temporary Farmers' Union and write to E. E. Kennedy, our national secretary, Kankakee, Ill., for information and full instructions. Remember it is those farmers who belong to the Farmers' Union who make possible the work the Farmers' Union is doing here in Washington. You farmers who do not belong, so far as you are concerned, we would have to abandon this work today. Get in and make us stronger in our fight for you.

INFLATION

Things have been happening very fast in the last few days. There are indications that there is a general movement on the part of the administration and the leaders of both House and Senate to start a program that at least approaches that of the Farmers' Union. However, do not get excited. It may turn out as the farm bill did—a thing of little value—or as the refinancing bill, of even less value than the farm bill. The refinancing bill does not even approach the remedies offered in the Frazier bill. The inflation promised at this particular time may turn out to be as weak as what has been offered us in the farm bill and in the farm refinance measure.

I am sure you have observed, however, that just the talk of inflation has been worth more to prices of commodities than the moratorium, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the home-loan bank, and all the billions of money borrowed by the Government and poured out to big institutions.

If we could only have a real application of the Farmers' Union program; if we could have cost of production for that portion of farm crops consumed in this country; if we could be refinanced as the Frazier bill provides, with Government money instead of money borrowed from bankers and on a basis of 1½ percent interest instead of about 5 percent as provided in the refinancing bill; if we could only have the Wheeler bill passed, which provides for the remonetization of silver, then this Congress could go home with absolute assurance that they had not only saved this Nation but the whole world. Such a program put into operation would preserve and protect the integrity of all property. It is high time the Government was giving a little protection to the property of the people as well as to the money of the bankers.

It is a shame and a disgrace that every time the Government needs some money it must sign an interest-bearing obligation in order to have bankers sign and make some money for the people. If there are people who have so much money they are willing to loan it to the Government, this Government, instead of borrowing that money, should make them pay the expenses of Government through taxation.

I can remember, during the World War scoundrels would go out to farmers to sell them Government bonds when the farmer had no money with which to buy the bonds. These rascals would say, "I will loan it to you." A few farmers had the nerve to grab a club and run such reprobates off their farms. Think of the gall of it. A man with plenty of money making a farmer who had no money borrow of him to buy bonds.

Think of the ultrarich of this country supporting and promoting a tax system that takes out of the mouths of children the very food they need in order that these ultrarich may have money to loan to the Government.

We Farmers' Union folks are doing everything in our power to get officials in Washington to see that it is a crime for this Government to issue any more interest-bearing bonds. These ultrarich draw interest from taxes raised out of the sweat of the farmers and laborers of this Nation. These same ultrarich get written into the laws provisions for exempting the bonds that they hold from all kinds of taxation. If there is such a thing as a human leech, a human barnacle, it is the promoter of tax-free Government bonds.

THE WHEELER BILL

For a permanent cure and a world-wide remedy there is no substitute for the Wheeler bill. It is the only inflation that immediately makes a market for the products of the farms and factories of this country. It is the only measure that increases the cost of production of commodities in the silver-using countries to the extent that those countries can afford to buy our products.

Complaints of our people multiply. They say that the products of other nations are pouring in as never before, paying the tariff, and then selling at less than the cost of production in this country. They all agree that the cause is our high-priced dollar. Just recently France has been shipping in common building stone. The Legislature of Alaska a few days ago passed a resolution memorializing Congress. They set up in this resolution the fact that Japan was selling canned salmon is this country, after paying the tariff, at a lower price than cost of production of American salmon fisheries. They complained that the Canadians are shipping in halibut and selling it below American cost of production. Other nations with cheap currencies sell us their goods, make their profits, and laugh at our superstitious worship of the gold standard.

A dozen years from now we will look back and wonder how those who plundered and robbed us could deceive us into permitting the money of the country to be issued and controlled by a handful of bankers.

I want to close with a quotation from an address I read the other day delivered by Mr. Arthur E. Seagrave, of Fall River, Mass.:

"We need inflation and inflation we mean to have. The word 'inflation' makes some people shrink with fear, but it never yet scared a man with a flat tire. It is the one thing he wants above all else. The world is now traveling on a flat tire. It needs inflation to permit travel over rough roads. Its car is parked near a pump marked 'gold', but there is no pressure in the tank. We have waited a long time for relief but it has not come. But we have overlooked another tank nearby. It bears a silver label. For years it was hooked up with the gold tank until some gangsters severed the connection. But this tank is full. All we need is to restore the connection once more. Then we can reflate the tire, can renew our journey with ease and comfort, and we can finish our course with hope and confidence."

Let me also read from the pen of ex-Senator C. S. Thomas an article that recently appeared in the Rocky Mountain News. Senator Thomas is 84 years old, but his mind is as clear as a bell and his eloquence without a peer.

"Shakespeare once defined gold as the visible god. Whatever its physical qualities, it was always, and still is, the most formidable deity ever worshiped by mankind. Even when the first commandment was voiced at Sinai, the Jews were imaging the golden calf at the foot of the mountain. Moses destroyed their statue but he could not dethrone the metal which, until quite recently, men and women were privileged to see, albeit the bulk of it was buried in the ground from whence it came."

We, or some of us, therefore, know that it is yellow, bright, and heavy. Also, that by reason of the supernatural qualities with which it has been endowed, it measures and shifts the values of all things spiritual and material. Moreover, the more fortunate of the people until recently could actually acquire and enjoy meager portions of it, while, theoretically, those possessed of other forms of money might demand its conversion into gold as the only real money in the habitable world, those contending for other standards being neither honest, intelligent, nor trustworthy. The metal failed to function and then abdicated. Yet the gold god is too sacred to be seen. Its fires burn too brightly for mortal eyes to gaze upon.

The leader of American democracy, ostensibly invested by Congress with the purple of unlimited power, last week issued an old-fashioned Russian "ukase" commanding all citizens—they are still so designated—by or before May next to deposit with the financial authorities all gold and gold certificates in their possession in exchange for other forms of money. Failing this, the President by the same edict subjects them to arrest, indictment, and on conviction to a maximum fine of $10,000 or sentence of imprisonment for a term of 10 years, or both. The visible god of Shakespeare is thereby clothed with invisibility and the single standard transformed from a human agency into a thing of omnipotence.

Under the law as written, gold is legal tender for the satisfaction of all human obligations. He who demands and he from whom it is demanded have no alternative but compliance with its terms. It was thus enacted at the behest and by the command of the single-standard powers, and until yesterday it functioned as "the law of the land." But the President by his "ipse dixit" has assumed to repeal it.

The owner of paper money is not only prohibited from demanding its redemption in gold; he is commanded under the sanction of the Penal Code to exchange with the Treasury for its paper. Although his own, he may not even retain it save at the risk of his liberty. Its mere possession after May 1 becomes a felony eo ipso, not by act of Congress but by Executive order based on legislative delegation of authority.

With all due acknowledgment of the best of intentions, with which hell is said to be paved, I assert that this Executive order is the most deadly and appalling attack upon the integrity of the American Constitution thus far encountered since its ratification. Only by abdication can the Congress so legislate. Its Members falsify their oath of office when they so ordain. The President has no more power to exercise the authority thus conferred than he had before the effort was made to confer it. The plea of necessity would be farcical if the incident were not so tragical in its reaction upon American institutions.

If the assertion were true that the salvation of the Republic or of the gold standard required this extreme policy, which it is not, then neither is worth the sacrifice. The latter has long been a curse and will so continue as long as the public interests are sacrificed upon its altar. Moreover, the Government has but to stretch out its hand and grasp the remedy—a fact which the world keenly realizes while its chancelleries willfully shut their eyes to it and will have none of it. If, on the other hand, penalizing by edict of those rightfully possessing and entitled to the use of gold is within the Executive power, especially in times of peace, then no right of the American citizen is safe from the exercise of despotic power.

The Nation has traveled far and fast on the road to centralization since the Civil War, but it is somewhat melancholy to reflect that the Democratic Party under Wilson and Roosevelt has done more to demolish State boundaries and trample upon the fundamentals of the Bill of Rights than its opponent, which for three quarters of a century we have bitterly denounced for its disregard of constitutional limitations. And the bitter pill is now coated with gold whose bar sinister, branded by fraud on the Nation's forehead in 1873, dictating its policy for 60 years, itself bankrupt in morals and in fact and doomed to early extinction, has now dragged democracy into the fathomless pool of repudiation. "Alas, it is not in our stars but in ourselves that we are underlings."

Comes at this juncture the economic statement that due to expansion of debt and destruction of values, the Nation's liabilities exceed its assets. If this be true, bankruptcy is in sight and repudiation is inevitable. Is it surprising that gold as usual has between 2 days run to its cover, disappeared in the gloaming and left the Nation to the elements and to fate?

STATEMENT BY SENATOR REED AND OTHERS AS TO INFLATION

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask leave to have inserted in the RECORD a statement on the subject of inflation issued by Senators REED and WALCOTT and Representatives SNELL and LUCE.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of Apr. 22, 1933]

REPUBLICAN ATTACK ON INFLATION

WASHINGTON, April 21.—The statement assailing the Roosevelt inflationary program, issued tonight by the Republican leaders, Senators DAVID A. REED, of Pennsylvania, and FREDERIC C. WALCOTT, of Connecticut, and Representatives BERTRAND H. SNELL, of New York, and ROBERT LUCE, of Massachusetts, follows:

"The administration inflation bill violates the most elementary principles of sound monetary, credit, and financial policies. It is better designed to defeat than to promote business recovery.

"It is said that the bill is necessary in order to avoid more radical legislation. What could be more radical than authority to issue printing-press money and to give one individual, in direct violation of the Constitution, the power to alter at will the value of the medium through which all business transactions are conducted and the terms of all monetary obligations and the value of all property expressed?

"While there are grave objections to the nomination of the Federal Reserve System by the Treasury, and it is hard to defend the unsound practices of the Government's borrowing directly from the central banks, yet in spite of these objections and the doubts which we entertain as to the efficacy of the remedy, in view of the existing emergency and the recognized need for an advance in all commodity prices, we would be willing to support some such provision as section 1 for the expansion of credit by means of open-market operations, even through direct purchases from the Treasury by Federal Reserve banks, providing discretion as to the amounts to be purchased up to the maximum provided were given the Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve officials, instead of the provision as it now stands which authorizes and practically compels the purchase of $3,000,000,000 of Government securities, irrespective of the credit or banking situation.

TERMED "INFLATION ON GRAND SCALE"

"The second section authorizes resort to the printing press and the issuance of fiat currency. It is not simply an alternative proposal to section 1 but may be supplemental. That is in addition to the $3,000,000,000 of bond-secured currency provided for by section 1; section 2 authorizes the issuance of $3,000,000,000 of notes with no reserve or security of any kind back of them—undisguised printing-press or 'say-so' money. In other words, the two sections combined mean $6,000,000,000 of additional currency, half secured by paper and half just paper. This would represent a doubling of our already swollen circulation. It is inflation on a grand scale. If it does not produce the expected results the Government, having conceded the principle, will be forced to increase the dose.

"If it does take and prices rise because of loss of confidence in the value of the country's currency then the Government may well find, as did those of Germany and France, that inflation once started feeds upon itself and soon gets completely out of control.

"This bill may well constitute the first step on the road to ruin which the German people took under compulsion, but upon which it is proposed we now voluntarily embark.

WORKERS WILL BEAR LOSS, THEY SAY

"Let there be no misgiving as to those who bear the loss. Not the well-to-do with funds invested in common stocks, who are in any event best able to take care of themselves, but the wage-earner who sees the cost of living fast outpace a lagging wage, the salaried classes and those with fixed incomes, the aged recipients of pensions and annuities, the savings-bank depositors, the holders of 122,000,000 insurance policies, the small investors with their life savings invested in one or two sound bonds, and last but not least, the farmer. German farmers today are heavily in debt and pay higher interest rates than before the great inflation.

"It may be urged that the President will not exercise the authority granted. Then why does he ask for it? And surely those who are powerful enough to force him to agree to this legislation will be strong enough to compel him to make it effective.

"The third section would authorize the President, in his discretion, to fix the number of grains in the gold dollar, but at not less than 50 percent of the present standard. This is unconstitutional. Section 8 of the Constitution vests in the Congress the 'power to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures.'

"But aside from the constitutional feature, it is unthinkable that there should be vested in any individual the arbitrary power to alter at will the value of money, which so directly and vitally affects all human relationships, obligations, activities, rights, and property.

EFFECT OF DOLLAR DEVALUATION

"To those who look upon the devaluation of the dollar as a means of raising the domestic price level, this action will, in our judgment, prove disappointing. It will accelerate the world competition in currency depreciation and further depress world prices and markets, to the detriment of our agricultural producers. It will only indirectly, and as a long-time process, result in an increase of domestic prices.

"The second and third sections of the bill destroy whatever chance of success the first may hold. The effect of the first proposal would be to create large excess reserves in the banks, which, seeking employment, would expand credit and foster a business and price increase providing other conditions are favorable. But the key to a business revival is cheap long-term money which will encourage the revival of heavy industries and the purchase of capital goods. But who can afford to lend on time with the threat of inflation, dilution of the currency, and the arbitrary decrease of the value of money staring him in the face? Who can afford to contract to build or to make any long-term commitment when the entire price, wage, and monetary structure may be altered at will by one individual before the contract falls due? These threats, this uncertainty, means not business stimulation but stagnation and the complete elimination of a capital market. Prices may rise, but they will rise as a result of fear, not of confidence, and no permanent prosperity can be erected on any such base.

"It seems unnecessary to emphasize that these proposals may involve the partial repudiation by the Government of its obligations and the impairment of countless contracts affecting immense sums payable in gold of the existing standard of value—contracts made by our States, our municipalities, innumerable corporations, and individuals, and millions of purchasers in good faith of their securities and obligations."

REMONETIZATION OF SILVER

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an excellent address delivered over the radio today by the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] relative to the remonetization of silver.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, if I were an artist I would picture Uncle Sam as a great, sleeping giant just waking to find himself bound hand and foot, and struggling to free himself of the fetters placed upon him by his own children and his supposed friends. I would show how his own trusted financial leaders had betrayed his confidence, and how his former allies in the World War, England and France, were plotting his economic ruin. I would picture on his face surprise, then disillusionment, followed by a determination to be free.

For several years I have been trying to tell the American people that our primary money was not sufficient, and that low commodity prices were due to this shortage of primary money. More than a year ago I introduced my bill for the remonetization of silver in the United States Senate. It was ridiculed by the press and by some political leaders in both parties, but, because of its merit, and because it offers the only safe method of enlarging our primary money and raising commodity prices, it is now supported by many financial and political leaders, as well as by the Farmers' Union and millions of people in every walk of life.

I shall not attempt to paint a picture of economic conditions today with its millions of unemployed men and women vainly seeking work and facing actual starvation, for these conditions are known to everyone. Nor shall I give much time to a consideration of the forces responsible for this depression, save as it is necessary to an intelligent diagnosis of the evils which we are attempting to cure.

I sincerely hope that no farmer or other listener to my words today will misinterpret my attitude toward the national administration. I have profound admiration for the courage and alacrity with which the President and his coworkers have taken up the stupendous task which confronted them on assuming the responsibility of government. I also trust that no citizen will forget when he is disposed to criticize anything which has been done or which it is proposed to do, that this administration took over the reins of government when the Nation was in a state of almost complete financial, industrial, and agricultural collapse. It would be beyond the powers of any group of human beings to completely rectify that tragic situation in a relatively few days, a few months, or even a few years, or to do it at all without perhaps making some tactical errors in the method of approach to the enormous task.

But I do want to say that real friendship for the administration is not best expressed by unreasoning approval of every suggestion which might be credited to those in authority. The real friends of the administration will leave the praise largely to those who are always seeking to reach the favor of any man who happens to be in authority. And those real friends will submit constructive criticism to any proposed measure which they deem unsound and will continue to make suggestions along the lines which they believe would be most helpful to the Nation and in that manner to the administration itself.

History should warn the President that at the hour of his greatest national acclaim he should be most thoughtful of his future. I do not forget that 4 years ago at this time it was almost sacrilege to question the superhuman wisdom of the great engineer who then occupied the White House, nor do I forget the relatively few years ago when President Wilson was the recipient of world-wide acclamation almost bordering on idolatry.

I need not remind you of the unhappy ending in both of these cases. It is a wise public official who never forgets that the approval of today may become the condemnation of tomorrow. The way to avoid that reaction is to make sure that the plans pursued will stand the test of time and permanently react to the welfare and prosperity of the people. In my long years of public service I concede that I have often been accused of radicalism, but never, so far as I know, of a lack of the courage of my own convictions. When I analyze the proposed financial measure I begin to wonder if I am not, after all, the conservative instead of, as I have so often been called, radical. So-called "conservatives" propose measures to give the President of the United States the power to revaluate the gold dollar up to 50 percent at any time he may see fit. When and if that is done there will be no lasting stability in the money standard of this or any other country. When we delegate to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to tax the people almost at will; when we give the President the power to dictate wage reductions, reductions in the pensions paid; when we give him full authority over the railroads and then give him the right to fix the gold content of the dollar, the people who are clamoring that we should do this should realize that we are going a long way toward destroying our form of representative government and coming mighty close to setting up a dictatorship in the White House. It may be that our form of government has so far failed that the time has come to abandon it, but I am old-fashioned enough to still believe in the fundamental principle upon which the Government was founded. It should be remembered that power delegated by the people is seldom returned to them.

The drastic action now taken by our Government was forced upon us by the advantage which other countries had over us in world trade, due to their depreciated currencies.

Suppose we should reduce the gold content in our dollar and thereby cheapen the dollar—it is my judgment that other nations would immediately debase their currencies in order to try and hold the commercial advantage they now enjoy. There would probably follow a currency debasement race between the nations of the world that would soon destroy all currency standards and lead to a world inflation that might easily destroy our present social order.

On the other hand, the adoption of bimetallism by the United States would set an example that other nations would of necessity have to follow, with profit to themselves and no injury to anyone else. It is the only common ground on which the nations can meet on perfect equality and safety.

During the last 60 days the whole world-wide financial situation has attracted the attention of mankind. The struggle for commercial advantage between nations through the manipulation of monetary exchange was never more keen than at the present time. Ever since England went off the gold standard she has forced the pound sterling down and the American dollar up, because that gave her a commercial advantage by giving her a lower production cost than the United States under the gold standard. For some mysterious reason our great financial and political leaders joined forces with the British and did all in their power to force the purchasing power of the dollar upward. This resulted, of course, in forcing down commodity prices until they reached new low levels, and this, in turn, brought bankruptcy and ruin to agriculture and industry, and unemployment to millions of American workers.

When the United States placed an embargo on the exportation of gold and officially announced that the United States had gone off the gold standard, the exchange value of the dollar started to return to normal, and commodity prices began to rise. This greatly disturbed the British, because, in this movement of the dollar they saw clearly the possibility of losing the commercial advantages they have enjoyed since they left the gold standard. In an Associated Press dispatch from London on April 20 I read: "England's main concern is that trade advantages which she enjoyed because of her debased currency after her departure from the gold standard might no longer exist."

I am not blaming England for manipulation of her currency so as to benefit herself commercially, but what shall we say concerning American financiers who have worked day and night against the best interests of the American people?

For one thing I am thankful. We now have a clear picture of the whole world-wide financial situation. It is no longer necessary to argue that our financial structure is completely inadequate. Every thoughtful man knows that the world now stands at the crossroads and that the next 12 months may decide the destiny of our present civilization. Shall we follow the blind financial leaders who have betrayed us, and almost completely destroyed us, or shall we adopt a monetary policy that successfully served mankind for thousands of years, and was later destroyed by selfish bankers through trickery and deception in 1873?

I wonder if the American people know that the gold standard is of very recent origin, and that it is responsible for the condition in which we now find ourselves. I wonder if they know that silver and gold at a fixed ratio of value between the two metals was the monetary standard of mankind for thousands of years.

There are many bills before Congress that are designated as silver bills, and that fact has led to much confusion. In the great majority of cases there is an honest difference of opinion about the merits of the several different proposals, but I think it can be truthfully said that there is also a concerted plan of the opponents of bimetallism to confuse the issue by the alleged support of certain of these purchase of silver bills. It is the old strategy of divide and conquer on the part of the enemies of effective silver legislation. Since all agree that one of the primary purposes of any such legislation is the increase of commodity prices, the question naturally arises as to how large a volume of increase in the basic money would accomplish that result. Certainly it needs no argument to prove that to purchase 100,000,000 ounces of silver at 50 cents an ounce as proposed in some of the bills would have no permanent effect whatever on the price of the farmers' and manufacturers' products. If any silver legislation is to have the potency to accomplish an increase in commodity prices, it must be a measure that makes silver a basic money on equal footing with gold, the foundation of the currency system of the Nation. In the last few days we have had a very realistic demonstration of the effect on prices of a proposed increase in the circulating money.

In the brief time which I have at my disposal today I want to impress on you as seriously as I can the fundamental differences between my bill and all the other proposed measures when it comes to the matter of international trade. Let us briefly summarize the international trade situation. Since the war every major nation of Europe has striven, and with considerable success, to make itself self-contained; that is to say, to become as independent as possible of the import market for food and industrial products. I am not criticizing the attitude of these nations; I am merely stating it as a fact to be considered in planning our future destiny.

Where do our future markets lie? What countries are there in the market for the surplus goods which we produce? If you look over the map of the world you will find that in every case where there is a great potential market for either our agricultural goods or our manufactured goods in the countries who need them the most, they use silver. Mexico is so short of the products of our mills and factories that for several millions of her people an empty 5-gallon oil can is a luxury to preserve with care for a hundred domestic uses. They need our shoes, our clothes, and hundreds of thousands of our automobiles. Mexico stands first in the nations of the world as a silver producer, and there is no other country on earth whose prosperity would be so quickly and strongly reflected in our own as Mexico. South America is also a tremendous potential market for our goods. For many of our farm products the Orient is now the greatest of all markets.

When we deal with the international trade situation we should forget these expedients based on one or two years of monetary control. At the end of these periods we will be as badly in need of export markets as we are today. Such problems should be based on a theory of centuries, not years. My bill would establish a permanent and fixed ratio of value between gold and silver in every market in the world. The ratio would be in keeping with the relative production of the two metals over many centuries of time and would be in complete accord with the historical performance of the two metals as acceptable money in world markets. Under this standard of bimetallism international obligations would be fixed and not subject to such demoralizing fluctuations as we have witnessed in the nations of the world since the war.

To those who fear that the Government would be flooded with silver should we remonetize silver, as provided for in my bill, let me ask, Where would the silver come from?

The Orient knows no other money excepting silver. For thousands of years many of these countries have refused to adopt the gold standard and have refused to use paper money or a checking system such as we have. Consequently, it is absolutely essential to their economic life that they keep the silver which they have in their own country in order to carry on their own trade and commerce. As an evidence of this, quite recently China and several other countries placed an embargo against the exportation of silver. Silver is to them what gold is to us. As the price of silver goes up China buys more silver, because she has to have more primary money when it becomes more valuable.

It has been suggested to me that in the event we remonetize silver we would stop the industrialization of China, India, and some of the South American countries. I think it is time that the American people stop thinking in terms of China, England, Japan, and South America, but to think in terms of the United States.

The trouble in recent years has been that we have been more interested in the welfare of the peoples of the rest of the world than we have been in the people of this country.

Giving China, India, Japan, and South America the benefits of cheap silver in order to permit them to industrialize their countries means, inevitably, the closing of factories in this country; it means, inevitably, that more people will be out of employment, lower wages, and longer hours. In other words, it means bringing down our standard of living to somewhere near the standard of living in the Orient, and I am at a loss to understand the minds of those who say that we must not remonetize silver because of the fact that it will stop industrialization in the Orient and in other countries.

We are today becoming isolated from world trade. Our surpluses are thrown on the domestic market, creating oversupply and a constant depression in commodity prices. This result is destructive, not only of our foreign and domestic market but to the maintenance of stable governments in silver-using countries. It forces their people to an industrialization destructive of our market for manufactured products in such countries. In substantiation of this statement, I call attention to the records of our Department of Commerce and reports of our officials:

For instance, in 1928 we exported to China $50,000,000 worth of crude materials; in 1931 we exported $55,000,000 worth of crude materials; in foodstuffs in 1928 we exported sixteen million and odd dollars' worth, and in 1931 fifteen million and odd dollars; and my understanding is that the drop in foodstuffs has been considerable since 1931.

In semimanufactured goods in 1928 there was $20,000,000, and in 1931 it had dropped to $12,000,000. In finished manufactured goods in 1928 there were seventy-eight million and odd dollars, and in 1931 there were thirty million and odd dollars' worth.

These statistics bear out what cheap silver is doing to our trade in China.

The depreciation of the capacity of silver-money-using peoples to purchase our goods produced and sold on the higher gold standard has almost extinguished some of our greatest potential markets. We are forced to the alternative of lowering our money measure of values or of raising the money measure of values of our foreign competitors.

This depression has proven beyond a question of a doubt that there is not sufficient gold in the world upon which to base the currencies of the world and thoughtful men everywhere are seriously considering and advocating a return to bimetallism.

We came within six votes of passing it in the United States Senate just the other day, and we would have passed it had it not been for the fact that Senator ROBINSON announced that the President of the United States was opposed to putting it upon the farm bill. I assert now that had we adopted my bill as an amendment to the farm bill it would have done more for the farmers of this country than all the farm legislation of every kind or character that has been advanced by professors, economists, or farm leaders throughout the United States.

Let me quote from a recent article by Lord Desborough, a noted British monetary authority:

"The world is admittedly suffering from a catastrophic fall in the level of commodity prices, followed by contraction of credit, wide-spread bank failures, financial crashes, State defaults, and repudiation of debts, which have diminished the available money of the world and caused serious economists to state in an official document that it is doubtful if this process continues whether our present civilization can survive.

"The remedy suggested in these pages is to revert to the long-established system of using both the precious metals linked together by a ratio as one metallic money for the world and as the foundation for the great structure of credit which will be raised upon it.

"Silver was demonetized in 1873 by the western nations and lost its power as money and became to a great extent only a commodity. If gold had been demonetized, the same thing would have happened to gold. At the time of the Californian and Australian gold discoveries there was a serious agitation to demonetize gold as creditors thought it was getting too plentiful, and that they were not getting the value of what they were owed.

"What is wanted is a stable measure of value for the whole world, East as well as West, which can be secured by having one standard founded upon the two precious metals linked together by a ratio."

In closing, let me say to every man who hears my views today and feels that I am right, I would ask that you respectfully write to your Senator and Congressman, urging them to press for action in this Congress for the enactment of my bill—S. 70—to remonetize silver. Now is the time to act—not tomorrow, but today.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H.R. 4606) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the amendment which I offered last night was printed on April 7. The only change I have made is where the term "Federal Farm Loan Board" is used to make it read "Farm Loan Commissioner", to comply with the new arrangement.

Mr. President, I have offered this plan, which was introduced as a bill in this session of Congress known as "S. 457", to refinance the existing indebtedness of farmers, as a substitute for the proposal offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. I want to explain briefly the differences or make a comparison between the two plans.

The Wagner substitute, or the so-called "administration refinancing plan", provides for the issuing of farm-loan bonds to be sold at not to exceed 4 percent interest. The interest is to be guaranteed by the Government for the life of the bonds. The farmers are to pay 4½ percent straight interest for 5 years, and no amortization payment during the 5 years.

Under my substitute there are also farm-loan bonds to be issued at 1½ percent interest to be sold at par, and if they cannot be sold they are to be turned over to the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve Board is to issue Federal Reserve notes for the face value of the bonds, the bonds together with the mortgages on the farm property to be held as security for the notes so issued. Mr. President, all new wealth comes from the soil, and the first mortgages on the farms that produce the food products to feed the Nation ought to be as good security as we can get for Federal notes of any kind.

Under the proposed administration plan the interest on the 4-percent bonds goes to the purchaser as tax-exempt profits. Under my proposal the interest on the bonds that are turned over to the Federal Reserve Board, 1½ percent, goes to the Government as profit. It is generally stated that there are approximately $9,000,000,000 of farm mortgages at the present time, estimated by some to be a little less because of the foreclosures that have taken place; but at $9,000,000,000, 1½ percent interest to the Government would mean $135,000,000 annually as profit to the United States Government on those bonds. For a period of 46½ years, the term of the amortization under the plan, it would mean over $6,000,000,000 of profits to the Government of the United States and it would cost the general public nothing.

Mr. President, the limit of the issue under the so-called "administration plan" is $2,000,000,000 for a term of 2 years. Under my substitute plan there is a provision that when the actual per-capita circulation in the Nation comes up to $75, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board, together with the President of the United States, can call in those notes and have them canceled, but at not to exceed in any one year 2 percent of the notes outstanding against the bonds.

The basis of the loan under the Wagner plan is the present amount of the mortgage or 50 percent of the value of the land and 20 percent of the insurable improvements. Under my plan the basis of the loan is the present mortgage indebtedness or a fair value of the land, and 50 percent of the improvements, and provision is made for the scaling down of those loans under the provisions of the bankruptcy bill as amended in the last session of Congress. There is also provision for voluntary scaling down under the Wagner plan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator a question just at that point?

Mr. FRAZIER. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Referring to line 12, page 2, am I to understand that the amount of the mortgages may represent the complete fair value of the farm? In other words, would it be a 100-percent mortgage on the basis of the fair value?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; on the fair value of the land at the present time. I will explain that a little later more in detail.

I want to give an example of the loans that might be made under the two plans. For example, a mortgage of $5,000 exists today on a farm, and that $5,000 represents not to exceed 40 or 50 percent of the appraised value of the farm when the loan was made. The average interest rate is about 6½ percent. That would mean an annual interest charge of $325. Under my plan, if that mortgage is renewed at $5,000 at 3 percent interest, the farmer would pay $150 in interest each year, or $175 less per year than he pays at the present time. My contention is that the same amount of loan at the reduced rate of interest would be a much better loan from the standpoint of the farmer, and he would have a much better chance of paying it off and holding his land than under the present situation.

Or suppose the fair value of the farm under the so-called "administration plan" is $5,000; then the farmer could get 50 percent of the appraised valuation, or $2,500. Suppose the improvements on the farm were the same value as the farm land, and today we have many farms which have improvements that are worth more than the land itself. The improvements are worth $5,000 and he gets a 20 percent loan, or $1,000. The total loan value on the land in that case would be $3,500, at 4½ percent interest. That means $157.50 per annum straight interest. Under the 5-year plan there is no amortization to be paid. It is simply $157.50 per year straight interest.

Under my plan the fair value is $5,000, also 50 percent of the insurable value of the buildings, which would be $2,500 in this instance, making a total loan value of $7,500. The farmer pays 1½-percent interest on that $7,500. That means $112.50 interest for the year, or a difference of $45—$45 less than would be paid under the administration plan. The amount of the loan under the administration plan is less than half the amount of the loan under my plan. The administration loan would be $3,500, while under my plan it would be $7,500; and yet the farmer would save each year the difference between the amounts of interest, or $45 each year, with a $7,500 loan at 1½-percent interest, as compared with a $3,500 loan at 4½-percent interest.

Under the Wagner plan the farmers may repurchase land, if lost by foreclosure after July 1, 1931, up to 75 percent of the value and not to exceed $5,000. It is to be paid off under that plan in 10 years' time. Under my plan there is a clause that provides that the farmer who has lost his land by foreclosure since 1919 may repurchase under the terms of the bill that land which he lost, or other land, and thus become a home owner and land owner again.

There is also a provision that tenants who have lived on and operated a farm for a period of at least 3 years prior to the passage of the act can come under the terms of the bill to buy land. The tenant is entitled to a chance to purchase land at a low rate of interest and to become a contented home owner and land owner. Under my plan there is a provision to take care of the tenant.

There are admittedly some benefits in the administration plan. The 5-year moratorium is a benefit. Of course, the farmer must keep his taxes paid and all that, which would be expected; but, of course, if he cannot pay his 4½ percent interest during the 5 years of the moratorium it will be taxed against him after that period, but it will help him, because it will keep many farmers from losing out entirely, as they are doing in the present situation. It will give many farmers a breathing spell for 5 years.

The administration plan reduces the rate of interest just a little; 4½-percent interest for the farmer is too much, but under the terms of the plan it will be recalled that if the farmer is not a member of the farm-loan association he must pay one-half percent extra or if he becomes a new member of the farm-loan association he must buy 5 percent of the amount of the loan in capital stock of the home-loan association. Five per cent for 1 year means 1 percent for 5 years, so under the terms of the plan it would be 5½ percent straight interest for 5 years. That is practically what the farmers are paying now on the basis of 5½ percent interest, with 1 or 1½ or sometimes 2 percent amortization payment. So the bill, while it would be of some help, does not lower the rate of interest very much.

Mr. President and Senators, in the reprint of the so-called "Wagner substitute", on page 12, line 8, you will notice that an amendment was adopted, offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. It is headed:

Federal farm-loan bonds as security for advances by Federal Reserve banks.

The language of that amendment is not very clear; but, as nearly as I can understand it, it simply means that the Federal Reserve banks can buy these 4-percent tax-exempt, interest-guaranteed-by-the-Government, farm-loan bonds and deposit them as collateral, and issue Federal Reserve notes to buy more of the 4-percent tax-exempt, interest-guaranteed-by-the-Government, farm-loan bonds and issue more Federal Reserve notes to buy more bonds to issue more notes to buy more bonds to issue more notes, and so forth, and so forth.

Someone said here yesterday that this bill was more for the benefit of the bankers and the bond buyers than it was for the benefit of the farmers. Let us see. We have been told repeatedly by both the old parties—by the Democratic platforms and the Republican platforms, too—that they were going to put the farmers on a parity with the business interests. Let us compare this parity with what is done for the bankers under this bill.

Under this bill the farmer at least pays 4½-percent interest on his loan. The banker buys the tax-exempt bonds at not to exceed 4-percent interest. What does he do? The Federal Reserve banker deposits those bonds as security and issues Federal Reserve notes and buys more bonds. The Federal Reserve notes are printed down here at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing by the United States Government, and the Federal Reserve banks pay the Government the cost of the paper and of the printing of those notes; it amounts to seventy seven one-hundredths of 1 percent per Federal Reserve note.

Talk about putting the farmers on a parity with the business interests! It is not much of a parity when we compel the farmer to pay 4½-percent straight interest and let the banker buy tax-exempt securities at not to exceed 4 percent. The Senator from Arkansas said that if this provision were put in it might reduce the rate of interest to the farmer one half of 1 percent. That would help some, but it would still give the banker 3½ percent of tax-exempt profit. So the parity under this bill is not much better than the parity we have had under other so-called "farm measures" in the past.

Mr. President, I am not going to talk much about the general farm conditions that exist. I think everyone is familiar with them. During the last few years the prices of farm commodities have been so low that the farmer could not pay his actual running expenses; and yet in our great cities there are literally millions of men, women, and children going hungry because they cannot buy these low-priced products raised upon the farms—products priced so low in this so-called "surplus of farm products" that the farmer cannot get a profit. He cannot pay his expenses for raising and taking care of these products.

Farmers are going broke, because they cannot sell their products for the cost of production. Millions of men, women, and children are starving because they cannot buy the food they need. There is work of all kinds to be done, Mr. President, and yet there are over 12,000,000 men and women begging for employment today. It is a strange situation. There is not enough money in circulation actually to carry on the business of the Nation.

This bill would provide for a degree of inflation. If three and a half billions of new money could be issued and put into circulation by paying off this farm indebtedness, it would undoubtedly relieve the situation. It would not be issuing tax-exempt bonds and trading them for the mortgages that are outstanding, but it would be putting actual money into circulation.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. FRAZIER. I do.

Mr. WAGNER. How does the Senator arrive at the amount that would be issued in the way of currency under his legislation?

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator was not in the Chamber when I explained that. There is a provision in the amendment to the effect that when the actual per-capita circulation of money shall reach $75, under the plan of my amendment the Federal Reserve Board and the Secretary of the Treasury and the President may authorize or direct the recall of those notes and the cancelation of not to exceed 2 percent of the amount outstanding in any one year. It would take about three and a half billions of dollars to bring the per-capita tax up to $75.

Mr. WAGNER. So that when loans are made up to that amount, under the Senator's amendment the loans would cease to be made?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, no; the issuing of these Federal Reserve notes would cease, but the loans would not cease. The three or three and a half billions would create a revolving fund to carry on these loans, and we believe it would be amply sufficient to make all the loans necessary. Under my plan the loan amortizes in 46½ years. At the end of the first year every 46½ payments refinances a new loan.

Mr. WAGNER. As I understand, the Senator proposes to go back and permit loans to be made for homes where there was a loss of a home beginning with 1919?

Mr. FRAZIER. After 1919.

Mr. WAGNER. And our total of secured and unsecured indebtedness now, as I understand, amounts to over $12,000,000,000.

Mr. FRAZIER. I appreciate that, Mr. President.

Mr. WAGNER. So that what I wanted to ask was this: Is it not possible that under the Senator's proposal $12,000,000,000 of currency could be issued, with no security back of it except the valuations of the properties to the owners of which the loans were made?

Mr. FRAZIER. With the provision I spoke of, it would be impossible to issue 12 billion in new money; but ultimately, through the revolving fund, the total amount of loans possible to be made might reach that figure, though it is not probable at all, because not all these loans are due at the present time, or could be refinanced either under this plan or under the Senator's plan. More than that, some of the farmers have nearly paid off their loans and they would not want to renew them. Some of them will get their interest rates reduced because of a low rate of interest such as provided here so that they would not need to reloan; and the money that is put into circulation under my amendment will find its way back into the Federal Reserve banks.

The Federal Reserve banks will not need to issue new notes. They can take the notes that come back to them and use them to refinance new loans. Economists have figures on this matter, and they say that three billions will make an ample revolving fund to take care of all the outstanding loans that farmers will want to refinance.

Mr. WAGNER. And that three billions of outstanding money will have, as a support, these loans made upon farm properties.

Mr. FRAZIER. Actual first mortgages.

Mr. WAGNER. And the value of this money will certainly be affected by the fluctuations in the value of the property. Perhaps the Senator knows of other instances, but I know of no other instance where any government has used just one single asset to support a currency issue.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I tried to cover that part of the matter before the Senator came into the Chamber.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sorry that I was detained at my office. I have very many visitors these days.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator will remember that an amendment was put in the bill on page 12 of the reprint, lines 8 and 9, which provides that these 4-percent bonds may be deposited by the Federal Reserve banks as security for the issuance of new money.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. FRAZIER. There is the same proposition in the Senator's amendment that there is in mine.

Mr. WAGNER. No; I think that is quite a different proposition.

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not know why. The Federal Reserve Board, as I stated before, can deposit these 4-percent tax-exempt bonds and issue new Federal Reserve notes to buy more bonds to issue more notes, and so on. They could do it under my amendment just the same, only they would not get as much interest as they do under the Senator's amendment. Under my amendment they would get only 1½ percent interest. Under the Senator's amendment they would get not to exceed 4 percent; and, of course, the bankers must have interest. That is what they exist on.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator expect that these bonds can be sold to the public at 1½ percent?

Mr. FRAZIER. Not many of them; and those that cannot be sold are to be turned over to the Federal Reserve Board, and they, in turn, will issue Federal Reserve notes backed by the bonds and by the first mortgages on the land that produces the food to feed the Nation. My amendment provides that much better security than the Senator's amendment does.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator first exhausts the surplus of the Federal Reserve banks, does he not? Does not the Senator provide that these bonds are to be purchased out of the profits and surplus of the Federal Reserve banks?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, they buy them out of their profits and surplus and surtax; yes.

Mr. WAGNER. So that the currency is issued only after their profits and their reserves have been exhausted?

Mr. FRAZIER. That applies only to the profits they make each year, and they claim that they are not making much profit at the present time, although they have made good profits.

Mr. WAGNER. If that is so, then practically all of these loans will be made with currency secured by the deposit of the bonds with the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; and a profit to the Government, if they are turned over to the Government, of 1½ percent, instead of a profit to the bond buyer, as in the Senator's amendment, of not to exceed 4 percent. That is the difference. The profit would go to the Government. It would cost the general public nothing. Under the Senator's bill the bankers or the bond buyers would get a tax-exempt profit of not to exceed 4 percent, and that probably will mean 4 percent.

Referring to the Federal Reserve banks, as the Senator knows, they have made a wonderful record in some respects. There is a provision in the law that after 6 percent profit is paid to the stockholders, and a certain amount is laid aside for sinking fund, and so forth, half of the balance shall be turned over to the Government as a surtax. I have forgotten the exact provision. To get away from turning over too much money to the Government as a surtax they constructed buildings, Federal Reserve banks, in all these districts.

Up in the city of New York, where my friend comes from, they erected what is supposed to be the finest bank building in the world. The original building cost $19,598,000, and they put on an annex costing $2,159,000, or a total of $21,757,000. It is more than the Capitol of the United States cost, by far—almost twice as much.

In 1931 the governor of the bank received $50,000 salary, and his first assistant received $50,000. The 36 officers of that bank receive total annual salaries of $557,000—an average of approximately $16,000 for each of the 36 officers of that bank up in New York. That is keeping down the surtax that otherwise would go to the Government, because they take out their so-called "legitimate expenses." Previously the president of the bank got a bigger salary than $50,000; but there was so much criticism made about it—as I remember, it was more than the President of the United States got—that they reduced the salaries to $50,000, and these officers apparently are getting along on that.

Mr. NORRIS. How can they do it? [Laughter.]

Mr. FRAZIER. Well, I do not know; but this so-called "administration bill" will help them, because they can get some more tax-exempt securities, with interest guaranteed by the Government at not to exceed 4 percent annually; that will help them to make more profits.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. While the Senator is discussing the Federal farm-land banks, let me ask him what this amendment that is proposed by the Senator from New York does toward aiding in scaling down the mortgages due to or held by the Federal farm-land banks. Does it do anything except to reduce the interest?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, so far as I can understand the bill, there is no provision for the scaling down of mortgages held by the Federal land banks. There will be no scaling down, so far as I can understand it. Of course, there are some mortgagors who have been foreclosed upon since 1931, and in those cases they will be given the benefit; but as to others, there will be no scaling down. It does provide for a scaling down, voluntarily, on the other loans, but if the farm-land mortgages are not to be scaled down, in my opinion, practically none of them will be scaled down, unless it happens to be a very poor loan, with very poor security, and then the mortgagee will be glad to scale down.

Mr. BORAH. What benefit flows from this bill to the man who owes the Federal farm-land bank?

Mr. FRAZIER. It cuts the interest a little bit, and gives them a 5-year moratorium against foreclosure. There is that benefit, and that is all the benefit I can see in the bill.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, that matter was brought up in the committee. Under the Federal land-bank provision in the bill, all the benefit that will accrue to one who has a mortgage in that bank will be the reduction of interest on the new bonds, and a 5-year moratorium, wherein he will not pay any interest on amortization, but it will be charged up, and at the end of the 5 years he will have to pay all that accrued interest.

Mr. WAGNER. Not interest; no.

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, yes; if he does not pay the interest that accrued during the 5-year moratorium, he will lose his farm.

Mr. SMITH. Exactly; but let me make this clear. The face value of the mortgage is not changed at all; there is no scaling down of the face value of the mortgage under the farm-land bank provision in the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Will the Senator tell me how that could be done with the outstanding bonds?

Mr. SMITH. Will the Senator tell me how the farmer can pay? The present face value of the mortgage will never again be equaled by the value of the land, so that I thought and was hoping that we would have a proposition here that the Government would offer a certain percentage of the face value of all the mortgages outstanding, and that those who held the mortgages could come in and take that or leave it, covering the land bank and private institutions and all, in order to give the farmers a chance to scale down, and to give those who are holding the mortgages a chance to cash in on them, because unless this situation is relieved, one who holds a mortgage and forecloses on it, and attempts to sell the land, cannot get his money back; he cannot get the face value, and the farmer cannot pay the interest now. I was hoping that we would devise some plan by which all these mortgages might be reduced to at least an approximate appraisal value, but we have not done that.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will realize that when the committee were discussing this matter, there was no one who had a plan, and I think it was conceded that it was an impossibility to cut down those mortgages, from the very nature of the thing. That did not apply to other mortgages.

Mr. WAGNER. Without a direct contribution from the Government to the individual.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that would be the only way to do it.

Mr. WAGNER. It would be the only way; and, as a matter of fact, if I may interrupt, the Government is making a contribution of $15,000,000 a year now.

Mr. FRAZIER. For what?

Mr. WAGNER. To make up the 1 percent reduction in interest. The Senator was not accurate when he said that, as to the other loans, the interest must be reduced. All of the outstanding mortgages upon which there are loans of the Federal farm-land bank are now reduced by 1 percent, from 5½ to 4½.

Mr. SMITH. That is true.

Mr. WAGNER. That difference is made up by a subsidy from the Government amounting to about $15,000,000, because the money is now being loaned at the same rate the Federal land bank pays for the money to the bondholder.

Mr. SMITH. Let us analyze that, and just see what the situation is.

Mr. WAGNER. We can scale the mortgage down; we can reduce the interest payment; but to do it we have to have an absolute contribution by the Federal Government from the taxpayers of the Nation.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is correct.

Mr. WAGNER. There is no other way of doing it, because these bonds are outstanding, with the mortgages put up as collateral security. There is no other way to do it.

Mr. SMITH. Let me call attention to one fact. The Federal land-bank bonds are up to about 85. What are they selling for now?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not follow the market.

Mr. SMITH. They are somewhere around 85, because last year we made an appropriation giving the Federal land banks $100,000,000 to strengthen their credit and $25,000,000 to aid delinquents to carry on. Therefore, the Federal land-bank bonds maintained their status on the market, but the joint-stock land bank bonds did not have any contribution or aid from the Government, and the consequence was that they sank to something like the value of the land upon which the mortgages were predicated.

Mr. FRAZIER. If this bill goes through, it will raise the value of the bonds.

Mr. SMITH. Let me get this idea to the Senator, that the loan by the Government of $100,000,000 to increase the credit of the Federal land banks and $25,000,000 to be used to aid delinquents changed the picture so far as the bondholders of the Federal land bank were concerned; but, outside of the $25,000,000 to extend the time of the delinquents, there was not one penny's aid to any mortgagee under the Federal land bank, and all of us know that the present value of the land is such that had it not been for the $100,000,000 and the $25,000,000, there is no telling where the Federal land-bank bonds would have gone. It only postpones the evil day. The inevitable will come. We are not relieving the farmer himself. The Federal Government is only postponing the evil day.

It is now said to us that if we attempt to scale down the mortgages in the Federal land bank, we will jeopardize the bonds outstanding. We are more solicitous about the bonds outstanding than we are about the poor devil who has to pay the interest and amortization on the bonds.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Nobody is concerned with the bondholder, except that there is this question, that the mortgages are put up as security for the bonds, and certain conditions were made with the bondholder when he purchased the bonds.

Mr. SMITH. Exactly.

Mr. WAGNER. And we cannot violate those conditions.

Mr. SMITH. We cannot violate a condition to a bondholder, but we can let the farmer lose his home and be put out on the road because we will not make an appropriation.

Mr. WAGNER. What does the Senator suggest shall be done?

Mr. SMITH. I suggested that the best plan for us was to make an appropriation for a scaling down and take care of the matter.

Mr. WAGNER. Wherever it is legally possible to do that, a provision should be made to scale down.

Mr. SMITH. Let us make it legal.

Mr. WAGNER. How are we to do it?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from New York that the bill I am proposing would take care of the situation. That is why I am proposing it. This is the third session during which I have introduced the bill, and 20 State legislatures have endorsed it, and memorialized Congress to pass it.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course the unlimited printing of money——

Mr. FRAZIER. It does not provide for an unlimited printing of money by any means; it provides for a limited inflation of the currency to take care of these farmers who are losing their homes because of no fault of their own, but because Congress has passed special-privilege legislation for the people who manipulate the prices of the products the farmers have to sell.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from South Carolina, in view of some of the statements he has made. The statement has been made that we can do nothing to violate the interest of the bondholder who holds bonds against these mortgages. Is there any reason why we should appropriate $100,000,000 for his benefit out of the Federal Treasury, as we did?

Mr. SMITH. And appropriate $2,000,000,000, in the pending bill, to take care of the joint-stock land bank bonds.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. I defy any Senator here to analyze that.

Mr. FRAZIER. It is more than that. The Government guarantees the interest on the $2,000,000,000 worth of bonds for the life of the bonds.

Mr. BORAH. The joint-stock land bank fellow is taken care of. Let us pass on to the Federal land bank.

Mr. FRAZIER. They are taken care of under this bill.

Mr. BORAH. Not under this bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes. The Federal land-bank bonds are going down, as well as the others.

Mr. BORAH. I refer to the mortgagor.

Mr. WAGNER. Let me say this about the joint-stock land bank—that is one of the phases of the matter about which I do not know very much, except this, that they must liquidate; they cannot make any new loans, and they cannot issue any more bonds. If they sell their bonds to the Federal land bank—and undoubtedly if what is said as to their value is true, they will have to sell at a price lower than the face value of the mortgage—to the extent that there is a reduction in the principal of the mortgage, that is passed on to the farmer. The farmer gets the benefit of that reduction. Wherever a mortgage is purchased by the Federal land bank at a price lower than the face value of the mortgage, the benefit is passed on to the farmer in every instance; but as to the outstanding mortgages, if there could be some way of scaling down, I would be quite willing to join in any effort that was legal.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me again?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say that the committee reached the conclusion that they could not scale down the mortgages in the Federal land-bank system unless we took the money out of the Treasury to make good the loss.

Now just for a moment consider that system. First, this system, we hope, is to continue to operate. It is not like the other system. There is no attempt to stop the business. If we ever get in the condition which we hope to reach, we expect the farm banks to continue doing business and making loans.

Mr. FRAZIER. Let me ask the Senator, What about the farmer?

Mr. NORRIS. I will come to the farmer. Just let me explain the matter as I see it.

The committee discussed this subject fully and at great length. It called in the experts. It called in the lawyers. It said, "How can we scale down these mortgages held by the farm-land bank?"

The farm-land bank derives its money from the sale of bonds, with these mortgages as security. Would not the bondholder, as a matter of fact, be able to prevent the scaling down of these mortgages, which are the only security he has for his bonds? We might pass laws from now until January which would do that, but they would be null and void. It could not be done unless we would make good the ensuing loss. Remember, also, that if we should say—if we could do so constitutionally—all these mortgages, or half of them, are canceled, the law would not have any effect. But suppose it should, that would end the farm-land-bank business; they never could sell another bond on earth. So, as I looked at this question and as the committee looked at it, the conclusion was reached that it was an impossibility to scale down the debts the mortgagors owed to the Federal land banks unless we took the money out of the Treasury and put it into that system to make good the loss.

I believe that opinion is good as a matter of law. I do not see any escape from it. It seems to me we are perfectly helpless, and we might just as well face the truth and not try to get around it. Everybody would like to scale them down if it could be done, but I do not see how it can be done.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is true as to every mortgage holder; we are estopped only by the bondholders of the Federal land banks.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is talking about something that I think I can easily differentiate. When it comes to an individual mortgage holder, the bill which we are trying to pass provides that there will be a scaling down, but that has got to be done with his consent. The bondholder in the Federal land-bank system does not own a mortgage; he has not got a mortgage. The mortgages are in Federal land banks; those banks have issued bonds on the strength of them, but those throughout the country who have bought such bonds do not hold the mortgages; they do not own the mortgages. Every mortgage is a part of the security of every bond that is floated, and it would be necessary to get the consent of every bondholder before, under the Constitution, the mortgage could be cut down one cent.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska is speaking on the assumption, of course, that the Federal land banks are going to be continued and put on their feet. If it were not for this regulation, does the Senator think that the Federal land banks would not scale down their mortgages?

Mr. NORRIS. They could not do it.

Mr. FRAZIER. They would have to or foreclose, just as the joint-stock land banks are doing.

Mr. NORRIS. If a Federal land bank has a mortgage on my farm for $10,000 and concludes that my farm is only worth $5,000, it would have to go through foreclosure.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. That would be the only way to scale it down, and everybody must abide by that.

Mr. FRAZIER. Then the bill is to save the land banks and not the farmers?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is it.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the farmer want the land banks saved?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, no; under existing conditions the land banks are of no value to the farmer, because he can not pay out, and the land banks are foreclosing.

Mr. NORRIS. But the farmer gets a moratorium; he gets a reduction in interest, and the Government makes good that reduction of interest by the payment of the money, $15,000,000, out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. FRAZIER. There is that benefit, of course; but that is only a small benefit. It still leaves the interest so high that the farmer cannot pay it.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator; but our whole system may go down; our Government may fall; but so long as we have courts that are going to enforce the Constitution I do not see how we could do something, no matter how anxious we might be to do it, that would be impossible under our system of Government. It would be just an impossibility.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask for order.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the time is limited; a vote is to be taken at 1 o'clock, and I must hurry on, because I understand there are some others who wish to speak.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACK in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. TYDINGS. With 25 Senators standing on the floor in groups, I cannot follow the debate that is going on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Maryland himself makes 26.

Mr. TYDINGS. And the Senator from Idaho makes 27.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, talking about the low prices of farm products, a farmer in Pennsylvania told us he was only getting 60 cents a hundred for his milk, which is practically a cent a quart; in the Midwest States, eggs, 6 cents a dozen; corn, 10 cents a bushel; oats, 3 cents a bushel; potatoes, 9 cents a bushel.

It is true that some loans are being made to the farmers through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation with Government money. They are the so-called "barnyard loans." I want to give the Senate just one instance of a "barnyard loan" as reported to me from my State. They sent out an appraiser to make these loans to the farmers. The local bank has a mortgage on their livestock and their cattle and farm machinery. The banker wants to have that mortgage paid. So he has one of the clerks of his bank go out with the appraiser for the "barnyard" loans. The bank clerk says, "Mr. Farmer, you owe the bank so much; we want to make arrangements under the 'barnyard' loan act to get you some Government money so that you can pay off our bank." They figure up everything that they have got on a fair valuation on the present time under that mortgage, but it does not come to quite enough—this is a case of which a farmer himself told me—to raise sufficient money to pay off the banker. The appraiser said, "Have you not something else you can put into this mortgage? What is that old wagon over there?" The farmer said, "It has only 2 wheels; 2 of them broke down 2 or 3 years ago". The appraiser replied, "That is all right; we will put it in for $20", and he put it in the mortgage. He figured again, and he said, "We are still $40 shy. What is that old machinery over by the fence?" The farmer replied, "That is an old header that I have not used for 5 years." The appraiser said, "Put it in for $40." It was put in and the farmer got money enough from the Government to pay off the local banker. The local bankers are apparently the only ones who are getting "barnyard" loans in North Dakota. The Government money is being used to pay off the bankers. Of course the bankers need to be paid; there is no question about that; but the farmers themselves should have some relief also.

Mr. President, I have had all kinds of petitions and letters and resolutions favoring my bill. Farm organizations have endorsed it. The Farmers' Union and the holiday-movement organization have endorsed this bill a hundred percent. Farmers all over the Nation have endorsed it.

Mr. President, during the last few months the farmers have gotten so desperate that they have been organizing to block foreclosures, and they have prevented foreclosure sales through their own organizations, taking the law into their own hands, if you please. That has been done not only in the "wild and wooly West" but in the South and in the North and in the East. Within 40 miles of the National Capital a sale was blocked in old Virginia only a few weeks ago.

Mr. President, a National Farmers' Holiday Association has been organized throughout the great agricultural States. Organized. What for? It has been organized by the farmers to protect their families and their homes and their business. That is what it is organized for. An announcement was made in the press by the president of that great organization, Milo Reno, of Iowa, one of the great farm leaders of the Nation, who says that if they cannot get the legislation they want, and if prices do not come up during next month, they are going on a strike—a farmers' strike. That is what they call their "holiday" movement.

Mr. President, I said on the floor of the Senate on a previous occasion that the most hopeful sign that I see for American agriculture today is the fact that the farmers are organizing for their own benefit and protection; and when the farmers become strongly enough organized we will not need to pass legislation for their benefit; they will control the prices of their products; they will fix their own prices. Oh, some may say, that would be wrong; it would put prices up too high; but, Mr. President, I say it would take the farmers at least a quarter of a century to get even for the penalizing and the robbing that has been taking place at their expense all these years.

Mr. President, the Congress of the United States has at various times passed what might be termed "special-privilege" legislation. It is commonly stated, by way of propaganda, over the radio and in the press that we cannot legislate prosperity for the farmer or anyone else. Well, the Congress has legislated prosperity time after time for many business organizations. The Federal Reserve Banking Act, which was passed in 1913 and since amended, I do not know how many times but almost an innumerable number, has legislated prosperity for the bankers—there is no question about that—until now the Federal Reserve banks can buy bonds and deposit them as security and on them Federal Reserve notes can be issued with which to buy more bonds. Oh, yes; it is a merry-go-round for the bankers, and yet they say they are going broke even at that. This Wagner substitute will help them some more.

Congress passed the Esch-Cummins Railroad Act which guaranteed, if you please, a profit to the railroad companies. Various tariff laws have been passed for the benefit of the big manufacturers, and they have benefited them. We put a tariff on some farm products; that is true. We have a tariff on oats of 15 cents a bushel, but they sold for 4 cents in North Dakota last winter. We have a tariff on flax of 65 cents a bushel, and it sold for 70 cents in North Dakota. The tariff is not very effective on flax or on any other farm product, but on manufactured products the tariff is effective and has been for all these years.

The United States loaned a great deal of money to the nations allied with us during the World War. Those nations said they could not pay the interest, although they were only charged from 3 or 3½ percent, and so we got together with them and appointed a commission to scale down those debts, and they were scaled down. Oh, yes; the debt of Italy was scaled down to $2,150,000,000 with interest at practically 1⅛ percent for 62 years, and then the debt is canceled. On the average, the $12,000,000,000 of loans to foreign nations, representing the war debt, was scaled down to 2⅜-percent interest for 62 years, and then the debt will be canceled. Talk about special legislation!

We have given the shipbuilding interests a subsidy. We sold them, through the Shipping Board, ships at a fraction of what they had cost the Government, and then the Post Office Department gave them contracts to carry the mail, the contracts being sufficiently large so that they could pay for the ships out of the money received. Oh, yes; and yet the farmers, who do the work and produce the new wealth of this country, who feed the Nation, cannot get any special legislation for their benefit.

Mr. President, it is about time that the Congress wake up and do something for the American farmer. If we do not do something pretty soon it will be, as the Senator from West Virginia said the other day, too late. The farmers are organizing; they are going to do something for themselves if they are forced to go on as they are going. They are now organizing the farmers' holiday movement, which I suppose is the most militant farm movement ever organized in this country or any other country on the face of the earth; and, believe me, Mr. President, they are ready to go the limit; and why not? Their very homes, their life's savings, are being taken away from them. Why should they not organize?

Up in North Dakota the Governor issued a proclamation that no more foreclosures should take place within a period of 3 years, and he said he would back that proclamation up by the State militia. The other day up in Bismarck a little home was attempted to be foreclosed, the sale was advertised, but the Governor told the adjutant general and the captain of the local National Guard in that city to go down and see that the sale was called off. The sale was called off. The man who owned the little house was of Scotch descent, who, when the war was declared, wanted to get into it. He went to Winnipeg and enlisted there before the United States got into the war. He joined that famous Princess Pat Regiment—practically every man of which was wiped out. This man happened to be one who came back. His little home in Bismarck was mortgaged; some hard-boiled banker wanted to foreclose on it, and the Governor had to stop the foreclosure with the State militia, and save the veteran's home.

Mr. President, we have made a lot of mistakes. There is no question about that. Mistakes have been made and, in my opinion, we have not done all that we should. Mistakes have been made by party leaders in many instances. I do not need to cite any incidents, but there have been mistakes made by party leaders.

A few days ago we were all horrified to read in the morning paper and hear over the radio that the $5,000,000 queen of the air, the Akron, had crashed, and that only 3 survivors out of 76 passengers and crew and officers were saved. We were more shocked a day or two afterward when the surviving officer told the press that they had left their hangar in New Jersey at 7: 30 o'clock in the evening, after dark, had made a trip out over the ocean to test out some broadcasting apparatus and so forth, and ran into a terrible storm. After an hour or so they turned back over the land, but apparently their orders were such that they were directed to go back out over the ocean again. They went back straight into the storm. Somebody blundered!

Yes, Mr. President; I think there were two blunders. If there was such an order from the Department, that was a blunder. The captain who steered that ship back into the face of that storm blundered for carrying out such military orders. The great airship was a fair-weather ship at best. We learned that it needed repairs and needed them badly, and that the ship was going to be repaired as soon as this little voyage was concluded. So the great airship, the queen of the air, went down because somebody blundered.

Oh, yes; we make mistakes. Our great ship of state today is in need of repairs. It is sailing through a tremendous storm and has been buffeted by such storms for months and months. If it is going to survive, it must be steered into smoother water and fairer weather. The agricultural part of our ship of state is on the rocks right now because the Congress has sat idly by and allowed the farmers to be robbed, to be plundered by an organized bunch of racketeers. Business interests with their interlocking directorates all get their full share of the profits out of the handling of the farmers' products. A common example is given that a few years ago the total sale of farm products amounted to $7,000,000,000 in the United States. That is what the farmers got for them. After they went through the hands of the highly organized handlers of the farm products the consumers paid $22,000,000,000. In other words, the farmer dug out of the soil the new wealth amounting in that year to $7,000,000,000 all told, but the consumers paid $22,000,000,000, and thus those who handled the farmers' products made the enormous profit of $15,000,000,000. They are doing the same every year.

Mr. President, the farmers' property was deflated beginning in 1920—by whom? It was deflated by the Federal Reserve Board. We have been giving that Board more power in every Congress since I have been here and over the protest of the progressive group. We are giving them more power in the so-called "administration plan" now before us and a further chance to make more profits. They started the deflation with the farmers; they broke the farmers; they made them lose their farms, their homes, and everything they had—their life's savings. Yes; and the Federal Reserve Board is a creature of the United States Congress, too!

Mr. President, it is time we are doing something for the farmers as well as for the bankers, the railroads, the insurance companies, and the rest of the great interests.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. FRAZIER. I should rather not yield, as the time is short.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota declines to yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, a great deal has been said recently in our discussions about the theoretical law of supply and demand. Someone always refers to the law of supply and demand when we talk about farm prices. Anyone who thinks that the law of supply and demand—that purely theoretical law of supply and demand—controls the prices of farm products either does not know or does not want to know how the markets of farm products are manipulated. The gamblers in farm products can surely manipulate prices, and they do. They manipulate the prices of our food products to the detriment of the farmer and also to the detriment of the consumer to the amount of $10,000,000,000 to $20,000,000,000 a year.

As I said, 20 State legislatures have memorialized Congress to enact this measure into law. I have the list of States and it will take only a moment to read it: Montana, Nevada, Wisconsin, Illinois, Minnesota, North Dakota, California, Nebraska, Oregon, Indiana, Arizona, Idaho, Colorado, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Tennessee, Iowa, South Carolina, Kansas, and Michigan.

Mr. President, those States have the bulk of farm mortgages throughout the United States—something over $6,000,000,000 of farm mortgages, according to the last reports. They are interested and their farmers are interested in saving the farm homes. The business men are interested, the legislators are interested, and everyone in the agricultural States is interested, but here in Congress we seem to be more interested in the bond buyers and the Federal Reserve banks than we are in the welfare of the farmer. Under the terms of this bill we are giving the bond buyers 4-percent interest on the bonds, guaranteeing the interest for the life of the bonds. They might as well be straight-out Government bonds.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. With great eloquence here today it has been explained that the bondholders must be protected, and whatever benefit is bestowed upon them by the Government cannot be reflected to the farm borrower. When we gave them $100,000,000 last spring we did not specify the conditions of the appropriation. We were told the farmer would get the benefit. We should have provided for $100,000,000 in reduction of mortgages held against the bonds. That is the only way we could properly spend $100,000,000 for the benefit of the farmer.

On yesterday we arranged to furnish another $100,000,000 in such a way that they can take up $250,000,000 of bonds, making a profit of $150,000,000 if bonds are bought at present value. It is said we had to give them a profit in order to make good their losses, but if they lost all of their capital they could not lose more than $30,000,000, because that is all their capital. They cannot lose any more than their capital and that amounts to only $30,000,000. If we gave them this money to make a profit, they can take all they can possibly lose, or $30,000,000, and have a possible profit of $120,000,000 more.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Minnesota for his statement.

The farmers throughout the Nation are probably more familiar with the so-called "Frazier plan" than they are with any other farm measure that has ever been introduced in the Congress of the United States. The farmers throughout the United States are hoping and praying that the Congress will adopt this plan in order to save their homes from foreclosure, in order to save their life's work, in order that they may buy back the old homesteads which they lost by foreclosure in the last few years.

The prayers of the farmers of the Nation will be answered if the amendment incorporating my plan is adopted as a substitute for the so-called "administration plan." The Congress ought to lighten the burdens of the farmers by lowering their rate of interest—by giving them a reasonably low rate of interest and a reasonably long period of time in which to pay their loans.

The farmers' plight is one that cannot be fully described. They have gone out into new sections of the country and, with their bare hands, with the aid of their wives and families, have built their homes, in many instances. After 30 or 40 years, in thousands of cases, their homes have been and are being taken away from them, their life savings all gone through the dread foreclosure of the mortgages upon their homes and properties. It is time for Congress to come to the relief of agriculture.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I am sorry there has been an agreement as to a time to vote upon the matter. I know there are others here who want to be heard; and if it will be of any assurance to them at all, I mean to be exceedingly brief and afford as much of the remaining 35 minutes as possible for distribution among them.

Arthur Brisbane, in his column published this morning, said:

> Every rich man in America, from banker to bootlegger, asks every other rich man what leaving the gold basis means. Those that need to ask the question are men on small salaries. Prices of food and other necessities will go higher, but their salaries will not go higher, or, at best, rise slowly.
>
> It would have been a good idea to have left the gold basis before Nation-wide salary reductions were forced on employers.
>
> As usual, when big things happen, it is the "little man" who gets hit. In war he gets shot. In panics he gets poor. In depressions his wages go down. Off the gold basis, his dollar is worth less.
>
> But he is very patient.

The "little man" is indeed very patient. But in these days, when we are striving to accomplish genuine improvement, let us beware of action which may prove nothing more than action empty of both help and promise. Without a true exercise of that caution America may quickly find that there is a point at which the patience of the "little man" snaps and breaks. None are so blind today as to fail to see what the result of abandonment of patience will mean.

The pending farm bill, to which my colleague offers the amendment upon which we are about to vote, has been accepted by the farm people of this country as something worth while. Many who accept it as good have little or no acquaintance with the measure. They accept it on faith. But here in our own ranks, let it be admitted, there is not as large a measure of confidence in the proposal as one would like to see. Instead of declarations revealing enthusiastic backing of the bill and a confidence in its ability to accomplish the change so desperately needed on the farms of America, instead of this Senators are speaking of the bill as a "glorious experiment." Many have been heard to say, in effect, "We do not know what this bill is going to do; we hope it is going to do some good. Anyway, it is an attempt to improve the agricultural situation, which now is quite unbearable."

Let me warn the Senate that we had better know what we are doing. I am sure the farm people, after years of experience of this kind, are in no frame of mind to tolerate further experimentation. They have been wondrously patient. They have watched leaders cast aside legislative measures which would have gone directly to the correction of the ills of agriculture, and, in their stead, force the adoption of experimental measures until they have grown sick and tired of the practice. They are like the patient who refused to submit to a thirteenth operation after the same surgeons had gone forward 12 times with operations they frankly declared were quite experimental and might not remedy the fault with which he was afflicted. Patience, I fear, has ceased to be a farmer feature upon which America and her lawmakers and administrators can longer depend. If I do not mistake the tenor of those I know so well, the farmer today expects action—direct action. Without it he loses his home. He cannot longer continue to hold out against the ravages which have beset his course for so many years.

None can blame the farmer if he has lost, or is about to lose, his patience. The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] a day or two ago declared that the troubles of debt so burdensome to the farmer today are traceable to the war. I remind the Senate that something resembling rebellion on the farms existed even before the war. Back in 1916 the farmer set out to correct the evils of a marketing system which was oppressive to his interests. He sought control of State legislatures, and suffered all manner of abuse by reason of his early effort. Then came the war. A continuation of his activity during that period was subject to the charge of disloyalty, and he continued to take "bitter medicine" during the years of that war while he saw others growing wealthy through the same war. Helplessly he submitted to the fleecing administered by the Federal Reserve bank through the deflation program of 1920; and ever since that day he has watched things go from bad to worse while his Congress and his Government experimented upon him.

Until 1928 he got nothing in the way of legislation. First he listened to majorities in Congress declare that the agricultural trouble was not real at all; that whatever trouble there was existed alone in the farmer's mind; he should go to work and help himself more; that was the one thing needed—not legislation to help the farmer. The farmer hopefully watched these adverse majorities dwindle. Then his patience was made to bear the suffering and discouragement of presidential vetoes. Then came experiments in the stead of the direct-action legislation a majority of Congress passed and saw vetoed. These experiments are too freshly in mind to call for their recitation here and now. It is sufficient to say that those experiments carried their sponsors to political graves. Yet, though these graves are still new, we find on every hand in our midst here men who are ready to try more experiments upon the farmer.

I am sure that this farm bill carries features meriting approval. I can see some improvement in commodity prices coming out of this legislation. At moments I fear the cost of accomplishing that improvement will dangerously offset any gain; but my greatest fear is that the remedies afforded in the bill are too inadequate to accomplish the fuller measure of improvement which must be enjoyed if farm homes are to be saved to their owners.

I sincerely hope that the measure can and will be so administered as to prove the existence of greater value in the legislation than its sponsors, who speak of experimentation again, seem to see in it. While I expect to support the measure when the call comes to vote upon it, I shall do so not because I believe it to be the measure of legislative help necessary, but because it is the maximum of help to be expected at this time. If it is inadequate, then the quicker we pass the measure the quicker will its inadequateness be demonstrated; and when that is demonstrated I have confidence that our administrative leadership will not hesitate in affording more adequate help.

But why, I ask, should we not avail ourselves of such opportunities as present themselves to strengthen this bill and make it something more than an experiment? The bill carries a refinancing feature intended under certain conditions to make help available to the farmer, such as will enable him to refinance his mortgaged indebtedness at 4½ and 5 percent. True, this will be of help to some farmers, but to so few, I fear, as will mark little improvement in the general agricultural condition. Money must be much cheaper if the farmer is to recover from these many long years of depression which, after all is said and done, started on the farm.

Former Representative LaGuardia, of New York, in a dispatch under date of April 12 to his former colleagues here in Congress, expressed himself in the following manner regarding relief for the farmer in the form of obligations bearing 4½- and 5-percent interest:

If it is true that farm mortgage bill provides for 5 percent interest I appeal to you and fellow progressives to vote against such damnable provision. Sanctioning by legislation at this late date of a 5 percent interest rate is not only unconscionable but indecent. By voting against the bill you will not only protect the farmer but will be voting for the best interest of the country and the future of our Republic. I am certain that administration and leadership sponsoring this bill have been not only misinformed, misled, but deceived. Bankers' advice should not be heeded; they have not only been exposed of their wretched misconduct and selfishness and disregard of public interest but their incompetency as well. They are discredited and are now cringing, seeking to perpetuate a cruel system of exploitation. Congress must not permit them to capitalize the misery of the farmers and the workers from which they can get dividends for the next 40 years. Mark you that bankers will exchange existing mortgages for absolute good assured bonds provided in the bill. Interest rate cannot afterwards be lowered. You will recall my bill which provided for 3-percent interest, of which only 2 percent would be paid to holders of present mortgage. At the time bankers with their backs to the wall were only too glad to get such a measure; it was either that then or a complete loss of farm mortgages. The courageous spirit of self- and home-preservation displayed by the farmers of Iowa will be emulated all over the country unless their interest rate is brought down. If proper protest is displayed now the country will back such action and a low rate of interest can be written into the law. Bankers are chuckling that they are putting something over on Congress and the American people. They are too stupid to see the handwriting on the wall. Stick to 3 percent interest, of which 2 goes to the mortgage holders, as per my bill, which you will find on file and which at the time I can assure you had the approval of persons up to the very highest of present administration.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I think there is a sort of misapprehension that we have fixed a rate of 4½ percent for future loans to the farmer. We have not fixed any such rate. For the next 5 years it is not to exceed 4½ percent; but if the bonds which are to be issued, the interest on which is guaranteed by the Government, are sold at a lower rate of interest, to the extent that it is lower the farmer will get the benefit, because while there is a limit of 4½ percent during the period of 5 years, under the general provisions of the law there is to be a spread of only 1 percent between the amount paid for the money and the amount charged for the money. So that if these bonds should be sold for 2½ or 2 percent, the farmers will receive their loans for 3 percent.

There has been a misapprehension that there is a fixed and inflexible rate of interest to be charged. It is inflexible only pending the determination of how successful we are in selling the bonds which are to be issued under the measure.

Mr. NYE. Let me ask the Senator a question: Do not the provisions of his amendment require the bonds to be sold at not less than 4 percent?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no; there is no such provision in the bill.

Mr. NYE. Then it reads "not more than 4 percent"?

Mr. WAGNER. "Not more than 4 percent."

Mr. NYE. But it seems to me that is a virtual guaranty of the rate at which the money is going to be available to the Government—4 percent. If we carry on for a matter of 4 or 5 years and let the people who are ready to do so invest in securities of this kind, they are going to take their 4 percent, and that rate is going to be fixed for 30 or 40 years as the lowest rate of interest available to the American farmer.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, that is not entirely the experience. The maximum fixed is not always the amount which is paid in the way of interest. I was going to ask the Senator whether he expects the bonds provided for under the Frazier amendment to be sold at 1 percent.

Mr. NYE. No; I do not expect that they can be sold. I expect that the requirement will be upon the Federal Reserve System themselves to take those bonds and to issue the currency against them.

Mr. WAGNER. So that this is really a proposal to print money up to the extent, possibly, of $12,000,000,000, because that is the total of outstanding secured and unsecured indebtedness.

Mr. NYE. Oh, Mr. President, the last person who ought to complain about basing money upon land, as we would be doing under the Frazier amendment, is the Senator from New York, who, I know, is in hearty accord with the program which has come to us within the last few days which would authorize the issuance of money without any backing whatsoever.

Mr. WAGNER. May I say to the Senator that that very bill provides that as money is issued, Government obligations are retired. To the extent that the money is issued, Government obligations are retired, which is quite a different proposition.

Mr. NYE. Then, too, we must not forget that on the opening day of this session of Congress we authorized the issuance of a kind of money that had no Government bonds back of it, or the retirement of which did not mean the retirement of Government bonds at all. We permitted the bankers to come forward with their assets, whatever they might be, and have currency issued against them; but the minute the American farmer says, "Let my land, which is here today, tomorrow, next year, and for all time, be a basis for money" we throw up our hands and say, "Oh, my! That is unsound money. That is loose talk." Why is it?

Mr. WAGNER. In the first place, those loans are very short term loans, which is quite a different thing; and when the loan is liquidated the amount of currency which is issued is retired at the same time. They are all short-term loans. This is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, if I may, in the remaining few minutes, be permitted to get back to the thought I was trying to convey, I wish to remind the Senate again that the farmer is in no frame of mind to be played with or experimented with. I hope that the bill that is written and that is going to be passed here will work out much more satisfactorily than anyone here seems to think it will, because if it does not, heaven alone knows what the consequences, not alone to the farmer but to his Government, are going to be.

Anyone who has contact with the farmer these days, anyone who knows how he has hoped and prayed and looked forward to this promise and that promise from month to month, knows that he is not going to stand it much longer merely on the prospect of more promises. We all get a great deal of mail from the farmers. I was tempted at one time during the last few hours to bring here to the Senate Chamber a hundred or 200 or 300 letters, all of which express the thought which I want to leave with the Senate here this morning, namely, that it is time we got something direct, something positive, to improve commodity prices that will enable the farmer to refinance his indebtedness, and enable him to maintain his home. But I am going to resort to only two such letters. One comes from a particularly eminent farmer in my State, a farmer who a few years ago was considered wealthy, a farmer who had pioneered, homesteaded, and built up a fine home, and then in more recent years found his equities, his savings, his property, vanishing to such a point that last June, when he went away from home for a month, he left the farm in the hands of his boys and asked those boys to undertake the job of shearing 250 sheep. When he returned home he found those sheep sheared, and he found a great mound of wool stored away, ready to be bundled up and carried to the market. He bundled it up and carried it off to market, and when he got to market he found that all he could get for that wool from 250 head of sheep was not enough to buy a suit of clothes for each of the two boys who had sheared those sheep.

The same man writes that he discovered, as many others have discovered, that he could not carry upon his back from his wagon to a warehouse enough hides to exchange for a pair of decent shoes. He saw his equities going from year to year and from day to day, and I know what is in that man's mind when he sits down and writes as he did to me within the last few days. He said:

> But I sometimes think it were as well to let everything go down to the very bottom while we are at it as to try to patch up and be fleeced again in a short time. As far as the farmer is concerned we are about as low as we can get. We cannot and we will not pay taxes and interest and we refuse to have our property taken away and we refuse to move. No more "for sales" around here. About 2 weeks ago four or five hundred farmers met up at the county seat and stopped one foreclosure sale and I do not think we will have any more for a while, so things cannot get much worse for us. Let the big fellows bust, too; that is, those that are left, if that is what they want. They cannot get any more out of us. We will manage to live somehow. We won't worry. Let the other fellow worry now for a while.

That is just one little picture of the thought that exists in the agricultural mind today. The farmers are about ready, in other words, to engage, if need be, in a program that will destroy every institution and bring it down onto that level which they have occupied for the last half dozen or dozen years.

Just one more letter, and I will read very briefly from it. I do not quote this letter because I desire to cause any particular response or to be sensational, but this man and his wife who wrote me this letter, which I read in part, say this:

> It looks to me, when a government gets down so low and so greedy that they will starve their own people to death in the midst of plenty, the sooner the government goes to hell the better it will be for the rest of us.

Mr. President, I could resort to any number of letters, as other Senators could, showing that dangerous spirit which exists in the farm mind today, and yet we frankly confess here today that in the pending farm bill we are going to experiment some more with the farmer.

I hope with all my heart, Mr. President, that it may be a most successful experiment. The farmers are not ready to bear up under any more failures, and, now that the opportunity is ours to do something more than experiment and to reach out to the farmer a proposal that he may refinance his farm indebtedness, requiring, in payment, only a matter of 3 percent per year to cover the interest, and to cover the amortization on the principal, why should we not take it, why should we not accept it? We are going to do it sooner or later, and we might better do it sooner.

FORTHCOMING ECONOMIC CONFERENCE—PROPOSED REDUCTION OF WAR DEBTS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, before the vote on the pending amendment, which I understand is set for 1 o'clock, I desire to submit an observation which, while not directly connected with the amendment, is necessarily a cousin to it.

I recall that some time past when in Egypt I allowed myself to attend a form of celebration where the deaths-head is brought in to confront the feast of joviality. It is no desire of mine to tender such a deadening influence upon a feast, but there is at this moment a serious thought which urges upon me the necessity of expression.

If the pending farm bill is to be a success, if the financial measure that is under consideration is to harmonize with it, and both together to work to the success of our country, there must be no such adventure as comes this morning to our notice in a threat to the United States.

Publicly it is asserted that, at the meeting which is to be held here and at London between the representatives of the foreign nations and those of the United States looking to the form of an economic conference, before any measure shall be taken in the shape of trade economy or bank or tariff finance, something must be advanced as a policy disposing of the debts owed by the foreign nations to the United States, and that these must first be treated on the basis of revision or cancelation.

Sirs, we read in the cables flashed from Europe that in some form there must be agreed by the United States, if not to cancelation, to a plan of a general revision of the whole foreign debts alleged to be owed the United States.

Mr. President, I have no intention of sounding a warning that takes on the form of a threat or intimidation. But I wish to say as a Senator representing, with my honorable colleague, one of the sovereignties of America, which will be affected in some form by this arrangement, whatever shall follow this meeting, that as asserted now by the representative both of France and of England, as reported in the press, before any concession will be made to the United States touching the matter of trade, and before any arrangement can be arrived at that shall result in some better relationship of cooperation between the countries in the matter of commerce and tariffs, there shall first be a consent by our Nation to revision or cancelation of the debts as a consideration before any action prescribing trade regulations of these harmonies shall be undertaken. If it be true that the consent to a further reduction or cancelation be the first move, then the proceeding had best end now. Here I proclaim as Senator, I am compelled to say that if at the very outset it shall be tendered to the honorable President of the United States, and those who represent him, that there must be a consent first that there shall be a revision or some form of cancelation, or cancelation or some form of revision, this conference will not succeed. It will be a failure. Mr. President, the suggestion of such necessity will be treated as a deliberate threat upon our Government of injury to us unless we surrender to the demand——

I wish to say that the American people are in no temper to be intimidated by these forms of propaganda sent by cable to precede this gathering—the generators of this flash only and to illuminate with a new fire or some fire a new prejudice or hatred. We wish peace and harmony, but the American people will not adopt any proposal by any administration of any politics or of any nation that compels the canceling of the international obligations or the revision of them. Such result would put upon the farmer a new and increased burden, as is suggested by the speeches of the Senators from North Dakota. It would mean an extraction from our Treasury of the money needed to pay our soldiers. It would deprive us of money needed to pay the interest on bonds due our own people.

I conclude by saying, as I rise to make the protest, that if there shall be an attempt made to make the revision of the debts, or the cancelation of them, the basis for the consideration of our economic parley, whatever may be its end, it had better not be proposed. The attempt to achieve it is the end of the conference. The American public will not tolerate entering upon the consideration by first surrendering America to the extortionate demands of the foreign nations. Nor will our people tolerate America to again be put in the position that while she ostensibly announces to our countrymen that this was to be an economic conference looking purely to the adjustment of trade she was trapped in the design, or was yielding to it, of tricking the American public and the people of the Nation by which the money due from nations who borrowed from us was juggled from us.

Mr. President, allow me to say that if such scheme shall once possess the mind of the American public as the purpose in hand, it will end the usefulness of this conference. The prospect or effort toward success in the plan will fill the American mind with suspicion. It will put the foreign delegates in attendance as having treated our own nationals in an unworthy way. I am anxious to have us succeed, but I prefer failure to surrender. I rather go farther, and adopt the creed which we have, through Addison, in the address by Cato:

> 'Tis not in mortals to command success,
> But we'll do more, Sempronius—

We will deserve it. In this international meet America will be all-American—true to herself and just to all others.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I am not one of those who believe the farmer can get himself out of trouble by borrowing more money. The earnings do not permit him to pay 8-percent interest, nor 4 percent, nor even 2 percent. There must be something in addition to this bill.

I am quite distressed over the attitude of some Senators representing the industrial States, who have not all come to realize—or rather, they have forgotten—that national wealth comes from national resources, comes out of the farm, comes out of the forest, and comes out of the mines. But I must admit we have people who believe that big cities can be built and prosper on a desert; that a supporting country is not necessary. They do not realize New York is large because it has the trade of the continent. They do not realize that their business profits, the value of their property, their well-being and very existence are dependent upon the "back country."

I do not believe this bill will be the means of placing the farmer on a living basis, but I know that if interest rates could be reduced it would also reduce the farmer's annual loss. I vote for this bill because of the necessity of it. I vote for this bill because I desire to protest against existing conditions. I vote for the Frazier bill as a substitute for the administration refinancing provision, because I think such a provision is impractical; it is expected to relieve the farmer at the expense of the Treasury. I am afraid when we come to see its workings we will find it has benefited the mortgagee more than the mortgagor. Unless it is very well administered, it will permit insurance companies and mortgage companies to get a quasi Government bond for an uncollectible note and mortgage.

A couple of weeks ago I met with a hundred farmers representing various farm organizations. It was their opinion they would rather have nothing than to have the 4½-percent refunding provision, which is now carried in this bill.

Mr. President, it has been said in criticism of the Frazier substitute that it would take us off the present gold standard. I look upon that as an additional reason for supporting it.

Business prosperity cannot return until the national earnings are more fairly divided between all classes, so that each class may have some purchasing power. I believe that the agricultural depression, which started in 1920, is the major cause of the Nation-wide depression. Where there are no earnings, there can be no purchasing; without purchasing, the factories will stop. With idle factories, we have idle workingmen. With idle workingmen, we have what we now have.

Mr. President, I think it is so entirely unnecessary for a people as intelligent as ours, in a land of such great natural resources, to be in this kind of situation. We have reached the point where farm property cannot pay interest and taxes, and its value has shrunken badly. It does not pay a wage, half a wage, or even a quarter of a wage to the man who labors long days on the farm.

If the farmer could have had a fair price for his products in the last decade—that is, some wages for his labor—there would not now be any need of additional credit legislation. But it is going to take the farmer a long time to get back to a normal condition. In the meantime it would be helpful to him if the interest rate on his indebtedness could be reduced. This relief must come soon, for the land is fast passing out of his hands. Recent surveys show less land under mortgage than formerly. The farms are rapidly passing into the hands of the money lender.

If this farm-relief bill does what is expected of it—increase the farm-commodity prices a little—and we adopt the Frazier credit plan as a substitute for the provisions in this bill, the turning point will have come in agriculture, and the whole Nation will soon feel its effect. If nothing is done, we will continue in the direction we are going until all sections of the country have hit a common level, but it will be a low level.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. LONG. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FRAZIER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Lewis	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Couzens	Logan	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Cutting	Lonergan	Russell
Bachman	Dickinson	Long	Schall
Bailey	Dieterich	McAdoo	Sheppard
Bankhead	Duffy	McCarran	Shipstead
Barbour	Erickson	McGill	Smith
Barkley	Frazier	McKellar	Steiwer
Black	George	McNary	Stephens
Bone	Hale	Murphy	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Hastings	Neely	Thomas, Utah
Bratton	Hayden	Norbeck	Trammell
Brown	Johnson	Norris	Vandenberg
Bulow	Kean	Nye	Van Nuys
Byrd	Kendrick	Patterson	Wagner
Capper	Keyes	Pope	Walsh
Caraway	King	Reed	White
Clark	La Follette	Reynolds

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. AUSTIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], in whose absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. LEWIS (when Mr. DILL's name was called). I beg to announce that upon this vote the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD].

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I wish to announce that I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. VAN NUYS (when his name was called). I have a general pair for the day with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT]. I understand that on this amendment he would vote in the same way that I intend to vote. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS (when Mr. WHEELER's name was called). The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT]. I am requested to announce that if the Senator from Montana were present he would vote "yea", and the Senator from Rhode Island, if present, would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GORE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], who has been called out of the city. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Texas and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I wish to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]; and

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY].

I also wish to announce that on this vote the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] has a special pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. If present, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] would vote "yea", and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] would vote "nay."

I wish further to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—25

Bone	Duffy	Murphy	Shipstead
Bulow	Erickson	Neely	Steiwer
Capper	Frazier	Norbeck	Thomas, Okla.
Caraway	La Follette	Nye	Vandenberg
Couzens	Long	Pope
Cutting	McCarran	Robinson, Ind.
Dickinson	McGill	Schall

NAYS—44

Adams	Byrd	Kean	Reynolds
Ashurst	Byrnes	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Clark	King	Russell
Bailey	Copeland	Lewis	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dieterich	Logan	Smith
Barbour	Fletcher	Lonergan	Stephens
Barkley	George	McAdoo	Trammell
Black	Hale	McKellar	Van Nuys
Borah	Hastings	Norris	Wagner
Bratton	Hayden	Patterson	Walsh
Brown	Johnson	Reed	White

NOT VOTING—26

Austin	Davis	Hatfield	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	Dill	Hebert	Townsend
Carey	Fess	Kendrick	Tydings
Connally	Glass	McNary	Walcott
Coolidge	Goldsborough	Metcalf	Wheeler
Costigan	Gore	Overton
Dale	Harrison	Pittman

So Mr. FRAZIER's amendment to Mr. WAGNER's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], as amended.

PROPOSED MEASURES OF INFLATION

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have noticed in the newspapers that the administration has sent to the House a bill requesting the bestowal of power upon the President to annul and cancel any outstanding contracts that have been made by the United States Government. It seems to me that to request such power is in full conformity with the currency experiments embodied in the so-called "Thomas amendment" pending in the Senate. It is reported by the newspapers that the President asks power even to cancel the agreement of the United States to pay its public debt; he asks power to default, annul, cancel the bonds to which we solemnly pledged the faith and credit of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have never heard of the measure that is suggested by the Senator. Will he do me the kindness to tell me what bill it is that seeks to give the President the right to cancel and annul all existing United States contracts?

Mr. REED. It was reported in the press of yesterday morning, and has not been denied, that the administration has sent such a measure to the House—informally, of course—asking for a number of powers, including the powers of which I speak. I will be glad to obtain copies of the press article and show it to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will not ask the Senator to do that. I am unfamiliar with the matter, and that was the reason of my query.

Mr. REED. I shall send for the press article.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. With the permission of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I desire to say that since the Senator says it was on yesterday information was imparted to him from some source of this astounding and revolutionary suggestion, as he would correctly term it, I ask him if he has made any effort from that time to now to verify if such a fact exists, or if it is possible to have been an error of publication?

Mr. REED. I am not in the confidence of the administration, but I have seen no denial of it. If it be untrue and incorrect, I hope someone who does know the intentions of the administration will promptly contradict it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Did the Senator state a bill had been sent to Congress?

Mr. REED. That is my understanding. I have sent for the paper and will place the article in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. This is the first I have heard of the subject matter of the Senator's discussion.

Mr. REED. The reports that I saw purported to be an announcement from the White House giving a list of the powers which the President was asking, and one of them, I remember distinctly, was the power to annul and cancel any existing contract of the United States Government. In case that was done the President was to specify the amount of damages to be paid to the person with whom we had the contract, and if that is unsatisfactory to the victim he is to have the right to bring suit for further damages.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has the Senator made any effort to get a copy of such a bill?

Mr. REED. I have been making an examination of some sort to find out if anybody in the administration had denied it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the Senator recognize that if there is such a bill he could have obtained it merely by asking for it?

Mr. REED. I said this was a request that such a bill be passed. I did not state the bill had been actually introduced. Presumably that will be done today.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator may recall that during this session of Congress, as well as the last session, there was some criticism of certain contracts entered into by the Postmaster General with a number of individuals and corporations, and an amendment was offered in the Senate with respect to the bill then under consideration—and the amendment was germane—that certain contracts be terminated upon the ground that they were unfair and unjust to the Government. I am inclined to think that if the Senator saw a statement such as he indicated, it related solely to those contracts to which I have referred.

Mr. REED. It was not so limited in the press report which I saw, which applied to all existing contracts of the American Government. I hope very much that it is the intention of the administration to restrict it, but as the announcement read it would apply to bonds and every other form of existing contract.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I did not quite understand the Senator. Where was the statement made? Was it an authentic statement?

Mr. REED. It purported to be a statement made from the White House, as I read the paper. To clear up any further doubt, I shall see if I cannot find it for the Senator and read it into the RECORD.

Mr. WAGNER. Unless it is an authentic statement, I think we ought to suspend our judgment on the question until there is something authoritative said.

Mr. REED. I agree with the Senator, and I hoped I could find someone in the confidence of the administration who would tell us that this was untrue.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator think it is fair or just or quite proper publicly to denounce an attitude assumed to be taken by the administration based upon a newspaper report?

Mr. REED. I have sent for the article and will have it for the Senator in a moment. I am putting it in the form of a question.

The article has just been handed to me this moment. In the New York Times I find this statement:

> Mr. Roosevelt sent to the House today a revised estimate for the 1934 independent offices supply bill carrying a reduction of $468,000,000, and at the same time submitted legislative plans formulated by Lewis W. Douglas, Director of the Budget, which would permit the President to cancel Government contracts, furlough at half pay many Army officers, retire civil-service employees who complete 30 years' active service, and give the President other discretionary powers.

Then follows the message of the President, and then the article continues:

> The legislative recommendations were, briefly, to empower the President to cancel existing Government contracts.

Then follows the list of other discretionary powers he wants, and then the article continues:

> A few confidential copies of the proposed legislation and Budget estimates were submitted by President Roosevelt to the House Appropriations Committee. These were carefully guarded, but news of the proposals spread rapidly about the city. Chairman BUCHANAN immediately called an executive session when the bill was received.

They were kept confidential from me, I can state to the Senate, as my only knowledge is the newspaper report, which appeared to be official.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. AUSTIN in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. REED. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ASHURST. If it will give any comfort, and certainly his query is proper, because the item appears in one of the most reliable papers in the world, but I hope the Senator will not ask me to give the authority upon which I make this statement, but I am able to say that not even in the most remote flight of imagination was it intended by anyone connected with the administration that any such cancelation should apply to bonds issued upon the faith and credit of the United States, and paid for by the citizens thereof or by any other person.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I thank the Senator, because his statement does reassure me very greatly. I take it, further, that, if by any chance the legislation should be couched in language so broad as to include outstanding Government bonds, the administration forces here in the Senate would support an amendment to exclude bonds from the list of contracts that might be canceled.

Mr. ASHURST. The Anglo-Saxon, the English—the American race may have faults. We may not possess some of the shining virtues of culture and the particular accomplishments of other races, but the one virtue of our American race—I hope it is not the only one but the grand virtue of our race—is solemnly and promptly to discharge all our obligations.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. REED. I should like to answer the Senator from Arizona if I may. I wish the Senator from Arizona had been here yesterday to hear the statement of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], that he does not expect the United States Government to perform its promise to pay its outstanding bonds in gold. The reason he gave was a surprising one to hear on the floor of the United States Senate, and that was that the amount of the outstanding bonds being greater than the amount of gold that is in the world, the promise could not be performed.

Mr. ASHURST. I have been for the double standard (gold and silver) ever since I was sentient. I think the coinage of silver at 16 to 1 or 20 to 1 would bring prosperity in 40 days. I have said that four different times on the floor of the Senate. I repeat, a bond payable in gold will in my judgment be paid in gold. I think, however, that we should stop the issuance of tax-exempt securities.

Mr. REED. So do I.

Mr. ASHURST. I have introduced a joint resolution proposing that hereafter no tax-exempt securities shall be issued. Some of my ablest constituents, people of importance upon whom I may have to depend to be returned to the Senate, have suggested that I ought to try to have a law or amendment enacted providing that all tax-exempt securities heretofore issued should not hereafter have any tax-exempt privileges. In my judgment the United States should and will live up to that agreement and the constitutional amendment will be prospective instead of retroactive.

I beg the learned Senator from Pennsylvania to believe that neither this administration nor any other administration will ever be elected during his time or mine which will make any move looking toward the cancelation, revocation, or avoidance of the payment of obligations and bonds issued upon the faith and credit of the Government of the United States and upon and for which the people have paid their money.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator. I honor the Senator for the sentiments he has expressed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that immediately after the war authority was given to executive departments to abrogate a number of contracts which had been entered into which called for large payments, the furnishing of supplies, and the building of ships, to be paid for by the Government, but it was understood, of course, that any damages sustained by persons with whom the Government had contracted, growing out of the termination of the contracts, should be paid by the Government. The result was that the Government did pay a large amount in the aggregate for damages sustained by reason of the termination of the contracts.

The matter which the Senator read, it seems to me, relates solely to certain contracts to which reference has been made and which were brought to the attention of the President by Mr. Douglas in connection with the Budget. It is clear that the contracts referred to in the newspaper article are the air mail and shipping contracts, which were discussed upon the floor of the Senate a few weeks ago. Contracts had been entered into which some of us believed were unfair to the Government and in the negotiation of which the Government had been overreached. It seems to me that if upon investigation it is found that some contracts were improvidently made or were tainted with fraud, or that there were conditions attending the making of the contracts which would justify their termination, the authority should be given to abrogate the same. But, of course, there must accompany the power of cancelation the duty and obligation of making compensation to any injured party.

Mr. REED. I do not mean to be drawn into a discussion of those subsidy contracts.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator a committee has been appointed—I happen to be a member of the committee—to inquire into certain contracts with a view to making recommendations to the Congress as to what disposition shall be made of them. Suppose that committee shall find that some contracts were improperly entered into, that they were so improvident as to be unfair to the Government, or to warrant their abrogation, and shall so report, would it be improper for Congress to authorize the President or some agency of the Government to terminate the same? Of course, full opportunity should be given for the review by the courts of the entire matter.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further to me?

Mr. REED. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The learned senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is correct in his horoscope of the situation. I realize that the article has been construed by not a few persons in the way in which apparently it has been construed here. But I invite attention to the fact that along with the publication from which the learned Senator from Pennsylvania read, Government bonds of all issues rose perceptibly yesterday and today, indicating that the purchasers of bonds and those seeking investments generally have no fear that any attempt will be made here to repudiate any bond or other legal obligation of the Government issued upon the faith and credit of the United States.

Mr. REED. I had a notion that Government bonds went up because it was discovered that at least a part of the Senate is still in favor of keeping the promises of the United States.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator has discoursed with great clearness upon the sanctity of contracts. I should like to ask the Senator if he also thinks the sanctity of contracts should apply to the promise of the Government to redeem its gold certificates, and to protect the citizen in his property.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; Mr. President. There are no exceptions with respect to contracts lawfully entered into. All legal obligations must be complied with and executed, no matter how painful compliance therewith may be. There can be no exceptions. A man may not say, "I will recognize and pay this lawful obligation, but not the other."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator, of course, realizes that we have violated that obligation.

Mr. BORAH arose.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator from Idaho wish me to yield to him?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that any distinction can be drawn between a bond and any other contract so far as the power of the President would be involved. In my judgment, it would be just as difficult under the Constitution to grant to the President the power to cancel any contract as it would be to grant to him the power to cancel a bond, because both would be judicial acts; would they not?

Mr. REED. Of course if there has been fraud in a contract the defrauded person has a right to rescind, but the test of his right must always be made in court. He gives the notice of rescission, but the justice of his action must always be determined judicially.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, the President would be authorized to give notice of the termination of the contract, and so forth; but to cancel a contract is a wholly different proposition.

Mr. REED. Oh, absolutely.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me once more? Then I will not bother him further.

There is a group of decisions handed down nearly 60 years ago by the Supreme Court of the United States, known, I think, as the "Legal Tender cases". I have reread them within the last few weeks. Not presuming to say what the Supreme Court might do, I have no doubt that they would take the same view on that subject that they took then; and, in my judgment, the Senator from Idaho is correct. Congress might pass its bills proposing to cancel legal contracts, but the Supreme Court of the United States would have a duty to perform before that could be done.

Mr. REED. Of course, any defrauded person has a right to rescind.

Mr. ASHURST. Fraud vitiates everything.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REED. I wonder if the Senate as a whole will not yield to me for a few minutes?

Mr. LONG. I desire to ask the Senator one question. What about the contracts the Government had for stipulated fares, which yielded under the power of regulation of the Government when circumstances required it? Why would not the same power to regulate the coinage and the value of money apply?

Mr. REED. Because the Supreme Court has held that the regulation of rates of utilities is an exercise of the police power, which may be exercised from time to time as the necessities require. The cancelation of an outstanding debt is not an exercise of the police power as we understand it in our law.

Now, Mr. President, yielding to myself for a moment, yesterday, shortly after this rather ambiguous publication was made of the desire for the power to cancel contracts, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] made the flat statement here upon the floor of the Senate that he did not expect the outstanding Government bonds to be paid in gold in accordance with their terms; and he followed it with the argument, which I say I never expected to hear made on the floor of the American Senate, that they could not be paid in gold because there were more bonds outstanding than there was gold in the world—as if every holder of every Liberty bond could get to the same window at the same instant and demand gold for his obligations!

Obviously, when we had 26 billions of bonds outstanding during the war, the supply of gold in the world was less than it is today, and yet it never occurred to anybody that that was a reason for defaulting on our promise. Everybody assumed, as they have done down through the ages, that such a promise could be fulfilled by paying the first comers in gold, and then buying back the gold, if necessary, in order to pay the second comers. That is the obvious way in which such transactions are handled in commerce and in Government finance. To say here solemnly and seriously that the Government expects to repudiate its promise in those bonds—because that is the only construction that can be taken when such a statement is made by a Senator prominent in the confidence of the administration—is bound, when it is generally understood through the country, to have a terrible effect upon the Government credit.

And what effect can it have, Mr. President, upon the Government credit to find that the administration in power only 6 weeks already is repudiating its solemn promise in its platform of last autumn to stand for sound money at all hazards? They have put in the greenback proposal; they have put in the debasement of the gold content of the dollar; and last night, just before we adjourned, in came a free silver coinage amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and I am told by the newspapermen that it is explained to them that that has the backing of the administration.

If the administration backs the 16-to-1 silver-coinage proposal, backs a $3,000,000,000 issue of greenbacks unsupported by any reserves, and backs this scheme to diminish the gold content of the dollar, what has become of the promise that was held out to the citizens of this country in the campaign of last autumn that the Democratic Party would stand for sound money at all hazards—and 6 weeks after taking office it sanctions such recommendations as that?

I have here, fortunately, the exact text of the message which was sent by the President to the Speaker of the House of Representatives day before yesterday. Accompanying it is sent a message from the Director of the Budget, and it is stated by the President that with the Budget Director's statements he concurs. Here is one of the statements with which President Roosevelt concurs:

SEC. —. Whenever it shall appear to the President that the interest of the United States will best be served thereby, he is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to modify or cancel any contract to which the United States is a party and which was executed prior to the date of the enactment of this act.

Find any qualification in there, if you please, that will protect the man who bought a gold certificate from this very administration 2 weeks ago. If that passes, Congress is giving the President power, at the President's request, to swindle the investor to whom we sold gold bonds in this very month of April 1933; and if that is not meant to cover such securities, what business have we to be considering or receiving half-baked legislation like that?

The particular professor who wrote that section ought to have stopped to think that the faith and credit of the United States are involved when such a power is asked to be put in the hands of the President of the United States.

Mr. President, I was ridiculed yesterday, and charged with speaking only for the rich men of the country, when I said that the consequences of this inflation would be disastrous to the great mass of the American people. The best possible confirmation of what I said comes this morning in a statement from Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in which he says that he knows that this inflation scheme will be an invisible method of lowering wages. He backs up just the statement that we made here in the Senate yesterday, and announces that he will demand a corresponding wage increase to make up for this reduction that is being put upon him through money inflation.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRATTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. REED. Just a moment. I will yield in a moment.

Mr. Green shows his plain recognition of the force of the point that the wage earners of this country are going to be the first immediate sufferers from this inflation scheme that the administration is backing. When he says that he will demand a wage increase I can readily understand that he will; but I can equally readily see that with the sidewalks full of men hunting work he is not going to get his wage increase, and therefore it will remain true that the wage earners of America are the first victims of this scheme of inflation.

Mr. President, it is probable that this thing is coming on for a vote next week—on what day nobody can say accurately; possibly Wednesday. Unless America wakes up, and lets its Congressmen and its Senators know its feeling about this plan, there is every likelihood that it will pass.

This morning my desk is littered with telegrams of congratulation from people all the way from Maine to California on some poor remarks that I made here yesterday. I am not the person to whom to telegraph. Those people ought to be telegraphing to the Senators and Congressmen who have not yet declared their position on this insane scheme. If America will wake up and will send in messages telling how it feels about this, and will cease sitting back and saying, "Oh, well, those Congressmen are going to pass it, anyway", we will have a chance of beating this bill.

EXPANSION OF THE CURRENCY

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have been unable to fathom the legal argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. I hope he may do me the honor to listen to me for a few minutes, and to try to reconcile the argument he is making relative to the power of Congress to coin money and to regulate its value.

To begin with, this Government is not founded on an absurdity. We know that there is only $4,400,000,000 worth of gold coin in America. We know that we have issued in this country approximately $27,000,000,000 of obligations of the Government, payable in gold. Manifestly, neither the Government nor the courts nor the Congress will compel an absurdity. It is impossible by law to make a ball 8 inches in diameter go through a keyhole.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. REED. The Senator could not have heard what I said about that argument. Obviously, the holders of those bonds will have to come to the window one at a time. What is to prevent the Government from buying back the gold from the first comers to pay the second comers?

Mr. LONG. It is all right, I wish to say to the Senator, if the people come one at a time to the banks and to the Treasury for their gold. That is all right so long as there is no panic or emergency or depression among the people; but when matters reach a state, as they have in this instance, where everybody has gone to the banks holding $44,000,000,000 of deposits, payment of which they have a right to demand in gold, and when $44,000,000,000 is demanded in gold, or half of that, or a fourth of that, manifestly we have reached a position which means one of two things—chaos and absurdity, or an orderly regulation of money.

The Senator from Pennsylvania did not object to the power being given to the President to decrease the compensation of the soldiers of the World War. I was against that.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. REED. At the time that bill was sent to us to vote for we were assured repeatedly through press statements that the veteran disabled in service was not going to be harshly dealt with. Does the Senator suppose that that bill ever would have passed if we had known what it was in the President's mind to do to the veterans of the country?

Mr. LONG. I thought I knew what was in his mind.

Mr. REED. The Senator is lucky. He is in the President's confidence.

Mr. LONG. No; I did not get it from the President. I told on the floor of the Senate what the bill meant. The Senator from Pennsylvania, had he heard me then and believed me, would have been as wise then as he is now. The President did just what we empowered him to do. I was against that kind of power being granted to the President at the time for the purpose indicated. I was not in favor of the grant of some of the other powers.

But here is where the Senator from Pennsylvania leaves the ship. He does not remain consistent. The power of Congress to regulate commerce and regulate the value of money is found in the Constitution. I read first the provision relating to the power of Congress to regulate commerce. It is in these words:

To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes.

Now I read the power over money:

To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator find anything in that quaint old document from which he is reading that would justify Congress in giving that power to the President?

Mr. LONG. I am sorry the Senator asked me that, but if the economy bill is constitutional, this measure would be, too, and I am going to take the law as it has been interpreted for us.

Frankly, I want to partly agree with the Senator; I do not approve of the method of legislation we have pursued here, but it is the only kind of method by which we can get relief for the people, and the Senator from Pennsylvania and others have set the example that that is the process we are to follow, and I am going to get in line, because I am for inflation.

I want to get back to what I was reading the Senator. There is not a bit of difference in the world in the effect of the words giving Congress control over regulating commerce and regulating money. There is no difference. The words fix the power to regulate.

We people who have had rate controversies in the courts know what it means. This is what was done: The very interests which are today opposing the right to value the gold content of the dollar—the very interests which are today urging that we have to pay $27,000,000,000 worth of Government bonds with $4,400,000,000 worth of gold—those very interests were the first people, in 1920 and 1921, when that emergency period came about, to urge upon the court that, regardless of what contract had been made with the Government, not only the Government had the right to assail it and to cancel it but that the right was in the private interests themselves to cancel a contract made with the Government or with a State, whether the Government or the State wanted it canceled or not, if circumstances so required.

Now, let me give the Senate the cases on that.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I think that principle has its limitations, because the courts have held, where an agreement is made between a municipality and a public utility that a certain rate of fare shall be charged, that that is an absolute contract and cannot be abrogated. That was held in the New York case, with which I happen to be acquainted. They distinguished between a contract and a mere grant of a franchise. I thought the Senator was going too far.

Mr. LONG. I will cover that case. I am very familiar with the law and the jurisprudence. Most of the suits in my section of the country were brought against me, and I do not think it is necessary to go any farther than Louisiana decisions to get all the law on that question. [Manifestations of laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. LEWIS rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rules of the Senate forbid demonstrations in the galleries. The occupants of the galleries will please take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, this is what the courts have held, that where a city has only the right to grant a franchise, then a contract granting the franchise is valid and binding as fixing a fare; but if the city has the additional power to regulate rates, then the franchise fare or rate is of no value if it is not reasonable considering the times and the conditions. That is the law. Plainly, under the Constitution the United States Government has the right to regulate the value of money, and any contract the United States Government makes is made subject to the greater right of necessity, so that whenever regulation is necessary a contract cannot stand in the way. That is as clear as a pikestaff.

Who was it who made this jurisprudence? Was it made by the United States Government when the emergency arose? No. Was it made by any man in the United States? No. It was made by the financial interests of this country which own the railroads, and own the gas companies, and own the street railroads. The first case, in 1920, the San Antonio Street Railway Co. case, was the birth of that new doctrine out of which philosophy they gained their right to live again.

What did that decision hold? There was an agreement by which the city of San Antonio granted to the San Antonio Railway Co. a franchise to use the streets of that city, conditioned upon them granting a 5-cent fare. In 1921 the San Antonio Street Railway Co. petitioned the council of the city of San Antonio for permission to increase the fare, and the council denied them that right. Thereupon the street-railway company went into the Federal court and urged that the dollar was no longer worth a dollar. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania at least will read what I say, if he does not listen to it. They held in that case—and I defy any man to meet me on this—that the dollar was no longer worth a dollar, but that the dollar was worth only 60 cents, and that therefore the fare of 5 cents for one ride was not a reasonable fare and they proposed to increase the fare to 7 or 8 cents.

Now, we come back to those people and say, the trouble now is not that the dollar is not worth a dollar. The trouble is that the dollar is worth $1.63, and now we say that Congress has to exert the same power that has been established as valid in the jurisprudence of this country through the action of the Supreme Court of the United States. The reply is, "Oh, no; we are holding on to our constitutional right. The fact that the dollar went down in 1921 enabled us to break the contracts we had made with the Government, but the fact that the dollar has gone up in 1933 will not relieve the Government; the Government has to stand up to an absurdity, and absolutely force the lives out of its people trying to get $44,000,000,000 in gold, when the entire gold of the United States amounts to only $4,400,000,000."

Therefore, Mr. President, Congress must act constitutionally under this power. Why all this talk about the sacredness of contracts? It is because there are some who have a little gold left, who have bonds payable in gold; but the overwhelming majority of the people of the United States have neither gold nor obligations payable in gold. They are the persons, naturally, who must benefit from devaluing the gold dollar and from the inflation of the currency; but the man hoarding gold, or who is so fortunate as to have an obligation payable in gold, has not sense enough to see that the goose can lay but one egg a day. They think that these 25,000,000 starving American people will, somehow or other, come through the sweat mill and the grist mill and the wringer, and leave them a means by which they can collect their obligations in gold. Their factories are idle today because those people are without purchasing power. The common man cannot buy from the steel mill unless he has something with which to buy; he cannot buy from the shoe factory unless he has something with which to buy; he cannot buy from the grocery store unless he has something with which to buy. But the bloated owners of fortunes in this country, that ruling class which never has been known to abdicate, cannot see that the people of the United States, 50,000,000 of them, 60,000,000 of them, have no purchasing power. They cannot see that in this emergency $44,000,000,000 of gold demands cannot be paid with $4,400,000,000 of gold, which is the amount of gold in the United States. They cannot see that the enormous production of the United States cannot be consumed by 2 percent of the people who own more than 60 percent of the wealth, and they are depending upon the mills to open and commodities to be sold and the country to thrive, when 75 to 80 percent of the people have nothing on the living face of the earth with which they can buy anything so as to start the country back on the road to prosperity.

Mr. President, the thing which usually occurs in this country is what has occurred ever since time began. The Senator from Pennsylvania reminds me of the First Triumvirate of Rome. Times have not changed a bit. Human nature is just the same as it was 2,000 years ago. People do not change at all. It is the greatest fallacy on earth to think that people change.

Three men in Rome finally divided the world into three parts. Those three men were Caesar, Pompey, and Crassus. One of that triumvirate, Crassus, demanded that the natives of the province over which he ruled pay him in gold in order to get anything to eat. He demanded that his slaves pay him in gold in order to get anything to wear. Finally, when he had absorbed and amassed unto himself all the foodstuffs and all the wearing apparel of the empire and all the gold, he still would not let a single peasant have a thing to eat unless he could come up and pay him in gold, although he had all the gold himself. The common people finally broke in and melted the gold and poured it down his dad-gummed throat until he got enough of it. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. LEWIS rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana will suspend. The Chair will repeat that a rule of the Senate forbids demonstrations in the galleries, and the next time that rule is trespassed upon the Chair will have the galleries cleared. The rules must be respected if visitors expect to occupy the galleries. The Senator will proceed.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am not in the confidence of the President of the United States. I have not been consulted about his plans at any time or at any stage. I do not expect to be, and I am not offended by not being. I was one of the few who sought here a year and a half ago to do whatever was within our power to bring about an expansion of the power to purchase. I was one of the few who were described as iniquitous filibusters because we undertook to hold up the proceedings of the Congress—that is, we were charged with doing that, but we denied it. We were charged with holding up the proceedings of the Congress until we could compel the President of the United States and the administration to expand the currency and to put a purchasing power into the hands of the masses. We have kept up that fight as friends of the President of the United States, both of Mr. Hoover and of Mr. Roosevelt.

Mr. President, I was a friend of President Franklin D. Roosevelt when I stood on the floor of the Senate here less than 3 or 4 weeks ago and did what I did not want to do, and said that this deflation policy into which he was being led would be the ruin of the administration and of the country with it. Our great President, as quickly as he has had time to get the other tremendously important matters out of the way, has seen the light in this matter and he has come to the only sane and sound solution that a sensible, reasonable man can reach in an emergency of this kind.

If we go on with more banks closing; if we go on with the prices of commodities going down; if we go on with the farmer producing so much that we are living in the land of plenty, the foodstuffs piled so high that we cannot see the sun on account of it, and yet the man who produces it starves to death right in the shadow of that kind of a surplus; if we go on with the homes of the country being taken away from the poor people, and those poor people walking the streets today, with the houses still empty, because nobody can get money to rent them or to buy them; if we go on with so much cotton and so much wool in this country and people naked because they cannot get money with which to buy clothes—if we go on with that kind of a condition, the gold is not going to be worth anything to anyone who has it.

Why do we hold up our hands to the great god mammon? Why can we not take the great and valuable resources of this country and spread them among the people? Simply because the medium of exchange has reached such a point that it no longer accommodates the commerce of this country and of the world.

Mr. President, I assume that the Senator from Pennsylvania is satisfied as to the law on this question. I am sorry that he makes no further argument against it, if he has any, though I think there is no real argument against it.

Mr. President, in States all over the country the law fixed a fare of 2 cents on the railroads. There was such a law in Oklahoma, as I recall, and also in Georgia. In some cases a fare of 2 cents was prescribed by the constitutions of the States, and in other instances such a fare was fixed by contract. But lo and behold, 2-cent fares were wiped out. How were they wiped out? On the ground that Congress created the Interstate Commerce Commission and granted that Commission power to change the contracts made by the State governments with the railroads. Now, it is argued that we cannot empower another agency, the President of the United States, to do what we empowered the Interstate Commerce Commission to do. Why cannot the President of the United States be given the same power under the Constitution that was given to the Interstate Commerce Commission? If we had the right to give the Interstate Commerce Commission—and the Supreme Court of the United States said we had—the power to strike down all those contracts, to strike down agreements made with States, if we had it within our right to empower the Interstate Commerce Commission to raise railroad fares from 2 cents per mile to 3 cents per mile and even to 3.6 cents per mile, then why have we not the right to empower the President of the United States to do at least as much as we gave the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to do?

The shoe is on the other foot; it is merely a case of whose ox is gored. The railroads and other interests came before the Supreme Court of the United States and said, "Oh, the gold dollar is worth only 60 cents, and the great, good Government will exercise its power of regulation to cancel those contracts"; and the great, good Government did exercise its power to cancel those contracts through the Interstate Commerce Commission. However, when we say that the gold dollar is worth $1.80 and that if we had a right to raise its value in 1921 we have a right to devaluate it and bring it down in 1933, they plead the sacred, fundamental right of contract. Why did they not plead that sacred and fundamental right of contract in 1921 when they were the beneficiaries of then existing conditions? They did not do it because they were bringing their dollar up from 60 cents to 100 cents. They come here now and plead the sacred right of contract because it is proposed to bring the dollar down from $1.60 to $1. Why did they not in 1921 plead that we did not have the right to give the Interstate Commerce Commission that authority, as they are coming here today in 1933 and pleading that we have not the right to give the President of the United States the authority? What is the difference whether we shall give the authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission or to the President of the United States? Congress authorizes whomsoever it wants to authorize, and its action has been held to be legal process.

Mr. President, I did not intend to address the Senate on this question. The Senator from Pennsylvania is evidently contenting himself with undertaking to stir up propaganda. The worst thing that could happen to the State of Pennsylvania, to the Senator from the State of Pennsylvania, and to the bondholders for whom he is pleading would be to win this fight. The worst thing that could happen to the bloated holders of money in this country today would be to win this fight against the people and President. One more such victory and there would not be anything left of them. The worst thing that could ever happen to them would be for them to be able to thwart the President of the United States in his announced policy of giving this country sufficient money to carry on its business, to put more purchasing power in the hands of the starving people, and to open up and liberalize conditions. The day big financial interests succeed in forestalling this necessary step of the Government will be the saddest day that they have ever seen; it will be a victory the consequence of which they will live to regret.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment I intend to propose to the amendment intended to be proposed by the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], which I ask to lie on the table and to be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the proposed amendment will be received, printed, and will lie on the table.

Mr. GORE. I desire to offer at this time an amendment, which I had printed a few days since. I offer it as an additional section to the so-called "Wagner amendment".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma offers an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New York, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the so-called "Wagner amendment" it is proposed to insert the following:

At the proper place insert the following:

"SECTION 1. (a) The President is authorized to establish a National Board of Conciliation with respect to farm-mortgage indebtedness, which board shall consist of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, a member of the Federal Reserve Board to be designated by the President for that purpose, and such other officer or agent of the Government as may be especially charged with the administration of any law or laws relating to rural credit or farm-mortgage indebtedness.

"(b) The President is authorized to appoint in each State a board of State conciliation consisting of not more than five members, who shall serve without pay.

"(c) It shall be the duty of said State board of conciliation to appoint or designate a suitable number of local boards of conciliation in their respective States.

"(d) It shall be the duty of such State and local boards of conciliation to bring about between farm mortgagors and mortgagees an adjustment of farm-mortgage indebedtedness wherever it may be found practical to do so either by a reduction in the principal of such mortgage indebtedness or in the rate of interest thereon and/or by the conversion of short-time loans into long-time loans with a provision of amortization payments and/or through an agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee under which payments could be made in staple farm products or the proceeds thereof at an agreed price or value more nearly related to the price or proceeds of a like quantity of such farm products at the date of the execution of such mortgage.

"(e) The National Board of Conciliation, with the approval of the President, is authorized to prescribe suitable rules and regulations to effectuate the purposes and objects of this section."

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, my own view was that we had constituted the Farm Loan Commissioner a negotiator and a conciliator, but the amendment may provide a more effective plan, and I am quite willing that the amendment shall at least be considered by the conferees on this bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GORE. I yield for a question.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to make a suggestion, but I will endeavor to put it in the form of a question. It seems to me that the amendment in principle is most excellent, but is it broad enough to include negotiations between those who hold the bonds of the farm-loan banks and the mortgagees?

Mr. GORE. I do not think it goes so far as that, but I am very much pleased to hear the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] express a willingness that this amendment may be submitted to the conferees of the two Houses.

It is entirely permissive, it is in no sense mandatory, and it does not involve the expenditure of a single dollar. It simply places the sanction and the prestige of the United States back of a movement looking to the conciliation of debtors and creditors where farm mortgages are involved. I understand that the State of Illinois already has adopted and is pursuing a policy of this sort, and the Aetna Life Insurance Co., of Hartford, Conn., has adopted and is now pursuing a policy of this kind in several of the Western States. I had a conference with the vice president of that company a few days since, and he assured me that they are meeting at least with a measure of success.

Recently we passed a bankruptcy act. It was founded upon the Constitution; it was well within the powers of Congress. There are a great many people, however, who do not like to take advantage of a bankruptcy act. I think that is peculiarly true of the farmers. This amendment simply introduces a new principle, or a supplemental principle, under which farm mortgages may be adjusted if the parties in interest consent to such an arrangement.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question. Under the terms of his amendment as I heard it read, proposing to set up boards of conciliation, reaching down to the communities, in the case of a mortgage in a Federal land bank as to which it was evident that there was reason why there should be a scaling down or a conciliation or a reconciliation between the creditor and debtor, would there be any restriction?

Mr. GORE. I feel, Mr. President, that the complication in respect to that point has resulted from the fact that the banks have issued bonds predicated really on the face value of the mortgages, and to interfere with them I feel might rather erode—if I may use the word—the foundation upon which the bonds are predicated. If the plan could be worked out, it would be entirely acceptable to me, but I was rather fearful that it might undermine the financial set-up of the bank itself and involve the rights of creditors who were not participants in the conciliation.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator is perfectly aware of the fact that mortgages by the hundreds are being foreclosed by the Federal land banks and the land itself is not bringing the amount of mortgage. Many of the banks, including one that I personally know of, have under the law been forced to foreclose. When they foreclose, they cannot rent the land; they are paying taxes on it, and are at a dead expense. If that condition does not affect the bonds, why should there not be a conciliation between the bondholders and the bank officials looking to a cutting down of the debt to a point where the owner of the land might be able to keep up his interest and his amortization and his taxes? In that event, it seems to me, the basis upon which the bond is predicated would be stronger and sounder than it now is, because somebody has got to lose the money.

Mr. GORE. I appreciate the force of what the Senator says. The amendment offered by me is predicated on the fact that the value of these debts has largely vanished; that the value of the property back of these farm mortgages has largely vanished; the value is not there; it has shriveled and gone. My purpose was to bring the insurance companies and other mortgage concerns to recognize that fact and to base their action upon that fact. I think the sooner we recognize these facts, act upon them, and adapt ourselves to them, the sooner we will extricate ourselves from this difficulty. I have no objection to the proposal of the Senator from South Carolina, if it can be legally wrought into this proposal. Where foreclosures take place, of course, the proceedings are instituted in the courts in pursuance of law; judgments are based upon the laws of the several States and, while such proceedings are unfortunate, they are at least legal and sometimes unavoidable, so far as we are concerned.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I repeat that I think this is a most excellent amendment, but I do not see why it would be difficult at all to include the farm land bank mortgages, for the reason that it is only necessary at most to secure the consent of the bondholders to the scaling down. If the bondholders should consent, the same condition would prevail with reference to the conciliation as would prevail between the insurance companies and the parties owing the mortgages.

Mr. GORE. The Senator from Idaho is a better lawyer than I am; and if he will prepare and offer the amendment, I should be glad to accept it, because it is well within the purview of my intention. I have no objection to it.

I agree with those who regard debts as the crux of our existing trouble. Debts constitute the center of gravity in this vicious situation. I have seen our aggregate national indebtedness estimated at as high a figure as $180,000,000,000. Some 4 or 5 years ago it was estimated at $203,000,000,000. Our aggregate indebtedness has shrunken by foreclosure and by payment down to an estimated $180,000,000,000. It is a paradox that our people get into debt in good times and get out of debt in bad times. The most recent estimate I have seen of our general indebtedness is $180,000,000,000, and about the same time I saw an estimate of our national wealth at the same figure, $180,000,000,000, our national wealth having shrunk during the depression 50 percent, from $360,000,000,000 down to $180,000,000,000.

But that is not the worst. As I see it, the worst feature of the entire situation is the fact that debtors have to pay their debts once, twice, thrice, and even four times over. On the converse, the people who own the claims against the debtors have seen, without their connivance perhaps, the value of their mortgages double, treble, and quadruple, not as the result of any act of their own or as a result of any contribution to the Nation's wealth. But this is the grim situation which confronts us. I think we have to trade ourselves out of this trouble; and if we can provide a life preserver that will assist in riding out the storm, I think we ought to do it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. May I suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma that on page 2 of his amendment, line 9, he insert the words "and all parties interested", so that it would read:

It shall be the duty of such State and local boards of conciliation to bring about between farm mortgagors and mortgagees and all parties interested an adjustment of farm-mortgage indebtedness—

And so forth. That would be broad enough to enable the conferees to work out more detailed language, so as to include the bondholders.

Mr. GORE. I am pleased to accept the modification.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have not any doubt that that power exists now in the Farm Loan Commissioner under the terms of my substitute.

Mr. GORE. I agree with the judgment of the Senator from New York. He interprets the pending amendment offered by himself to involve the power. Perhaps it does. He thinks the power exists. I merely wish to make sure that it does. The Senator will appreciate the fact that the prestige which would attach to the boards of conciliation might give them authority and enable them to go even further than the provisions contained in the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. I agree with the Senator. I think it has the advantage of declaring the congressional policy. I certainly have no objection.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma allow me to ask the Senator from Idaho a question?

Mr. GORE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. Will the Senator from Idaho read his amendment again and tell me where it is to be inserted, because I am very anxious to have the Federal land banks included.

Mr. BORAH. I have prepared it since the matter was brought up on the floor, but my idea is to insert language which would make it possible, if necessary, to work it out in more detail in conference. On page 2, line 7, after the word "mortgagees", I would insert the words "and all parties interested", so that it would read:

It shall be the duty of such State and local boards of conciliation to bring about between farm mortgagors and mortgagees and all parties interested in the adjustment of farm-mortgage indebtedness—

And so forth.

Mr. SMITH. The object being to bring in the bondholder, too?

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. Does the Senator think that will accomplish the purpose?

Mr. SMITH. I believe so.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I have seen an estimate that only 15 percent of farm mortgages are really in distress. That may be too low. My wish is to bring an additional lifeboat to the rescue of those debtors who are in heavy weather. As I said, this supplements the Bankruptcy Act recently passed. I think, as far as it can be done with the voluntary consent of the debtor and the creditor, the scaling down of debts in this way may prove a more successful way of deflating debts than the inflation of currency and credit. It is rather difficult to calculate where we may come out when we embark upon such a policy of inflation.

Mr. President, I wish to make just one further statement. While I agree with those who insist that debts are the crux of the present trouble, I am not in entire agreement with those who insist that debts cannot be paid because there is insufficient money in existence. I do not think that is the trouble. The trouble is the debtor cannot get hold of the money. What I want is to see wider and better markets for our farmers and for our farm produce. I think that what our farmers need is more markets and better markets, and not bigger debts and heavier debts. There is ample money in circulation if the farmers could get their hands on it. They would pay their debts if they had the money.

It may be of some importance to appreciate that point. In 1929, the year of the boom and the disaster, the total amount of payments in the United States aggregated $1,200,000,000,000. At that time we had less than $5,000,000,000 of money in circulation, and yet that small volume of money with a high degree of velocity liquidated $1,200,000,000,000 of debt, or in other words, twelve hundred billion dollars of payments were made with less than $5,000,000,000 of money in circulation.

Last year the payments dropped, I believe, as low as $500,000,000,000. Last year we had more than $5,000,000,000 of money in circulation. Last year with more money in circulation than we had in 1929 we made less than half the payments that were made in 1929. Last year with more than $5,000,000,000 in circulation we made only $500,000,000,000 of payments. Each dollar liquidated about $100 of indebtedness if I compute it correctly.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, would not the Senator better use a different expression in order that the country at large may understand it? We had so much in existence, but not in circulation. We had so much money in existence, but it evidently was not in circulation.

Mr. GORE. My point is this, as the Senator will appreciate: I take the official statement of the Treasury Department for each year, 1932 and 1929. Whatever limitation belongs to the definition—and it is largely a matter of definition—attaches to the one year as to the other and they cancel each other. But at that point I was observing that last year $1 liquidated about $100 of indebtedness. I had not intended to embark upon this monetary discussion, but before I sit down I will tell the story of the clown and the circus, which is familiar to Senators no doubt, but I will repeat it for the RECORD.

The clown in the circus had 19 other men forming a circle with him in the circus ring. The clown turned to his neighbor on his left and remarked that he owed him $2 and that he would make payment as soon as he could. The man to the clown's left made the same remark to his neighbor. That assurance went around the ring until the man on the right of the clown gave him a reassuring promise that he owed him $2 and would make payment as soon as he could. At that point the clown happened to find a silver dollar in his pocket of which he was unaware. He turned to his neighbor on his left and said, "By the way, I will pay you half that I owe you now", and handed him the silver dollar. The same message went around the ring until the man on the clown's right made the statement to him and delivered the dollar. The clown thanked him, dropped the money in his pocket, and a moment later putting his hand in his pocket rediscovered the silver dollar. Turning to the man on his left he said, "By the way, I will pay you off in full. I have a dollar I did not know I had." The man on his left was as generous or as honest to his neighbor. The silver dollar once again made the circuit until the man on the clown's right delivered to him the silver dollar and paid him off in full; $1 had paid $40.

A very small volume of money with proper velocity can liquidate a great deal of indebtedness. What I want to do is to revive trade and revive business and enable farmers and others to get hold of the dollar with which to pay their debts. I profoundly believe that this may in the long run prove to be a more effective policy than mere inflation in order to scale down indebtedness. I respect the opinion of other Senators upon that point. The proposed amendment seems to be meeting with favor and I commend it to the consideration of Senators and trust it will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma

[Mr. GORE] to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to which I ask the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 13, line 18, it is proposed to insert:

(c) Before any joint-stock land bank shall receive a loan as provided for in this section such bank shall enter into an agreement with the Farm Loan Commissioner (1) that such bank will pay, in purchasing its own outstanding farm-loan bonds paid for out of the proceeds of the loan, an amount not to exceed 100 percent of the amount which such holders may have paid for their bonds prior to April 17, 1933, plus interest on such amount at the rate of 5 percent per annum from the date of the purchase of such bonds by such holders, less the amount of any interest received by them on such bonds, but in no event to exceed the face value of such bonds, together with the accrued and unpaid interest thereon; and (2) that whenever any such bonds are so purchased by such bank at a price less than the amount of the face value of such bonds, together with accrued and unpaid interest thereon, the difference between such face value and interest and the amount paid for such bonds by the bank shall be credited pro rata to the borrowers from such bank in reduction on their loans outstanding at the time of such purchase: Provided, That such credit shall not be made until the profits on the bonds so purchased by the bank are sufficient to replace the amount by which its capital has been impaired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I send to the desk another amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 9, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That in any case in which farm-loan bonds are exchanged for duly recorded first mortgages as herein provided in an amount equal to the amount of the unpaid principal of the mortgage on the date of such exchange, such bonds shall bear interest at a rate of 2 percent per annum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not be adopted. It seems to me it would seriously affect the administration of the farm-land banks.

We have no assurance that we can sell these bonds for a 2-percent rate of interest; and I think that the way the measure now reads is a more flexible and more workable provision. I think this would be a very serious interference with the proper administration of the farm-land banks, and I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I think the Senator from New York is laboring under a misapprehension as to the meaning of the amendment.

It is not intended that under this amendment, if it becomes a law, the 2-percent bonds shall be sold. The bill already provides that an exchange of bonds can be made for mortgages, either at a reappraised value or at face value. There is no limitation.

Mr. WAGNER. That simply would mean, if I may venture an opinion, that we will not get any scaling down of mortgages, because a bond with only 2-percent interest is not as valuable to a mortgagee as a similar type of bond would be with a 3- or a 3½-percent rate of interest. In other words, the lower the yield of the bond, the less scaling down of the mortgage will be accomplished. So I think this would just frustrate any efforts by the Farm Loan Commissioner to scale down the outstanding mortgages.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Under this amendment there would be no scaling down of the principal. The write-off on the debt would be in the income. Some people would rather save their capital at the expense of income. Others would rather cut the capital and have a high rate of interest. Under this amendment it is not intended that there shall be a write-off of the principal if the man is given a 2-percent bond. The write-off is in the sacrifice of income.

There are two ways of writing down a debt of long-term standing: It can be done by writing down the principal and charging 6 percent interest on the remaining part of the principal, or the interest rate can be cut down to 2 percent and the principal saved, but making it possible to charge only 2¼- or 2½-percent interest on the mortgage.

Mr. WAGNER. In that event there would be no exchange of the bonds for mortgages at all, and I think the bill would become absolutely ineffective as an aid to the farmer.

While I know that the Senator has a very worthy purpose, I think the amendment should be rejected. I am not giving my own views about it. I have consulted with those who have knowledge superior to my own upon this subject; and while the intention is excellent, as all of the Senator's intentions are——

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WAGNER. They all feel that it will seriously interfere with the workability of the measure and will result in frustrating the efforts to scale down mortgages.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator mean to say that he thinks that this loan agency would be justified in paying a farm mortgagee the face value of his mortgage with a 4-percent land-bank bond, guaranteed as to interest by the Federal Government and exempt from all taxes, under present conditions?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not know. I should have to know about the character of the mortgage before I could answer that question. I should have to know what part of the value of the property it represents. All these facts must be known. It is necessary to deal with these cases individually. They cannot be dealt with in bulk, and thus it is difficult to answer a question of that kind. There are some cases where undoubtedly a bond should not be exchanged unless there is a considerable scaling down of the principal.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I agree, unless the interest is reduced by one half.

Mr. WAGNER. There are other cases, perhaps, where we would be perfectly justified in giving a bond representing the face value of the mortgage. That is why we have to make this law more or less flexible. If we make it rigid, its application will be so restricted as not to bring about the benefits which we desire to bring about.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, a great deal has been said about scaling down the mortgage to the present value. I wish someone would give us a yardstick by which to measure the present value. Is there anyone here who can say what a bond is worth today?

Mr. WAGNER. No; the Senator from Minnesota misunderstood me. I did not say the present value of the property, but the present value——

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Of the mortgage?

Mr. WAGNER. Of the mortgage; yes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The present value of the mortgage is determined by the present value of the property.

Mr. WAGNER. The face value of the mortgage. In a specific case, assume that an outstanding mortgage is for $10,000. It is exchanged for bonds of the farm-land bank. The farm-land bank certainly would not exchange bonds unless there were a considerable scaling down of that mortgage, unless it represents a very small percentage of the value of the property.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The revaluation of the mortgage would have to depend on some basis of value for the property. What basis of value can one take in these days? What is the value of property?

Mr. WAGNER. The Farm Loan Commissioner has the right to make rules and regulations providing for the appraisal of property. He is well enough informed, he has had enough experience, to know what factors ought to enter into a determination of the value of farm properties in these days, when there is not any market for the sale of such properties. In other words, he determines the fair worth of the property.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Upon what basis—the market value?

Mr. WAGNER. No; not market value, of course.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Or the income of the property?

Mr. WAGNER. Fair worth. That can be ascertained.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It must be based on something.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What can we figure as the fair worth of anything under the conditions that we are trying to remedy?

Mr. WAGNER. That is going to be the business of the Farm Loan Commissioner. I have not the knowledge necessary to prescribe rules and regulations for him; but undoubtedly, with his experience, he will be able to appraise these properties at their fair worth, which can be ascertained.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator's modesty does him great justice. It shows that he is an honest man. I do not know where I can find an honest man who is willing to admit that he can appraise the value of a farm in these days, even to his own satisfaction, because there is no basis for value. If the Farm Loan Commissioner should fix a particular value today, or should establish a particular yardstick for the measurement of value today, next week that value or yardstick would be gone, because the price constantly goes down.

Mr. WAGNER. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. If that is so, there is no way of ascertaining the value of the farm land. Then the Farm Loan Commissioner cannot make any new loans, because he is restricted to loaning 50 percent of the value of the land and 20 percent of the value of the improvements. So that he must, under the law, ascertain the value as a basis for making a new loan.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I shall take only another minute to say that I think a more uniform write-off, a more uniform revaluation of these farm properties, could have been fixed if we had provided for taking these mortgages at face value and exchanging them for a 2-percent bond, guaranteed by the Government as to interest. In that way we would have some basis of valuation, and we would cut the farmer's carrying charges in two; and therefore he would, in fact, have a 50-percent reduction in his debt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. GEORGE. May the amendment be stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk restated the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment which I think will take only a very few moments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 26, at the end of line 5, it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That in making loans to owners of groves and orchards, including citrus-fruit groves and other fruit groves and orchards, the Federal land banks, the farm-land banks, and all Government agencies making loans upon such character of property shall, in appraising the property offered as security, give a reasonable and fair valuation to the fruit trees located and growing upon said property and constituting a substantial part of its value.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The amendment of the committee as amended was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if it is in order, I submit the amendment which I send to the desk and which I ask to have printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma will be printed. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 43, after line 5, the Senator from Oklahoma proposes to insert the following:

On page 43, after line 5, insert:

"PART 6: FINANCING—AND EXERCISING POWER CONFERRED BY SECTION 8 OF ARTICLE I OF THE CONSTITUTION: TO COIN MONEY AND TO REGULATE THE VALUE THEREOF

"SEC. 34. Whenever the President finds, upon investigation, that (1) the foreign commerce of the United States is adversely affected by reason of the depreciation in the value of the currency of any other government or governments in relation to the present standard value of gold, or (2) action under this section is necessary in order to regulate and maintain the parity of currency issues of the United States, or (3) an economic emergency requires an expansion of credit, or (4) an expansion of credit is necessary to secure by international agreement a stabilization at proper levels of the currencies of various governments, the President is authorized, in his discretion—

"(a) To direct the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into agreements with the several Federal Reserve banks and with the Federal Reserve Board whereby the Federal Reserve Board will, and it is hereby authorized to, notwithstanding any provisions of law or rules and regulations to the contrary, permit such Reserve banks to agree that they will, (1) conduct, pursuant to existing law, throughout specified periods, open-market operations in obligations of the United States Government or corporations in which the United States is the majority stockholder, and (2) purchase directly and hold in portfolio for an agreed period or periods of time Treasury bills or other obligations of the United States Government in an aggregate sum of $3,000,000,000 in addition to those they may then hold, unless prior to the termination of such period or periods the Secretary shall consent to their sale. No suspension of reserve requirements of the Federal Reserve banks, under the terms of section 11 (c) of the Federal Reserve Act, necessitated by reason of operations under this section, shall require the imposition of the graduated tax upon any deficiency in reserves as provided in said section 11 (c). Nor shall it require any automatic increase in the rates of interest or discount charged by any Federal Reserve bank, as otherwise specified in that section. The Federal Reserve Board, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may require the Federal Reserve banks to take such action as may be necessary, in the judgment of the board and of the Secretary of the Treasury, to prevent undue credit expansion.

"(b) If the Secretary, when directed by the President, is unable to secure the assent of the several Federal Reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board to the agreements authorized in this section, or if operations under the above provisions prove to be inadequate to meet the purposes of this section, or if for any other reason additional measures are required in the judgment of the President to meet such purposes, then the President is authorized—

"(1) To direct the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be issued in such amount or amounts as he may from time to time order, United States notes, as provided in the act entitled "An act to authorize the issue of United States notes and for the redemption of funding thereof and for funding the floating debt of the United States", approved February 25, 1862, and acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, in the same size and of similar color to the Federal Reserve notes heretofore issued and in denominations of $1, $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, $1,000, and $10,000; but notes issued under this subsection shall be issued only for the purpose of meeting maturing Federal obligations to repay sums borrowed by the United States and for purchasing United States bonds and other interest-bearing obligations of the United States: Provided, That when any such notes are used for such purpose the bond or other obligation so acquired or taken up shall be retired and canceled. Such notes shall be issued at such times and in such amounts as the President may approve but the aggregate amount of such notes outstanding at any time shall not exceed $3,000,000,000. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount sufficient to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to retire and cancel 4 percent annually of such outstanding notes, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to retire and cancel annually 4 percent of such outstanding notes. Such notes and all other coins and currencies heretofore or hereafter coined or issued by or under the authority of the United States shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private.

"(2) By proclamation to fix the weight of the gold dollar in grains nine-tenths fine at an amount that he finds is necessary from his investigation to protect the foreign commerce of the United States against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, or in case the Government of the United States enters into an agreement with any government or governments under the terms of which the ratio between the value of gold and other currency issued by the United States and by any such government or governments is established, the President may fix the weight of the gold dollar in accordance with the ratio so agreed upon, and such gold dollar, the weight of which is so fixed, shall be the standard unit of value, and all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity with this standard and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain such parity, but in no event shall the weight of the gold dollar be fixed so as to reduce its present weight by more than 50 percent.

"SEC. 35. The Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to make and promulgate rules and regulations covering any action taken or to be taken by the President under subsection (a) or (b) of section 34.

"SEC. 36. (a) The President of the United States is authorized to accept silver, in amounts not to exceed in the aggregate in value, in the United States currency $100,000,000, in payment of the whole or any part of any amount of principal or interest due from any foreign government or governments on account of any indebtedness to our Government, such silver to be accepted at not to exceed the price of 50 cents an ounce. The authority of the President to accept silver as herein authorized shall be limited to a period of not to exceed 1 year from the passage of this act.

"(b) The silver bullion accepted and received under the provisions of this section shall be subject to the requirements of existing law and the regulations of the mint service governing the methods of determining the amount of pure silver contained, and the amount of the charges or deductions, if any, to be made; but such silver bullion shall not be counted as part of the silver bullion authorized or required to be purchased and coined under the provisions of existing law.

"(c) The silver accepted and received under the provisions of this section shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, to be held, used, and disposed of as in this section provided.

"(d) The President shall cause silver certificates to be issued in denominations of $1, to the total number of dollars for which such silver was accepted in payment of debts. Such silver certificates shall be used by the Treasurer of the United States in payment of any obligations of the United States.

"(e) The silver so accepted and received under this section shall be coined into standard silver dollars and subsidiary coins sufficient, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, to meet any demands for redemption of such silver certificates issued under the provisions of this section, and such coins shall be retained in the Treasury for the payment of such certificates on demand. The silver so accepted and received under this section, except so much thereof as is coined under the provisions of this section, shall be held in the Treasury for the sole purpose of aiding in maintaining the parity of such certificates as provided in existing law. Any such certificates or reissued certificates, when presented at the Treasury, shall be redeemed in standard silver dollars, or in subsidiary silver coin, at the option of the holder of the certificates: Provided, That, in the redemption of such silver certificates issued under this section, not to exceed one third of the coin required for such redemption may, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, be made in subsidiary coins, the balance to be made in standard silver dollars.

"(f) When any silver certificates issued under the provisions of this section are redeemed or received into the Treasury from any source whatsoever, and belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed, but shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation; but nothing herein shall prevent the cancelation and destruction of mutilated certificates and the issue of other certificates of like denomination in their stead, as provided by law.

"(g) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this section.

"SEC. 37. Section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by inserting immediately after paragraph (c) thereof the following new paragraph:

"'Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, the Federal Reserve Board, upon the affirmative vote of not less than five of its members and with the approval of the President, may declare that an emergency exists by reason of credit expansion, and may by regulation during such emergency increase or decrease from time to time, in its discretion, the reserve balances required to be maintained against either demand or time deposits.'"

RECESS

Mr. SMITH. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 2 o'clock and 48 minutes p.m.) took a recess until Monday, April 24, 1933, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Thou who dwellest in the hearts of men—the memories of childhood and the adorations of manhood—unite in praise to Thee, whom we rejoice to call "our Father." We have been sheltered, protected, and loved by Thee, and we pray that Thou mayest soften, chasten, and subdue us to gentleness and gratitude. Fill all hearts with happiness and peace, and may we walk in their power; allow us not to be burdened with fret, care, and brooding desire. Draw our lives, O Lord, nearer and nearer to Thee that we may know of the things that are higher, sweeter, and more precious. These are communion, fellowship, and intimate relationship with Thee, as a happy child is sure of his father at his side. "I will go with Thee all the way." We thank Thee for this heavenly promise made to us. Let divine guidance have fresh meaning and might in the duties of this day. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, anounced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. KING, Mr. WALSH, Mr. DUFFY, Mr. JOHNSON, and Mr. KEAN members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in House Concurrent Resolution 15, to investigate the wreck of the U.S.S. Akron and other Army and Navy dirigibles.

THE WAY TO PROSPERITY—EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be privileged to extend my remarks and incorporate therein some observations by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, Hon. South Trimble, and that they may be printed in 8-point type.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, first acknowledging thankfully the gracious permission of the House to speak briefly on a subject of vast importance, I shall instantly say that the chief object of my presentation at this moment shall be to remove, insofar as I may, an erroneous impression which appears to have taken hold of the average American mind. So scientific and so cunning has been the propaganda by the international bankers, who have for so long controlled the financial policies of our own Government, that until very recent days the average citizen was just a bit ashamed to let the world know that he favored the free coinage of silver, or indeed that he favored any larger use of silver as money of the realm than at present provided by law.

I want to do my part to brush away that hideous error, and I feel that I can accomplish that good end no more certainly than by the aid of one here among us who has been regarded as having more real knowledge on the subject of bimetallism in general, and silver in particular, than any other person in the world. That authority is none other than Hon. South Trimble, the Clerk of our House of Representatives. Recently this distinguished scholar has written a remarkable article under caption, "The Way to Prosperity", which, by gracious privilege of the House, I now present in words and figures as follows:

THE WAY TO PROSPERITY

By Hon. South Trimble, Clerk of the House of Representatives

It seems to be the universal opinion that property and commodity prices must be reflated to just and equitable values before we start on the permanent road to prosperity. In my opinion the only remedy is to either revalue gold or remonetize silver. By cutting the gold dollar in two would double the amount of gold dollars. That would have the effect of doubling the value of commodities and property. By remonetizing silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 and making it a primary or basic money, a money of redemption the same as gold, would have approximately the same effect, as it would double the amount of basic or primary dollars.

Why should we for a moment consider the revaluation of gold in order to increase the volume of our basic money when the remonetization of silver will have the same practical result? The revaluation of gold would produce chaos in the business world, as we have billions of obligations, including all of our Government bonds, payable in gold dollars of the "present standard weight and fineness."

Why not repeal the law of '73, which demonetized silver, and make our own precious metal a basic money, a money of redemption on an equality with gold? The Western Hemisphere produces 84 percent of the silver of the world. The Eastern Hemisphere produces 75 percent of the gold.

In 1929, the peak production of silver in the history of the world, the United States alone produced twice as much silver as all of Europe, Asia, and Africa combined. But we, by law of our own making, destroyed its value as money, depriving it of free and unlimited coinage and full legal-tender privilege in the payment of all debts, both public and private (which it had always enjoyed from the foundation of the Government), and automatically making all of our Government obligations contracted before and during the Civil War, which were payable in coin, payable in gold. Four fifths of said obligations were held by European bankers. Thus the conspiracy to destroy silver by the international bankers, which doubled and trebled the purchasing power of our coin obligations held by them.

It is not my purpose now to discuss the general question involved in the proposition to remonetize silver by restoring it to the privileges it enjoyed from the foundation of our Government to 1873, at which time it was destroyed without the knowledge or consent of the American people. However, it is my honest conviction that if President Roosevelt were to come to Congress with a message to restore silver to its ancient place in our monetary system, Wall Street, the barometer of business, would immediately respond with rapidly advancing prices, hoarded money would come from hiding to be invested, realizing that the purchasing price of the dollar was going down and commodities and prices automatically going up.

If the remonetization of silver be the inestimable boon which its advocates claim it to be, it will enable us to realize it, but if, on the contrary, it shall prove to be an unmixed evil as its opponents assert, then we shall not have gone so far that we cannot retrace our steps without serious derangement of the business of the country. A fair trial and honest effort to solve the problem is all that reasonable men can or ought require.

We should consider this momentous question not from a political standpoint, but from a patriotic one. We must not forget that ever since the organization of our Government until 1873 silver dollars were a legal tender and recognized as the money of the country and up until 1873 the silver dollar was virtually at or above par with gold and would be so today only for the crime perpetrated by its fraudulent demonetization.

The chief argument of the gold monometallists, the single gold standard advocates, sponsored by the international bankers who are absolutely responsible for our present economic conditions, is that the advocates of bimetallism are fools, lunatics, idiots, repudiators, etc.

Now, in order to disabuse the mind of the great body of the American people who have been born since silver was demonetized, I am going to submit party platform planks and observations of a few of the great men of both political parties that have long since passed away.

The Democratic plank in 1884, Cleveland-Hendricks candidates, was:

"We believe in honest money, the gold and silver coinage of the Constitution, and a circulating medium convertible into such money without loss."

The Republican plank, Blaine and Logan candidates, was:

"We have always recommended the best money known to the civilized world; and we urge that efforts should be made to unite all commercial nations in the establishment of an international standard, which shall fix for all the relative value of gold and silver coinage."

In 1888 the Democratic platform, Cleveland and Thurman candidates—

"No financial plank."

The Republican plank, Harrison and Morton candidates, was:

"The Republican Party is in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money, and condemns the policy of the Democratic administration in its efforts to demonetize silver."

In 1892 the Democratic plank, Cleveland and Stevenson candidates, was:

"We denounce the Republican legislation known as the 'Sherman Act of 1890' as a cowardly makeshift, fraught with the possibilities of danger in the future which should make all of its supporters, as well as its author, anxious for its speedy repeal. We hold to the use of both gold and silver as the standard money of the country, and to the coinage of both gold and silver without discriminating against either metal or charge for mintage; but the dollar unit of coinage of both metals must be or equal intrinsic and exchangeable value * * *."

The Republican plank, Harrison and Reid candidates, was:

"The American people, from tradition and interest, favor bimetallism, and the Republican Party demands the use of both gold and silver as standard money, with such restrictions and under such provisions, to be determined by legislation, as will secure the maintenance of the parity of values of the two metals * * *."

It was in February 1891, at Toledo, Ohio, that President McKinley, then a Representative, in criticizing ex-President Cleveland's opposition to silver, said:

"During all these years at the head of the Government he was dishonoring one of our precious metals, one of our own great products, discrediting silver and enhancing the price of gold. He endeavored, even before his inauguration to office, to stop the coinage of silver dollars, and afterwards, and to the end of his administration, persistently used his power to that end. He was determined to contract the circulating medium and demonetize one of the terms of commerce, limit the volume of money among the people, make money scarce, and therefore dear.

"He would have increased the value of money and decreased the value of everything else—money the master, and everything else the servant. He was not thinking of the 'poor' then. He had left their side. He was not standing forth in their defense. Cheap coats, cheap labor, and dear money; the sponsor and promoter of these professing to stand guard over the poor and lowly. Was there ever more glaring inconsistency or reckless assumption? He believes that poverty is a blessing to be promoted and encouraged, and that a shrinkage in the value of everything but money is a national benediction.

"During all these years a conflict between silver and gold (which is, in fact, the struggle of the great common people against the Money Trust) the Democratic Party has, until this act, professed to desire the full restoration of silver as 'standard money.'"

In 1890 President McKinley declared on the floor of the House:

"I would give it (silver) equal credit and honor with gold; I would make no discrimination; I would utilize both metals as money and discredit neither; I want the double standard."

When Mr. Harrison wrote his letter of acceptance September 3, 1888, he said:

"The resolution of the convention in favor of bimetallism declares, I think, the true and necessary condition of a movement that has upon these lines my cordial adherence and support. I am thoroughly convinced that the free coinage of silver at such a ratio to gold as will maintain the equality in their commercial uses of the two coined dollars would conduce to the prosperity of all the great producing and commercial nations of the world."

Quotation from Mr. Garfield's inaugural address of March 4, 1881:

"By the experience of commercial nations in all ages it has been found that gold and silver afford the only safe foundation for a monetary system."

Hon. Daniel Webster's opinion on the Nation's monetary system:

"I am certainly of the opinion that gold and silver, at rates fixed by Congress, constitute the legal standard of value in this country, and that neither Congress nor any State has authority to establish any other standard or to displace this standard."

Hon. James G. Blaine, from the floor of the Senate, February 7, 1878:

"I believe the struggle now going on in this country and in other countries for a single gold standard would, if successful, produce wide-spread disaster in the end throughout the commercial world. The destruction of silver as money and establishing gold as the sole unit of value must have a ruinous effect on all forms of property except those investments which yield a fixed return in money."

Hon. John G. Carlisle, on February 21, 1878, House of Representatives:

"According to my view of the subject, the conspiracy which seems to have been formed here and in Europe to destroy by legislation and otherwise from three sevenths to one half of the metallic money of the world is the most gigantic crime of this or any other age.

"The consummation of such a scheme would ultimately entail more misery upon the human race than all the wars, pestilences, and famines that ever occurred in the history of the world."

Excerpt of letter from Thomas Jefferson to Alexander Hamilton, January 1791 (Hamilton's Works, vol. 4, p. 96):

"DEAR SIR: I return you the Report on the Mint, which I have read over with a great deal of satisfaction. I concur with you in thinking that the unit must stand on both metals."

Excerpt from Alexander Hamilton's communication relating to our first monetary system, submitted to Congress in 1791:

"To annul the use of either gold or silver as a money is to abridge the quantity of circulating medium, and is liable to all the objections which arise from the comparison of the benefits of a full circulation with the evil of a scanty circulation. * * * It seems most advisable not to attach the unit exclusively to either of the metals, because this cannot be done effectually without destroying the office and character of one of them as money and reducing it to the situation of mere merchandise. * * *"

Mr. Hamilton wisely concludes that this reduction of either of the metals to mere merchandise "would probably be a greater evil than occasional variations in the unit from the fluctuations in the relative value of the metals."

The gold standard has bankrupt the world. Strictly speaking, nearly all major nations of the world have been forced off the single gold standard (gold monometallism) and let us hope for the sake of mankind they will never return. The predictions made by those two great men, Carlisle, Blaine, and scores of other statesmen confront us. For the great army of farmers, mechanics, laborers, and merchants who have been reduced to bankruptcy, hunger, rags, and wretchedness by the operation of the single gold standard manipulated by avaricious, greedy, grasping capitalists, there is no remedy. To those who yet stagger under the load thus laid upon them, speedy relief can and should be given. Nature was never more bountiful, the earth never yielded more abundant harvest, human hands were never more willing. What then has produced the present state of affairs? The advocates of the gold standard may avow that it is not responsible for getting us into our present deplorable condition but there is one thing certain, they cannot say that it has done anything to get us out.

The monetary system of a nation is the cornerstone of the foundation upon which the government rests. Broadly speaking, money is a medium of exchange and is as necessary to commerce and civilization as air and water is to animal life. You can live longer without money than you can without air and water, but you cannot be part of civilization.

When the Government permits a small class of men who deal in money for profit to dictate its monetary system it may be expected to end in the money dealers owning and controlling practically all the money, thereby controlling credit, inflating and deflating the price of property and commodity prices at will.

All money is a medium of exchange, but, strictly speaking, nothing is real money except that commodity or commodities which the Government designates by law to be money. After a nation has fixed what its money shall be it then issues different forms of credit money, all of which is directly or indirectly redeemable in the commodity money to which a fixed and stable value has been given.

This is done for convenience—it facilitates the transaction of business, just as your wheat, cotton, and so forth, certificates facilitate the buying and selling of these commodities but has no effect on the volume and value of the commodity.

There are two kinds of credit money, as to the material out of which they are made—one is made on paper and embraces all forms of Government and bank notes issued from time to time as are authorized by law; the other is token money. Token money is made from some metal that does not enjoy free coinage but is redeemable either directly or indirectly in primary, basic, or commodity money which in this country is only gold.

With so much paper or metallic credit money in your possession there is supposed to be that much redemption money to your credit with the Government. It is a check to bearer for commodity money (gold) when presented. We thus see that money primarily is a commodity property, a thing of value possessing an exchange value with all other property.

It is absolutely imperative that you should understand the distinction between actual money and credit money, as no just comprehension of our monetary system as a science can be had without it.

I am herewith appending some statistical deductions from the 1932 report of the Director of the Mint, which will be valuable to those interested in the bimetallic system of money:

"At the Christian era the metallic money of the Roman Empire amounted to $1,800,000,000. By the end of the fifteenth century it had shrunk to $200,000,000. (Dr. Adam Smith informs us that in 1455 the price of wheat in England was 2 pence per bushel.) Population dwindled, and commerce, arts, wealth, and freedom all disappeared. The people were reduced by poverty and misery to the most degraded conditions of serfdom and slavery. The disintegration of society was almost complete. History records no such disastrous transition as that from the Roman Empire to the Dark Ages. The discovery of the New World by Columbus restored the volume of precious metals, brought with it rising prices, enabled society to reunite its shattered links, shake off the shackles of feudalism, and to relight and uplift the almost extinguished torch of civilization." (Report U.S. Monetary Commission of 1878.)

STATISTICAL DEDUCTIONS FROM REPORT OF UNITED STATES MINT FOR 1932

Production of silver in United States from 1792 to July 1, 1834, insignificant. From July 1, 1834, including 1847, 309,500 fine ounces—commercial value, $404,500.

Gold produced in United States from 1792 up to and including 1847, 1,187,170 fine ounces—value, $24,537,000.

Silver produced in United States from 1848 to and including 1872, 118,568,200 fine ounces—commercial value, $157,749,900.

Gold produced in United States from 1848 to and including 1872, 58,279,778 fine ounces—commercial value, $1,204,750,000.

Silver produced in United States from 1872 to and including 1931, 3,079,337,904 fine ounces—commercial value, $2,355,641,511.

Net loss to United States producers of silver due to demonetization, figuring ratio 16 to 1, $1,625,604,165.

Gold produced in United States from 1872 to and including 1931, 164,410,045 fine ounces—commercial value, $3,398,655,300.

Annual report of mint, 1932. Price of silver bullion on London market, 925 fine—

	Per ounce
1919	125
1920	134

New York market, 1,000 fine—

1919	138
1920	137.83

STATISTICAL DEDUCTIONS FROM REPORTS OF UNITED STATES MINT FOR 1930, 1931, AND 1932

The total production of gold and silver in the world for the years 1928, 1929, 1930, and 1931, is as follows:

	Fine ounces
Total gold	82,291,368
Total silver	960,313,580

During the same period the Western Hemisphere produced of this total:

Gold, 22,032,667 fine ounces, 26.77 percent of total world production.

Silver, 810,055,614 fine ounces, 84.35 percent of total world production.

The figures given for 1931 in report of mint for 1932 are marked "subject to revision", but no doubt are accurate enough for all practical purposes.

Production of silver and gold in the world since the discovery of America:

Fine ounces gold	1,084,835,651
Fine ounces silver	15,170,272,102

Production ratio 13.98 to 1.

Total commercial valuation of gold, $22,413,757,117.

Total commercial valuation of silver, $19,195,587,185.

Total value of silver dollars of 371¼ grains, $19,613,644,800.

Silver coined from 1793 to 1873 by U.S. Mint

Silver dollars	$8,031,238.00
Half dollars	100,541,253.00
Quarters	22,288,021.50
Dimes	9,242,079.20
Half dimes	4,880,219.40
3-cent piece	1,282,087.20
Total silver coined from 1793 to 1873	146,264,898.30
Silver dollars coined in 1871	1,117,136.00
Silver dollars coined in 1872	1,118,600.00

More silver dollars coined in these 2 years than in any previous 4 years in the United States history.

Gold coined from 1793 to 1873 by U.S. Mint

Double eagles	$680,466,000.00
Eagles	55,656,940.00
Half eagles	68,889,385.00
3 dollars	1,169,883.00
Quarter eagles	26,750,302.50
Dollars	19,181,927.00
Total, 1793–1873	852,114,437.50

There was not a single gold-dollar piece coined by the United States Mint until 1849, 57 years after we established a mint (1792) and there has not been a single commercial gold dollar coined since 1899, 44 years.

Prior to 1687 the value of fine silver was $1.38 per ounce, equivalent to a ratio of 15 to 1. From 1687 to 1873 the commercial ratio ran from 14.14 to 16.25. From 1873 to 1931 the commercial ratio ran from 15.93 to 71.25. From 1834 to 1873 there never was a minute that silver was not a premium over gold.

In other words, in 1873, before silver was demonetized, you could sell 15.93 ounces of silver and buy 1 ounce of gold, while in 1931 you would have to sell 71.25 ounces of silver to buy 1 ounce of gold as a result of demonetization. Demonetization means destroying silver's use as a commodity or basic money.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I am abundantly persuaded that a careful reading of the facts and figures presented by South Trimble will carry any hitherto cowardly citizen quickly away from the door of cowardice and make him bold to declare pridefully his firm belief that the instant need of our Republic in this hour is the remonetization of silver.

Let me further suggest to my every colleague who has been receiving, as am I, constant requests from his constituents with reference to the great silver problem that it might be well to answer such requests by quickly transmitting to any inquiring constituent a copy of the unanswerable argument made by South Trimble in behalf of silver and its larger use as money in our America.

EXPANSION OF THE CURRENCY

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no intention of objecting to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi; but we are anxious to begin the consideration of the Muscle Shoals bill and I shall feel compelled to object to any other requests.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we do not know what the gentleman is going to talk about and someone may want to answer him. If the gentleman is going to take that position, I shall have to object to the request because we may want 10 minutes on this side to answer the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I shall not object to one additional speaker——

Mr. SNELL. Or two, if necessary.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Or two, if necessary, provided they do not consume more than 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday certain alleged leaders of the Republican Party issued a statement attacking President Roosevelt's program of currency expansion, as incorporated in the amendment offered by Senator Thomas, and the bill which I introduced in the House on yesterday (H.R. 5158).

Their statement is one of the most consummate pieces of Republican duplicity with which that discredited group has attempted to deceive the American people for many a day. They were aided and abetted by Andrew W. Mellon and Ogden Mills, the two men most responsible for the deplorable condition of this country today. [Applause.] They wrecked the administration of President Hoover. They are now undertaking to wreck the administration of President Roosevelt. From the standpoint of the welfare of the great masses of the American people they ought to be characterized as public enemy no. 1 and public enemy no. 2. [Applause.]

They are now in this Capitol lobbying against the greatest step for relief of humanity that has ever been taken by a President of the United States in times of peace. [Applause.]

If I were a painter, with the genius of Rembrandt, and desired to transmit in living lines to the generations yet to come a true picture of the Hoover administration I would take my suggestion from an expression once used with reference to Robespierre, and I would draw a picture of cynical old Andrew Mellon squeezing a human heart over a wineglass, with Ogden L. Mills holding the glass and the administration looking on with smug complacency. That is the picture that should be passed on down to the generations yet to come, as a solemn warning never again to turn this Government over to the subservient representatives of the money changers of Wall Street. [Applause.]

Let us see what they say in this statement. In the first place, they say that "half of this money is secured by paper and the other half is just paper." If they know anything about finances, everyone knows that this statement is untrue.

Every dollar of the money proposed to be issued under this plan is just as good as any other American dollar outstanding today. The money issued under section 1 is in accordance with the Federal Reserve Act and is on parity with money issued under the Federal Reserve System.

The money issued under section 2 is issued under the same law employed by Abraham Lincoln during the Civil War, who expanded the currency then over the protest of certain money changers of the country and helped to finance that great conflict. Every dollar of this money under the Gold Standard Act of 1900 is worth 100 cents on the dollar. It is interchangeable with every other kind of money we have. It is backed by every ounce of gold, every ounce of silver, every penny of wealth, and all the credit of the United States. Yet they come in and tell you that it is "fiat money." Ogden Mills knows better than that, though some of the other gentlemen may not.

But they say that "if it does take", it will probably cause prices to rise "because of a lack of confidence." Is not that logic? My God, if lack of confidence would cause prices to rise in America, the lack of confidence in the Hoover administration would have created the greatest boom of all times. [Laughter and applause.]

But listen to this—oh, listen to this. They say, "This bill may well constitute the first step on the road to ruin." In the name of all the gods at once, where have they been since 1929? The first step on the road to ruin! Do they mean the first step retracing the "road to ruin" that we have traveled for the last 4 years?

Why, look back for the last 4 years at that "road to ruin" and what do you see? You see failures, foreclosures, bankruptcies, and disasters on every hand. You see farmers driven from their homes, mortgages foreclosed, lands sold to pay their taxes; you see ragged and distressed laborers tramping the streets or crowding the bread lines of the towns and cities; you see hungry men, women, and children from the best families of America begging their bread from door to door, while crimson splotches of suicide mark the mileposts along that "road to ruin" that we have been traveling since 1929. Yet, Mr. BERT SNELL and Mr. ROBERT LUCE, Senator DAVE REED and Senator WALCOTT say that we are about to "take the first step on the road to ruin"!

Let us see what is said further. They go on to ask further, "Who will be injured by it?" and they say it will be the "wage earner." Twelve millions of these wage earners are out of employment. This expansion of the currency will bring back commodity prices, restore the purchasing power of the American farmer, which will enable him to pay his debts, and the interest upon his mortgage, and to buy manufactured articles, to feed, clothe, and equip his family. That will start the wheels of industry to turning, and make work for the unemployed. Then your bread lines will immediately disappear. It will benefit, and not injure, the wage earners. Your railways will begin to carry freight instead of empty box cars, and there will break over this distressed land a new day of progress and prosperity the like of which we have not seen for many a day. Yet they say this will injure the wage earners, those 12,000,000 men who have not drawn a penny of wages for 4 years!

Then they mention the "salaried class." Every salaried man and woman in America, from the President down, is having his salary rapidly reduced at present because of this depression, and it is going to be further reduced, if not wiped out, unless this expansion program is put into effect.

Next, they mention the man with a "fixed income." Aye, there is the rub! He is the real individual they are interested in. Did you know that all these billions of Government bonds have been gathered into the hands of those who have made their fortunes out of the tariff and those who have made their millions out of the war, out of the blood and tears of the suffering men, women, and children of the world? They have "fixed incomes", and do not want any expansion, which will bring the other man's wages or commodities up and bring their dollars down. There is the class that Mr. Mills and Mr. Mellon represent. They are the ones who are opposing any currency expansion at this time.

Then, listen to this. They say "last, but not least", the person who will be disastrously affected will be the "farmer." Don't you know the farmers feel flattered to have that bunch mention them in that way, down at the tail of the list? [Laughter.]

Then they go on and talk about the interest that the German farmer has to pay as a result of expansion in Germany. Mr. Speaker, the American farmer is paying today 30 percent interest, based on the price of his commodities at the time those debts were made. Since his commodities bring only about one fourth or one fifth of what they did when his debts were made, his interest rate has been increased four or five hundred percent.

No, Mr. Speaker; the farmer will be the first man to benefit, and when he does all the rest of you will benefit.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. What does the gentleman think of the wisdom and Americanism of their issuing such a statement at a time when a return to confidence is so very important?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, at the time that statement was issued there was opening up in this city a series of the most important economic conferences ever held in the history of mankind, and to make such a statement in the face of that condition, in my opinion—well, if we Democrats had made it under similar circumstances while Mr. Hoover was President or while Mr. Coolidge was President they would have said that it smacked of disloyalty to the American people and to the American Government.

They go on to say that "prices may rise." They know that prices are going to rise, and they are rising now, in spite of this opposition. They say that prices may rise, but that they will rise "as a result of fear, not of confidence." Fear of what? Fear that the Republican administration will come back into power? If that is what they are afraid of, they may dismiss it, because we are going to put this program through, and we are going to do it in the next few days. [Applause.] And when we do it we are going to rescue the American people from this terrible panic and start our country out upon a new path, a new era, a new day of happiness, progress, and prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, if this measure is passed and its provisions fully carried out, it will mark the turning point in the history of our civilization. It will bring order out of chaos, hope out of despair, prosperity out of panic, and will write the name of Franklin D. Roosevelt among the immortals of the ages. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], from his standpoint, has made a logical argument on the statement that was put out in the newspapers yesterday, but fortunately not all of us agree with him on this subject. I think probably I am as much responsible for the statement he has been criticizing as any other man connected with it, and I do not apologize for a single word in it. I take the responsibility for it, both as a Member of the House of Representatives and as an American citizen. [Applause on Republican side.]

The gentleman said that the statement was aided and abetted by Mr. Mellon and Mr. Mills. I will say that as far as I am personally concerned I have never seen Mr. Mellon nor heard from him since he resigned as Secretary of the Treasury. It was also reported by some paper that Mr. Hoover was probably responsible for the statement. I will say that I never have heard from or seen him since he left Washington on the 4th of March.

Now, in regard to Mr. Mills' connection with that statement, I will say that I invited him to my office to discuss this subject yesterday morning, and I do not apologize for that either, for Mr. Mills is a man with some definite knowledge and experience on these matters and knows more about them than any man connected with the present administration; and the only difference between the Treasury Department under the present control and the Treasury when Mr. Mills presided over it is that it has all the weaknesses surrounded by all the same influences that it had, but it does not have one half the strength, character, and ability that it had when Mr. Mills presided over that Department. [Applause.]

You know, I thought that the Democrats would find some new argument to present to the House, without attacking Mr. Mellon and Mr. Mills when they both ceased to be a part of the Government; but from the fact that they are two such strong individuals, such outstanding characters in every respect, you just cannot get away from the old habit of trying to attack them. Why, they are not to blame because they have more brains and ability than anyone in the Democratic Party, and the more you attack them the stronger you make them.

The gentleman from Mississippi spoke about the wealth and the corporate connections of these gentlemen. I wonder if he has ever looked up the history and corporate connections of the present Secretary of the Treasury. I think you will find that he has just as many corporate connections, or has had, as any man that ever occupied that position in recent years. I wonder if you will want to investigate him for that reason?

The gentleman spoke about the banks. Perhaps under the Republican administration some of the banks were closed, but we were never as successful as the Democrats in closing all of them at the same time. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. If you Republicans continue the opposition to the currency legislation, you are likely to succeed in closing the rest of them.

Mr. SNELL. Thank the gentleman for the suggestion; but, of course, he and I disagree on that issue. My idea in putting out the statement yesterday——

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I am wondering if it is true that Mr. Mills advised Mr. Hoover before the 4th of March to take the same step that Mr. Roosevelt did.

Mr. SNELL. I cannot answer the question, but I think I am safe in saying that the present Secretary of the Treasury wanted President Hoover to close them and President Hoover refused.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Nearly all the banks were closed before the 4th of March.

Mr. SNELL. They were not all closed by direct authorization of the President of the United States; that is absolutely sure.

Mr. BULWINKLE. They were closed by the Republican panic.

Mr. SNELL. Well, I suppose you are willing to give us full credit for that, but nothing else; but the Republicans never succeeded in closing them all at one time, that is certainly true, and I will give you the credit for that, if it is anything to be proud of.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I cannot yield now. After I get through, I will yield as long as you want to keep me here. Our position is that we are absolutely opposed to what is fiat money, and if the proposed amendment does not issue money that is pure greenback money, I am frank to say that I do not know what greenback money is. And to prove that assertion, you will find in the bill a reference to the fact that this money is to be issued under the old greenback law of 1862. That is proof in itself and all that it is necessary to say about it. There is not a single thing back of this proposed money, only agreement to pay; every man who thinks and knows anything about it knows there is not, and I doubt, after careful consideration, if any man will say there is.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I should like to go on for a few moments, and then I will yield as long as you want me to.

The Democratic platform states that you stand for sound currency. Every statement made by the present President says he is for sound currency and not for greenback currency; at least that is the impression he wants to convey to the country, yet he is backing every kind of inflation in this measure ever presented by the wildest inflationists.

We also oppose section 3 of this bill because it is absolutely contrary to the Constitution of the United States. Let me read just what the Constitution provides in regard to that matter. Section 8 of the Constitution vests in Congress—

> The power to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standards of weights and measures.

This is the first time that I know of that any President has ever asked us to violate the Constitution in respect to money and money values.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. SNELL. Yes. To satisfy the gentleman, I will yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The same question was raised on the tariff bill when the President was given power under the flexible provision of the Tariff Act, and it was held that where a limit was fixed it did not violate that clause of the Constitution which the gentleman has just read. This has been gone into carefully by the leading lawyers of the country, and they hold that this authority, with that limitation, is constitutional.

Mr. SNELL. This is an entirely different proposition from the tariff proposition. Certain power was given to the President under the tariff law to act as the result of a determination by a body set up by Congress to make that determination. That was the reason we gave authority to the President to raise or lower 50 percent, as a direct result of a determination and recommendation made by the Tariff Commission. This is an entirely different question that we have before us at the present time. Here you propose to give him power over money matters delegated to Congress, without any restrictions whatever, and it is clearly unconstitutional.

It has been stated that it was necessary to do this to prohibit Congress from doing something worse; or, if those are not the exact words, that is the impression that has been given to the country by the Democratic administration. I do not know where anyone gets any basis for that kind of a statement.

I want to say, if there is any new method of inflation that is not taken care of in the present amendment, I should like to have somebody tell me what it is. The only methods of inflation that have been spoken of have been by issuing fiat money, by coinage of silver, and by the devaluation of the gold dollar. Every single method that has ever been suggested is provided for in this legislation. If you can tell me there is anything in that to prohibit Congress from doing something, I want somebody to state it.

I maintain that we appreciate the fact that there should be some increase in commodity prices, but from my standpoint, from the standpoint of the thinking people of this country, I do not believe that under the present conditions in this country we must repudiate our present currency and start on printing-press currency just to accomplish that result. I do not want to burn down the whole house to remedy some slight defect in the structure. And I, for one, am willing to take responsibility for that statement as far as it goes along that line. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] has expired.

MEETING OF COMMITTEE ON LABOR

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor may have permission to meet during the sessions of the House, to hold hearings on the 6-hour day and 5-day week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY]?

There was no objection.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 111.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 111

Resolved, That immediately upon adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration of H.R. 5081, and all points of order against said bill shall be considered as waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 6 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Military Affairs, it shall be in order for the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs by direction of that committee to offer amendments to any part of the bill. If there be no such amendments offered by the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, then the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY], to be distributed as the gentleman sees fit.

I now yield 8 minutes to the Chairman of the Rules Committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, this special rule no. 111 brings before the House the bill providing for the operation of the great Muscle Shoals property. This question has engaged the attention of Congress at one time and another since 1916. The Nation's investment in Muscle Shoals approximates $150,000,000. There is electric energy going to waste annually, amounting to approximately $2,500,000. It seems it is about time that some action should be taken with respect to this great Government property.

The Rules Committee has reported out the special rule, which gives 6 hours of general debate. It provides that only amendments can be offered by authority of the committee having charge of the measure, and for that restriction we have no apology to make. It is the purpose of the Committee on Rules, as far as we can, to provide restrictions whereby members of this Committee on Military Affairs, working in harmony with the administration, shall keep absolute control of this measure on the floor of the House. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I suppose we shall have the usual number of wise cracks that this measure is in response to another order from the White House, and that gentlemen who are supporting it are no more than rubber stamps, carrying out orders from the administration. Mr. Speaker, I do honestly believe the President has consecrated every faculty of his mind, soul, and heart to the great task of leading this Nation out of the slough of despondency in which we have been floundering for the last 3 years. I gladly follow his lead. Proudly, to the extent of my ability, I shall hold up his hands, because I have read in the market reports that during the last 30 days, approximately, there has been an increase in the price of cotton, in which my people are so largely interested, of $8 per bale, and an increase in the market price of wheat of about 20 cents a bushel. Of course the friends of the administration do not claim sole credit for all of this advance, but we do say it has been brought to pass largely because of the great program that this man has mapped out, and we propose to hold up his hands in carrying out the program he has announced. If the charge is made that to aid in carrying out his program, which has already succeeded to such an extent, one must be a rubber stamp, then I myself proudly plead guilty. So, Mr. Speaker, we have provided that this bill shall have ample time for discussion.

But we have protected it against amendments intended only to embarrass. I think it can be said safely that it is but part of the administration program and the majority members of the Rules Committee felt we were responding to an overwhelming sentiment of the House when this special rule was reported out. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this rule, if adopted, will bring before the House what is known as the Muscle Shoals bill. Men who know nothing about business are today making an assault on the great power and fertilizer companies of our country. Many who had investments in railroads shifted their investment to power companies, believing they were less open to attack by the Congress. There are many thousands who own less than 50 shares of electric power or fertilizer companies stock, and in their name I ask you to carefully consider this bill; it is the entering wedge. Continue along these lines and you will have a socialistic government, destroying the initiative that has made this country great. If you pass the bill you will spend 30 millions for the development of Cove Creek, and more than 40 millions alone for transmission lines to serve the people and industry who are already served by existing companies.

The construction of Cove Creek Dam should not be undertaken until there is a demand for more power from that section of the country; the existing power companies in that part of the country are today able to produce more power than can be consumed by any business development in the next 10 years.

This bill will not only cause the Government to expend millions, but, like every Government operation, will not pay for itself. It is squarely the issue of Government ownership and operation of power and fertilizer business as a major operation, and must of necessity increase taxes.

Many who know nothing about business, instead of working to reduce taxes in our cities, States, and Nation are interfering with business and apparently are doing all in their power to destroy income. We should work to reduce taxation. This bill will have the opposite effect. Taxes are five times as high as they were 15 years ago. They are higher this year than last, and at least every fourth dollar of income goes to the tax collector. The story that taxes are paid by the rich is a lie and has caused the uninformed to vote for bond issues, causing cities and States to almost reach bankruptcy. Are we in the Nation to do what many municipalities have foolishly done?

The Alabama Power Co.'s stock is held by people in every county in the State of Alabama; the average is 16½ shares, but savings banks and insurance companies are also holders. The company has 3,609 miles of transmission lines, which are load lines; the distributing lines are 3,848 miles. The production of power is only 70 percent in use. There are over 1,800 men employed. In 1932 the existing power companies paid $1,981,661 in taxes; they also paid $4,666,424 interest on their bonds and over $2,400,000 in interest on their stock. If you parallel the existing lines, it will not spell economy, and an investment of 400 million dollars will be destroyed, without counting the crippling of the 800 firms engaged in the fertilizer industry. It is understood that the railroads are to be protected against any unjust competition. Why not the power and fertilizer industries? Both are greatly damaged, if not destroyed, by this bill.

In the last Congress an attempt was made to take the Government out of business. I ask you what has become of that thought? If a Government restaurant is wrong, what about putting the Government in the power and fertilizer business?

I ask you to consider in relation to the bill that the Department of Agriculture reports that these plants are obsolete and will cost many millions to modernize. The power plant is today earning more than the operating expenses. Why not wait until the depression is over?

The bill permits the Patent Office to be invaded to study, copy, and use all methods. This is robbery within the law. It also grants the right of eminent domain. No one knows what that will cost.

If you pass this bill, you will put out of business many fertilizer plants, employing thousands, to say nothing of the capital invested. You will destroy the Commonwealth & Southern Co., which is a holding company, and make it impossible to ever pay dividends to thousands that own stock in that and allied companies.

You have taken from our "defenders", the soldiers and sailors of all wars, and the underpaid national employees $550,000,000. Is this sum to be spent on an experiment which is socialistic? Are business and income to be taxed until income is destroyed?

I ask you in the name of the Republic to cut down unnecessary expenditures, particularly expenditures that interfere with existing business.

Projects of this kind, if passed, will be duplicated, and will call for the expenditure of billions. How far can the Government run into fresh debt without impairing its credit and bringing about a great crash? Extraordinary borrowings would be at this time a calamity. I ask you to stop, look, and think of the future; if you do, you will save the Government from staggering losses. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the majority leader, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns].

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, this rule, if adopted, provides, as the gentleman from North Carolina, the Chairman of the Rules Committee, has said, for 6 hours' general debate on the bill. At the conclusion of that time the previous question is to be considered as ordered and the House will be asked to vote upon it.

I think it rather significant that there has been no attack from our friends upon the other side of the aisle, the Republicans, claiming that this is a gag rule. I assume this lack of attack is due to the fact that my good friend from Connecticut [Mr. Goss] was frank enough to state that this action was really taken at his suggestion as a member of the committee; all of which goes to show that sometimes, at least in the opinion of the gentleman from Connecticut and others of like political persuasion, it is important to have a rule of this kind. To my mind it somewhat reflects—and I say this with all kindness—upon the sincerity of those who have heretofore in the discussion of rules arraigned the committee and the Democratic Membership of the House for presenting rules which seek to cut off amendments.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. SNELL. We have become so accustomed to these gag rules that we are really surprised when you allow us to even talk under the general liberality of the Democratic Party. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS. I had an idea that the gentleman, during the past 14 years in which his party has been in power in this House, was fairly accustomed to the idea of a gag rule. Hence I was very much surprised when I heard criticisms by the gentleman of what he chooses to call "gag rules" after the Democrats assumed control of the House.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. But the most surprising feature of this situation here is that this gag was requested by the Republican minority, as I understand it.

Mr. BYRNS. That was the statement which appeared in the morning's paper.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I might say, without disclosing anything confidential, that that was the information conveyed to the Rules Committee. The minority wanted to be gagged so that it might protest in behalf of the power companies, but could not do anything in reference to the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS. This simply confirms the statement I made.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. For a brief question.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from New York, to whom the gentleman has referred as having been active in connection with rules, has been for several years, I will admit. I am always behind the Rules Committee and want to protect the integrity of the committee and the rules of the House. We might have brought in rules that were considered strict, but, as far as I can remember now, we have never brought in a general piece of legislation similar to the one being considered here today and denied the House the right of amending it. Will not the gentleman agree with me in this statement?

Mr. BYRNS. No; I am sorry I cannot.

Mr. SNELL. Then I wish the gentleman from Tennessee or some member of his committee would mention a specific bill outside of a tariff bill, which is an entirely different proposition, which we have brought in under such a rule.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. They got over that hurdle by calling them up under suspension of the rules.

Mr. BYRNS. Precisely.

Mr. SNELL. Then we had to have a two-thirds majority to do that, which means you fellows must have joined us.

Mr. O'CONNOR. You had the two thirds seated over there.

Mr. SNELL. We have not had a two thirds since the gentleman has been sitting in this House.

Mr. BYRNS. Both the gentlemen from New York seem to be unanimously agreed that it was the custom of the Republican Party during their control of the House to deny the Membership the right to offer amendments to important bills.

Mr. SNELL. I deny the gentleman's statement. Name a single instance in which that was done.

Mr. BYRNS. I am not criticizing the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman said we did it. Now give us an instance in which we did it.

Mr. BYRNS. I am not criticizing the gentleman and his party for that.

Mr. SNELL. I do not think the gentleman can in view of his activity this year.

Mr. BYRNS. But I am talking about the sincerity of the gentleman and his party when they now undertake to criticize the Democratic Party for presenting similar rules.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman has no right to criticize my sincerity on that because not a piece of general legislation was presented by our party which was not open to unqualified amendment.

Mr. BYRNS. If this is not general legislation, I fail to understand the meaning of the term.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman cannot suggest any bill.

Mr. BYRNS. I cannot at this particular moment, but I submit that the RECORD is full of such instances. The Smoot-Hawley tariff is only one of many. Some day, when I have the time, I am going to compile some of them.

Mr. Speaker, this is all aside, and I did not know it was going to excite the attention of my friend from New York to the extent it has. Evidently I touched a sensitive spot.

Since July, 1921, Congress has been endeavoring to make some disposition of the great investment the Government has down at Muscle Shoals amounting, as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] said, to something like $150,000,000. It will be recalled that Mr. Ford submitted his first proposals at that time.

Various bills have been introduced at every term of Congress, but the great interests which have opposed the development of this investment and its use in the interests of the people have been able, by playing one House against the other, to defeat them up to this time, except in two instances, when a bill which was finally passed was vetoed by President Coolidge through the pocket-veto method, and one was vetoed directly by President Hoover.

But I am thankful that now we have a man in the White House who is looking at this great investment down there, paid for by the people of the United States, from the standpoint of the interest of the people and he favors its development in the interest of the people rather than to let it remain idle in favor of the great interests which you and I know have opposed its development in the past and have succeeded in their efforts up to this time.

Personally, there are some amendments to this bill I would like to see adopted. I regret that the committee, by a close vote, struck from the provisions of the bill the 5 percent which was to be paid to the State of Tennessee and to the State of Alabama from the gross proceeds of power generated in those States; but I am not going to vote against the bill because of this fact or because I have no opportunity to offer an amendment upon the subject.

I do want to say, in support of my own opinion and those who favor this sort of provision, that under the terms of the bill you are taking out of the taxable property in the State of Tennessee more than 70,000 acres of land which will be flooded by the erection of the Cove Creek Dam.

I should like to see some provision in this bill giving the State of Tennessee the right, within a period of years, to purchase Cove Creek Dam, located, as it is, within its borders, but such privileges of amendment are denied by this rule.

Notwithstanding this, I am going to vote for this rule, because I realize that the Membership of this House, in a matter of this importance, involving as it does the operation of this great investment, cannot possibly sit upon the floor of the House and amend it without possibly destroying the whole structure of the bill. It has been carefully considered by a committee in which we have every confidence, and I am willing to trust their judgment.

I am not going to comment on just what the passage of this bill will mean. Our great leader in the White House has had the vision to see what it will mean to the great section of my own State in the development of the great Tennessee River Valley Basin and he has stated that in his opinion, it is simply the forerunner of similar developments which will take place throughout the country. This means the building of industrial plants and the employment of labor and relief to agriculture in the matter of cheaper fertilizer. It means, also, that if the investment is to be operated by the Government, it will present a yardstick by which the utility commissions of this country will be able to know, in exact figures, just what it costs to produce power and thereby fix the rate to the great consuming public accordingly. [Applause.]

I have received numbers of letters from stockholders in power companies protesting against the passage of this bill because it gives to the President authority to build transmission lines. In the very nature of things there can be only one consumer to whom the Government can sell any surplus power if it is required to sell same at the dam. This has been the trouble in the past, and as the result the Government has been unable to dispose of what power has been generated at anything like the price it felt that it should receive. It has been estimated that the Government has lost on this account something like 2½ million dollars every year. The power thus given is discretionary and will not be exercised unless the President finds that it is necessary to protect the Government. In such event, the bill expressly provides that he shall first make an effort to lease the transmission lines already existing and belonging to private companies, or purchase them if advisable. I think it very certain that it will not be necessary to build these lines, but I regard it as entirely a wise thing to give the President this power to be utilized in the event he finds it necessary to do so.

I am sure we can trust the President to deal fairly with all parties concerned. While this bill was not prepared by him or at his instance, nevertheless it was drawn to cover in a broad way the views which he has heretofore expressed and with which the people of the country are in accord. I am sure that in view of all its passage means to Tennessee and to this great section of the South, its passage will meet with the approval of the people. There can be no justification for permitting this great investment of the Government to continue as it has for the past 12 years, inactive and idle, when its operation means so much not only to the people directly involved but to the entire country. I have no doubt but that with the passing years the splendid vision of a great President will be realized, and it naturally follows that the first step shall be taken in connection with Muscle Shoals where so much money has already been expended.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, before voicing my opposition to the bill which is soon to come before us, I want to say a word about the rule under which it will be considered.

I want to correct any impression that the Republican membership on rules voted for this rule. We did not. We are standing today upon this rule, just where we have stood on every gag rule that has been brought before the House. We have taken the position that on all general legislation the Membership of the House has just as much right to offer amendments as any member of the committee or any of those who dominate the legislation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not think the gentleman would be exactly correct in saying that all the members of the Rules Committee voted against the rule.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman knows the situation. I might say there was no Republican member who voted for the rule. There was one member who refrained from voting. It is an unusual contention that one Republican member of a committee can influence the Democratic Rules Committee as to what kind of rule they will bring out.

I want to address one word to the liberal and progressive Democrats. You showed your power last week. You took a stand for liberal, progressive rules, and the so-called "discharge" rule then proposed has never been brought into this House, and I do not believe it ever will be. If you men will take a similar position on other liberal rules, you will find we will get rules under which we can consider business in an orderly way and where it will be possible for Members to introduce amendments. We have had two instances during the last week where bills were considered under the 5-minute rule, and I do not believe any man will stand here today and say that the House abused the privilege.

So I hope we will have a new deal, a new era, and that we will again have liberal consideration of legislation.

Painting rainbows is always a delightful and inspirational pastime. That is what we are doing here today. We are painting a beautiful picture for the good people of the Tennessee Valley and the United States, a fine dream that will eventually end in bitter disappointment. Patterned closely after one of the soviet dreams, it will end as have most of the Russian industrial ventures—in failure to accomplish the objective and leaving a tremendous debt for the taxpayers to pay.

The trusting people of Tennessee and Alabama hope that out of this Government venture in the realm of business will rise a new industrial empire. A magnificent mirage. Lost sight of is the fact industrial expansion in the United States is over for a few years at least. Our problem is not the acquiring of new enterprises, but how to keep going those already in existence.

Subsidized by the Government, it will beyond question be possible for industries to secure cheaper light and power in the Tennessee Valley. There was a day when that would be persuasive to industry, but not now. This saving would be minor compared with what is now possible in the older industrial communities. Scattered throughout the country are thousands of modern, idle plants that can be bought for a song. Plants costing a million dollars go begging for one twentieth of that price. Many are being torn down to escape taxes. These are all located in the heart of the consuming sections of the country, where skilled labor is abundant. Less capital is required to get into business through the acquiring of one of those plants than in building a new plant in the Tennessee Valley.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No; I cannot. I have not the time.

This will be a very determining point when we emerge out of this depression with lean pocketbooks. No, Mr. Speaker, I think I can accurately predict no one in this generation will see materialize the industrial-empire dream of the Tennessee Valley.

Even if there was to be industrial expansion in this valley, this Government project would not be necessary. Private capital and private facilities are already ample to care for any expansion that might come to this section of the country. If there was any real likelihood of immediate expansion, it would have come during the recent years of frenzied finance.

Alfred E. Smith, for whose rugged Americanism I have a profound admiration, expressed in the last issue of the New Outlook grave doubts about the wisdom of regional planning schemes such as Muscle Shoals. He well says the age of the pioneer is over and further declares it doubtful whether the Nation will gain today by drying up old communities to irrigate new ones.

I question the drying up of old sections because I believe the experiment we are plainly determined to embark upon will be a failure. But I agree with the sound philosophy of Governor Smith that one section of the country should not be taxed to build up a competing section. If we dedicate the resources of the Nation to building up the Tennessee Valley, we have a right to expect the Public Treasury to finance the making of New England and every other section of the country attractive to industry. To follow any other course would be manifestly unfair.

In plunging the Government into this soviet experiment it is wise to recall private plants with which the Government will compete have an invested capital of $700,000,000 and pay $8,000,000 in taxes. About 114,000 people have invested their savings in good faith in these enterprises. With these facts before us, it is a serious question whether the community itself will profit by the undertaking we are to engage in.

This is not the time to duplicate existing facilities or to unnecessarily destroy private business. The country is never going to get back to normalcy until private business is able to give to the millions of unemployed an opportunity to work.

A few weeks ago disabled veterans and Government employees were asked to accept great sacrifices that the Budget could be balanced and the financial integrity and credit of the Nation be maintained. Is it right, in view of these sacrifices, we now waste huge sums, saved from the poor people of the country, in a project which is not essential and which for years to come will be a constant drain upon the National Treasury?

Personally, I think it is plain justice to the veterans and to the Government employees to carry on with real economy in other directions and be prudent in our expenditures. Let us not forget that in the past the touch of the Government in business has invariably been the touch of death.

Occasionally there may be some exception, but that exception will not be at Muscle Shoals. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I shall use the remainder of my time and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether or not the day is fast approaching when the House may protest against so much time being consumed in discussion of rules and the type of rule and the methods of bringing in rules. I said in joining in the colloquy with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] this morning that this instance today should point out the sincerity of the attack made upon the Rules Committee in respect to the type of rules that committee brings in. The Rules Committee never brings in a gag rule. The gag, so called, is always asked for by the standing committee. The Rules Committee is very particular to inquire of the representatives of the standing committee whether or not a particular type of rule has been requested by the standing committee. Of course, in most instances the Rules Committee is informed that a particular type of rule is requested by the Democratic majority of the standing committee; but in this case the Republicans joined with the Democrats and were insistent on a rule which would not permit any amendment to the Muscle Shoals bill. At least, I am so informed.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. That is not correct.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, the Rules Committee was so informed. I am willing to stand corrected. I am stating only what was said at the meeting before the Rules Committee.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman from Connecticutt, Mr. Goss, stated that the chairman of the committee, Mr. MCSWAIN, had been so preeminently fair, had given every opportunity to the minority to amend the bill and discuss it, and that in view of that and the further fact that the bill covered such a broad field, the Republican members of the committee joined in the request that the rule be limited simply to general debate, without any reading of the bill under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Then I was not mistaken in what I said was the information conveyed to the Rules Committee.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman was correct.

Mr. JAMES. It was suggested that the majority could offer certain amendments and that the minority as the minority could offer certain amendments. I objected to that upon the ground that as a member of the minority I wanted no more privilege than any other Republican on the floor of the House.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Is this bill, H.R. 5081, an administration measure, and has it the backing of the Democratic administration?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I so understand, though I do not speak with any personal authority.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. The President did not write either one of the bills introduced in either end of the Capitol. He has considered only the general broad principles, and approves of those broad principles as expressed in both bills. But this matter has been before Congress for 16 years, and some of us who have been laboring upon it for 12 to 15 years know a great deal more about the intricacies of the matter than it is possible for any one just coming on the scene to know.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. I may say to the gentleman that we are fast finding that out, but I disagree with the gentleman. I do not think this is an administrative measure, and I do not think it has the approval of the administration in its so-called "broad principles", to which the gentleman referred. I refuse to support any gag rule that has not the backing, in the final passage of the act, of the administration, and I say that this bill has not.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, Mr. Speaker, if I were against gag rules, I would be against them whether the administration wanted them or not.

For 12 years I have been listening to the subject of Muscle Shoals in the Rules Committee. I voted to sell Muscle Shoals to Mr. Ford. After that time, when the distinguished gentleman from New York, the majority leader, Mr. SNELL, was Chairman of the Committee on Rules, I stated in the committee that I would give Muscle Shoals away—do anything to get rid of the subject, and that something ought to be done about it. We are now fast approaching that day when a President in the White House is really going to do something about Muscle Shoals. The last two bills were vetoed by Republican Presidents, but we are now within a few weeks of the time when we are going to have this perennial subject disposed of and removed from the annual legislative program.

I listened to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY] weep over the fate of the power companies and the Fertilizer Trust. He stated that the bill would result in taxes being increased, but he did not say anything about a resulting decrease in the cost of electricity to the people. He did not say anything about a decrease in the cost of fertilizer to the farmer. As I sat there listening to him and the other Republican speakers, I came to the conclusion—one which I have been approaching all during this session—that the Republican policy of today is the same as it has always been. The Republican Party believes in protecting with all its might, in spite even of a negligible minority, the rights and the securities and the investments of the people who have without any concern for the 95 percent of the people who have not. [Applause.] That policy was demonstrated yesterday in the debate and votes on the Wagner bill and likewise on every bill that has been brought in here during this session. It is the same old policy of the Republican Party—protect the stockholders, not the consumer of the power; protect the security holders, not the farmer who buys the fertilizer, which is now subject to a monopoly and the extortions of the Fertilizer Trust.

The Alabama Power Co. seemed to be the chief concern of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY]. And the gentleman from New England [Mr. MARTIN] wept about his stockholders in New England. He did not talk about his farmers; he did not talk about his people in New England who, by reason of cheap power in the South, might be able to buy products of the factories and mills that would use that power to make those products.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. He did not mention anything about dividends that had to be paid on watered stock or the tremendous salaries paid to executives, did he?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY] did talk about dividends. Why, on the coat of arms of the Republican Party, up in the left-hand loop, is the word "dividends."

Mr. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. FORD. Did the gentleman have anything to say about the hundreds of thousands of stockholders that Mr. Insull and some of the other boys "gypped" when they got them in their clutches?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, those stockholders, of course, are not the stockholders they are talking about. [Applause.]

Mr. FORD. I understand.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This morning on the floor the distinguished minority leader talked about the banks being closed when the Democrats came into office. I can see the Republican platform for 1936, and I can hear those dear old Republican spellbinders on the stump talking to their people. They will say, "Don't you remember the very day, that cloudy Saturday, the 4th of March, when the Democrats took office, why every bank in the country closed!" Of course, Mr. Speaker, the Republicans are not going to get away with that, because the people of America know that if the Republican administration had any interest or concern in the savings and the welfare of the people of America they would have closed every bank in the country months before March 4, 1933, as a means of working out a real solution of our banking situation. [Applause.] So when the expiring administration timed its plan exactly to throw the dying remains in our laps on that Saturday morning, our leader in the White House did just as he did the other day when the bankers said they wanted 5 million, 100 million, 300 million, 600 million gold to ship abroad. He said, "Just for that you are not going to get any to ship abroad." So when the bankers would not talk real business and would not meet reasonable terms and cooperate for the safety of the American public, our President closed the banks, as Mr. Hoover should have done months before.

Incidentally, I understand that the same Mr. Hoover, resting in the New York hotels, is now saying he should have done exactly what President Roosevelt did—months before. [Applause.] So just take a little blue pencil and rub that particular campaign argument out of the 1936 guidebook of spellbinders. [Laughter.]

Now, I am glad we are going to get down to the consideration of Muscle Shoals and that we are going to do something about it. What this bill proposes to do is fundamentally the very thing that the American people overwhelmingly want done about Muscle Shoals. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this rule because of the rule itself, and because of the merits or lack of merit of the legislation which the rule proposes to make in order. I am opposed to the rule because it is a gag or closed rule. I have stated what I thought about gag rules before, and I will not say anything more on that subject at this time except to say that I have not changed my position about them. It is true the statement was made before the Rules Committee that the Republican members of the legislative Committee on Military Affairs were not opposed to this kind of rule in this instance, but it was quite clearly brought out there that they had allowed their friendship and feeling toward the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCSWAIN], to influence their attitude and, as it seemed to some members of the Committee on Rules, to get the better of their judgment. However, the Republican members of the Rules Committee maintain the same position on this rule that they have on other gag rules. They are opposed to this kind of rule, making in order legislative proposals such as this, which prohibit the reading of the legislation under the 5-minute rule, and prohibit the offering of any amendments by the Membership of the House generally.

My judgment is, too, that some of the Republican members of the Committee on Military Affairs did not oppose this particular rule partly because they were afraid that some good amendments that had been put into the bill during its consideration in the committee would be taken out on the floor if it were thrown open for amendments. My colleague, Mr. JAMES, the ranking Republican member of that committee, has already stated his position as being opposed to all gag rules.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. BYRNS. When did the gentleman and his party change their position about what the gentleman chooses to call a gag rule?

Mr. MAPES. I may say to the gentleman that personally I have never changed my mind in regard to it, and I do not think the party has changed its mind in regard to it. As was brought out in the colloquy between the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from New York, I have no recollection of the Republican Party, when it was in control of the House of Representatives, ever bringing in a gag rule on an important piece of general legislation, with the exception of the tariff bills, which everybody knows, as a practical matter, must be limited in some way or they would never get to a final vote in the House.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman has paid me a very undeserved and unjustified compliment.

Mr. MAPES. No; it is entirely deserved.

Mr. McSWAIN. But I feel I should state in fairness to the gentlemen of the minority on the Committee on Military Affairs that they were as much opposed to this bill in principle as they could be, and they fought it as hard as they could for days and days and days in the committee; but they recognized that this kind of legislation is very much like the tariff bill talked about by the chairman: that it ought to be voted up or down on its merits.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I shall not take any more time to discuss the rule, but I do want to say a word about the bill itself.

Mr. Speaker, the first sentence of the report of the committee very truthfully says that the Tennessee River and the Muscle Shoals question first made its appearance as a Federal problem as long ago as 1824. Anyone who studies the history of Muscle Shoals will find that from that time on, a period of 100 years, there has been a persistent drive from time to time upon Congress to get the Federal Government to develop and improve the Tennessee River, but the attempts have never been successful so far as Congress is concerned. Congress has repeatedly refused to undertake this improvement, and wisely so, in my judgment.

Finally, in 1916, Congress, in the National Defense Act, voted, and I as a Member of the House at that time voted for it along with the rest, to give the President of the United States a roving commission in the exercise of his war power to establish a nitrate plant, develop water power, build dams and locks, and to do other things, in his discretion, on any navigable or nonnavigable river in the United States. In the exercise of that discretion, with that roving commission, the President selected this site on the Tennessee River and started this development which has already cost the United States approximately $150,000,000, to say nothing of interest on the investment.

I, for one, am not going to vote to give another President a roving commission of that kind in a time of peace which will enable him to start an improvement or require an expenditure of Government funds that no one can tell where it will lead to. It is estimated, or some claim, that this is the beginning of an improvement which in the end will involve the Federal Government in an expenditure of over $1,000,000,000. Congress ought not to start anything of that kind without knowing where it is headed for.

Somebody has spoken of this improvement as a wonderful dream of a wonderful statesman. That may be so. I am inclined to think that it is largely a dream. Let me say that this is not a personal matter with me. I had the utmost respect for the President of the United States during the war, President Wilson, and I have the utmost respect for the present President of the United States, President Roosevelt; but as a Member of Congress I think Congress has its obligation, and it ought not to allow the President of the United States, no matter how able he is, how wise he is, or how well-intentioned he is, to commit the Federal Government to an expenditure of $1,000,000,000 without knowing where it is leading to.

This is spoken of as a wonderful experiment. This is no time to experiment. This is no time to start expenditures of this kind when we are trying to reduce the expenses of the country, when everybody is in such distress. It is not a sound investment. It is economically unsound from the standpoint both of navigation and of the development of power.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. It is stated in the minority views on the bill that at the present time 30 percent of the generating capacity of privately owned plants serving the territory within transmission distance of Muscle Shoals is finding no market. This 30 percent amounts to a surplus capacity of approximately 400,000 horsepower, the amount proposed to be developed by the construction of the Cove Creek Dam. In other words, more horsepower is now being developed there than can be disposed of, yet we intend to spend good, hard money to develop still more.

The proposition is unsound also from the standpoint of navigation. Everybody who has seen the Tennessee River knows that in some places it is not more than 6 inches deep. There is little navigation on the river, and it will cost a lot of money to make it navigable for ships of any size. We have spent about $150,000,000 at Muscle Shoals. Now it is proposed to start the expenditure of $1,000,000,000 more. It is not a question of making use of the development that is already there; it is a question of obligating the Government for this tremendous expenditure in the future. It is sending good money after bad.

I think now is the time for Congress to put its foot down and say we will not allow any such expenditure to be made. We do not propose to let the camel get his nose under the tent in any such manner. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the second reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of maintaining and operating the properties now owned by the United States in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala., in the interest of the national defense and for agricultural and industrial development, and to improve navigation in the Tennessee River, and to control the destructive flood waters in the Tennessee River and Mississippi River Basins, there is hereby created a body corporate by the name of the "Tennessee Valley Authority of the United States" (hereinafter referred to as the "Authority"). The board of directors first appointed shall be deemed the incorporators, and the incorporation shall be held to have been effected from the date of the first meeting of the board. This act may be cited as the "Tennessee Valley Act of 1933."

SEC. 2. (a) The board of directors of the Authority (hereinafter referred to as the "board") shall be composed of three members, not more than two of whom shall belong to the same political party, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The board shall organize by electing a chairman, vice chairman, and other necessary officers, agents, and employees to do its clerical work, and shall then proceed to carry out the provisions of this act.

(b) The terms of office of the members first taking office after the approval of this act shall expire as designated by the President at the time of nomination, one at the end of the third year, one at the end of the sixth year, and one at the end of the ninth year, after the date of approval of this act. A successor to a member of the board shall be appointed in the same manner as the original members and shall have a term of office expiring 9 years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed.

(c) Any member appointed to fill a vacancy in the board occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term.

(d) Vacancies in the board so long as there shall be two members in office shall not impair the powers of the board to execute the functions of the Authority and two of the members in office shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of the business of the board.

(e) Each of the members of the board shall be a citizen of the United States and shall receive compensation, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the officers and employees of the United States, at the rate of $10,000 a year, to be paid by the Authority as current expenses. Members of the board shall be reimbursed by the Authority for actual expenses (including traveling and subsistence expenses) incurred by them while traveling in the performance of the duties vested in the board by this act. All members of the board shall reside in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala., and shall devote their entire time to the work of the Authority.

(f) No member of the board shall have any financial interest in any public-utility corporation engaged in the business of distributing and selling power to the public nor in any corporation engaged in the manufacture, selling, or distribution of fixed nitrogen or fertilizer, or any ingredients thereof, nor shall any member have any interest in any business that may be adversely affected by the success of the Muscle Shoals project as a producer of concentrated fertilizers or as a producer of electric power.

(g) The board shall direct the exercise of all the powers of the Authority.

SEC. 3. (a) The chief executive officer of the Authority shall be a general manager, who shall be responsible to the board for the efficient conduct of the business of the Authority. The board shall appoint the general manager, whose salary shall not exceed the rate of $10,000 a year, and shall select a man for such appointment who has demonstrated his capacity as a business executive. The general manager shall be appointed to hold office at the pleasure of the board. Should the office of general manager become vacant for any reason, the board shall appoint his successor as herein provided.

(b) The general manager shall appoint, with the advice and consent of the board, two assistant managers who shall be responsible to him, and through him to the board, whose salaries each shall not exceed the rate of $9,000 a year. One of the assistant managers shall be a man possessed of knowledge, training, and experience to render him competent and expert in the production of fixed nitrogen and/or fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients. The other assistant manager shall be a man trained and experienced in the field of production, transmission, and distribution of hydroelectric power. The general manager may at any time, with the consent of the board, remove any assistant manager, and appoint his successor as above provided. He shall employ, with the approval of the board, all other agents, clerks, attorneys, employees, and laborers not hereinbefore reserved to the board.

The compensation of such agents, clerks, attorneys, employees, and laborers shall be fixed with regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the compensation of officers or employees of the United States: Provided, That all contracts to which the Authority is a party and which require the employment of laborers and mechanics in the construction, alteration, maintenance, and/or repair of buildings, dams, locks, or other projects shall contain a provision that not less than the prevailing rate of wages for work of a similar nature prevailing in the vicinity shall be paid to such laborers or mechanics.

In the event any dispute arises as to what are the prevailing rate of wages, the question shall be referred to the Secretary of Labor for determination, and his decision shall be final. In the determination of such prevailing rate, or rates, due regard shall be given to those rates which have been secured through collective agreement by representatives of employers and employees.

Where such work as is described in the two preceding paragraphs is done directly by the Authority, the prevailing rate of wages shall be paid in the same manner as though such work had been let by contract.

SEC. 4. Except as otherwise specifically provided in this act, the corporation (herein called the "Authority")—

(a) Shall have succession in its corporate name.

(b) May sue and be sued in its corporate name.

(c) May adopt and use a corporate seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

(d) May make contracts.

(e) May adopt, amend, and repeal bylaws.

(f) May purchase or lease and hold such personal property as it deems necessary or convenient in the transaction of its business, and may dispose of any such personal property held by it.

(g) As hereinbefore specified, may appoint such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents as are necessary for the transaction of its business, fix their compensation, without regard to the provisions of the Civil Service laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers or employees of the United States, define generally their duties, require bonds of them and fix the penalties thereof, and dismiss at pleasure any such officer, employee, attorney, or agent, and provide a system of organization to fix responsibility and to promote efficiency.

(h) The board shall require that the general manager and the two assistant managers, the secretary and the treasurer, the bookkeeper or bookkeepers, and such other administrative and executive officers as the board may see fit to include, shall execute and file before entering upon their several offices good and sufficient surety bonds, in such amount and with such surety as the board shall approve.

(i) Shall have such powers as may be necessary or appropriate for the exercise of the powers herein specifically conferred upon the Authority.

(j) The Authority may in the name of the United States of America exercise the right of eminent domain, and in the purchase of any real estate or the acquisition of real estate by condemnation proceedings, the title to such real estate shall be taken in the name of the United States of America, and thereupon all such real estate shall be entrusted to the Authority as the agent of the United States to accomplish the purposes of this act.

(k) The Authority shall have power to acquire real estate for the construction of dams, reservoirs, transmission lines, power houses, and other structures, and navigation projects at any point along the Tennessee River, or any of its tributaries, and in the event that the owner or owners of such property shall fail and refuse to sell to the Authority at a price deemed fair and reasonable by the board, then the Authority may proceed to exercise the right of eminent domain, and to condemn all property that it deems necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act, and all such condemnation proceedings shall be had pursuant to the provisions and requirements hereinafter specified with reference to any and all condemnation proceedings. The Authority shall have power to construct dams, reservoirs, power houses, power structures, and navigation projects in the Tennessee River and its tributaries, and for this purpose may exercise the right of eminent domain.

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Government to construct, where practicable, on the Tennessee River joint power and navigation dams, to conserve and make available the power, and to provide cheaper navigation; and the Authority shall create for each dam constructed a sinking fund, which, paid in annually with compound interest, will amortize the entire cost of the dam, including power houses and locks, over a period of 60 years, and the Authority shall pay to the Treasury 2 percent interest annually on money used for such construction derived from the Treasury and chargeable as cost to power: Provided, That the payment of any interest to the Treasury may be suspended for 1 year, but such suspended payment shall bear interest at the rate of 2 percent per annum: Provided, That the Authority shall not proceed to construct any dam herein authorized where power alone will be generated, or where the power will be generated in conjunction with navigation (except Cove Creek Dam and Dam No. 3), unless there is a reasonable market demand for so much of the power as will yield a reasonable return on that part of the investment representing the cost of the power production, including a sum for the amortization of the entire cost in 60 years, and then only with the approval of the President: Provided further, That the Authority may construct any dam or dams if prior to such construction it has effected a lease on self-liquidating terms approved by the President that will return the bond interest on the investment chargeable to power purposes, determined as herein provided, and amortize the entire amount of capital invested for all purposes in the project leased. Rates and charges for the power sold from a leased project shall not exceed amounts found as reasonable, just, and fair by the Federal Power Commission.

SEC. 5. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Government to utilize and operate the Muscle Shoals properties so far as may be necessary to improve, cheapen, and increase the production of fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients by carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. The board is hereby authorized—

(a) To contract with commercial producers for the production of such fertilizers or fertilizer ingredients not produced by the Authority as may be needed in the Government's program of development and introduction.

(b) To arrange with farmers and farm organizations for large-scale practical use of the new forms of fertilizers under conditions permitting an accurate measure of the economic return they produce.

(c) To cooperate with National, State, district, or county experimental stations or demonstration farms, for the use of new forms of fertilizer or fertilizer practices during the initial or experimental period of their introduction.

(d) The board shall manufacture fixed nitrogen and/or other fertilizer ingredients at Muscle Shoals by the employment of existing facilities (by modernizing existing plants), or by any other process or processes that in its judgment shall appear wise and profitable for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen, and/or other fertilizer ingredients for agricultural and military uses.

(e) It shall be the duty of the board to operate the nitrate plants or either of them by employment of existing facilities or by modernizing the existing plants and facilities for the production of nitrogenous plant food of a kind and quality and in form available as plant food and capable of being applied directly to the soil in connection with the growth of crops containing not less than 10,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, and said amount of such fertilizer or fertilizer ingredients shall periodically be increased from time to time as the market demands may reasonably require until the maximum production capacity of the plants now owned by the Government at Muscle Shoals, as the board may find them to be economically adapted, or susceptible of being made economically adapted for the fixation of nitrogen is reached, if the reasonable demands of the market shall justify except when the market demands are satisfied by maintenance in storage and unsold of such fertilizer or fertilizer ingredients containing at least 2,500 tons of fixed nitrogen if such production is economically justifiable and so found by the Authority and so approved by the President. Whenever such stock in storage shall fall below the quantity containing 2,500 tons of fixed nitrogen the production of such nitrogenous plant food shall thereupon be resumed. In the event such production is not so found economically justifiable, then it shall be the duty of the Authority to operate such plants and facilities for the production of phosphoric acid and/or other fertilizer ingredients in a form available as plant food and capable of being applied directly to the soil, and in an amount and quantity equal to the production of nitrogenous plant food herein required.

(f) To lease upon such terms and conditions as may safeguard the interests of the United States and insure the mass production of fertilizer and/or fertilizer ingredients the existing plants and facilities and any such additional plants and facilities as may be constructed and any other property or properties, in whole or in part, for the benefit of the farmer and for agricultural conservation, except that there shall be no lease of power dams, power plants, and power-generating facilities: Provided, That all fertilizer produced shall be in such form and in combination with such other ingredients as shall make such fertilizer immediately available and practical for use by farmers in application to soils and crops. In the event that a lease be made, the board shall supply the said lessee the power necessary for the operation of the properties leased and for such other manufacturing purposes as the President and the board may agree upon at a price which shall be deemed fair and just by the President and the board. The lease of any such properties for the production of fertilizer or fertilizer ingredients shall contain a stipulation that the operation of any properties used in the manufacture of fertilizer or fertilizer ingredients shall be conducted in an economical manner and that there must be manufactured annually at least a prescribed amount of nitrogenous plant food of a kind and quality and in a form available as plant food and capable of being applied directly to the soil in connection with the growth of crops: And provided further, That the contract shall contain a stipulation requiring the lessee to produce within 2 years from the date such lease shall become effective, such fertilizer or fertilizer ingredients containing not less than 10,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, and shall require periodic increases in quantity of fixed nitrogen from time to time as the market demands may reasonably require, and such lease shall provide that such increases shall finally reach the maximum production capacity of such plant or plants as the board may find to be economically adapted, or susceptible of being made economically adapted to the fixation of nitrogen, if the reasonable demands of the market shall justify the same, except when the nitrogen produced is required for national defense, or when the market demands for same are satisfied by the maintenance in storage and unsold of such fertilizer or fertilizer ingredients containing at least 2,500 tons of fixed nitrogen, but whenever said stock in storage shall fall below the quantity containing 2,500 tons of fixed nitrogen, the production of such nitrogen, and the manufacture of such fertilizer or fertilizer ingredients shall thereupon be resumed.

(g) To make alterations, modifications, or improvements in existing plants and facilities, and to construct new plants, for the production of concentrated fertilizers, and/or fertilizer ingredients, in form suitable for home mixing, or for direct application to soil, and for use in connection with growing crops, and to sell same at cost plus 4 percent, under such rules and regulations as will insure the widest practicable distribution thereof, and preference in such sale shall be given to farmers or to their authorized purchasing agents.

(h) It shall be the duty of the board to maintain in stand-by condition nitrate plant no. 2, or its equivalent, for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen, for the production of explosives in the event of war or a national emergency, until the Congress shall by joint resolution release the board from this obligation.

The Authority, with the approval of the President of the United States, is hereby authorized to ascertain and declare, for the purpose of fixing the cost of fertilizers and/or fertilizer ingredients, the value of such part of any plant or plants as may be employed by the Authority in the production of fertilizer and/or fertilizer ingredients: Provided, That the total value of nitrate plant no. 2 shall not be fixed to exceed $6,000,000.

(i) To establish, maintain, and operate laboratories and experimental plants, and to undertake large-scale experiments for the purpose of enabling the Authority to furnish nitrogen, fertilizer, and other products needed for military and agricultural purposes in the most economical manner and at the highest standard of efficiency.

(j) To request the assistance and advice of any officer, agent, or employee of any executive department or of any independent office of the United States, to enable the Authority the better to carry out its powers successfully, and the President shall, if in his opinion the public interest, service, and economy so require, direct that such assistance, advice, and service be rendered to the Authority and any individual that may be by the President directed to render such assistance, advice, and service shall be thereafter subject to the orders, rules, and regulations of the board and of the general manager.

(k) Upon the requisition of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to manufacture for and sell at cost to the United States explosives or their nitrogenous content.

(l) Upon the requisition of the Secretary of War the board shall allot and deliver without charge to the War Department so much power as may be necessary in the judgment of said Department for use in operation of all locks, lifts, or other facilities in aid of navigation.

(m) To produce, transmit, and sell electric power, as herein particularly specified.

(n) No products of the Authority shall be sold for use outside of the United States, its Territories and possessions, except to the United States Government for the use of its Army and Navy or to its allies in case of war.

SEC. 7. In the appointment of officials and the selection of employees for said corporation, and in the promotion of any such employees or officials, no political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all such appointments and promotions shall be given and made on the basis of merit and efficiency. Any member of said board who is guilty of a violation of this section shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, and any appointee of said board who is guilty of a violation of this section shall be removed from office by said board.

SEC. 8. In order to enable the Authority to exercise the powers and duties vested in it by this act—

(a) The exclusive use, possession, and control of the United States nitrate plants nos. 1 and 2, including steam plants located, respectively, at Sheffield, Ala., and Muscle Shoals, Ala., together with all real estate and buildings connected therewith, all tools and machinery, equipment, accessories, and materials belonging thereto, and all laboratories and plants used as auxiliaries thereto; the fixed-nitrogen research laboratory, the Waco Limestone Quarry, in Alabama, and Dam No. 2, located at Muscle Shoals, its power house, and all hydroelectric and operating appurtenances (except the locks), and all machinery, lands, and buildings in connection therewith, and all appurtenances thereof, and all other property to be acquired by the authority in its own name or in the name of the United States of America, are hereby entrusted to the authority for the purposes of this act.

(b) The President of the United States is authorized to provide for the transfer to the authority of the use, possession, and control of such other real or personal property of the United States as he may from time to time deem necessary and proper for the purposes of the Authority as herein stated.

SEC. 9. (a) The Authority shall maintain its principal office in the immediate vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala. The Authority shall be held to be an inhabitant and resident of the northern judicial district of Alabama within the meaning of the laws of the United States relating to the venue of civil suits.

(b) The Authority shall at all times maintain complete and accurate books of accounts.

(c) Each member of the board, before entering upon the duties of his office, shall subscribe to an oath (or affirmation) to support the Constitution of the United States and to faithfully and impartially perform the duties imposed upon him by this act.

SEC. 10. (a) The board shall file with the President and with the Congress, in December of each year, a financial statement and a complete report as to the business of the Authority covering the preceding governmental fiscal year. This report shall include an itemized statement of the cost of power at each power station, the total number of employees, and the names, salaries, and duties of those receiving compensation at the rate of more than $1,500 a year.

(b) The board shall require a careful and scrutinizing audit and accounting by the General Accounting Office or its successor in performing similar duties, during each governmental fiscal year of operation under this act, and said audit shall be open to inspection to the public at all times, and copies thereof shall be filed in the principal office of the Authority at Muscle Shoals, in the State of Alabama. At least once during each fiscal year the President of the United States shall appoint a firm of certified public accountants of his own choice and selection which shall have free and open access to all books, accounts, plants, warehouses, offices, and all other places, and records, belonging to or under the control of or used by the Authority in connection with the business authorized by this act. And the expenses of such audit so directed by the President shall be paid by the board and charged as part of the operating expenses of the Authority.

SEC. 11. The board is hereby empowered and authorized to sell the surplus power, not used in its operations and for operation of locks and other works to States, counties, municipalities, corporations, partnerships, or individuals, according to the policies hereinafter set forth, and to carry out said Authority the board is authorized to enter into contracts for such sale for a term not exceeding 20 years and in the sale of such current by the board it shall give preference to States, counties, municipalities, or cooperative organizations of citizens or farmers, not organized or doing business for profit, but primarily for the purpose of supplying electricity to their own citizens or members: Provided, That all contracts made with private companies or individuals for the sale of power, which power is to be resold for a profit, shall contain a provision authorizing the board to cancel said contract upon 5 years' notice in writing, if the board needs said power to supply the demands of States, counties, or municipalities.

SEC. 12. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Government, so far as practical, to transmit or sell all the surplus power generated by the Authority at Muscle Shoals equitably among the States, counties, and municipalities within transmission distance.

SEC. 13. In event the board is unable to make satisfactory contracts with persons, firms, or corporations engaged in the distribution and resale of electricity as in this act provided, or for the use or purchase of such transmission lines, it is hereby expressly authorized, either from appropriations made by Congress or from funds secured from the sale of such power or from proceeds from the sale of bonds as herein authorized, with the approval of the President, to construct, lease, or authorize the construction of transmission lines within transmission distance not to exceed 400 miles from the place where the power is generated, if transmission lines are found economically justified and necessary to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, That the project herein provided for shall be considered primarily as for the benefit of the people of the section as a whole and particularly the domestic and rural consumers to whom the power can economically be made available, and accordingly that sale to and use by industry shall be a secondary purpose, to be utilized principally to secure a sufficiently high load factor and revenue returns which will permit domestic and rural use at the lowest possible rates and in such manner as to encourage increased domestic and rural use of electricity: Provided, That if any State, county, municipality, or other public or cooperative organization of citizens or farmers, not organized or doing business for profit, but primarily for the purpose of supplying electricity to its own citizens or members, or any two or more of such municipalities or organizations, shall construct or agree to construct a transmission line to the place of generation, or to the Government reservation on which is located a power-generating plant operated by the Authority, or to some place along or at the end of a transmission line, the board is hereby authorized to contract with such State, county, municipality, or other organization, or two or more of them, for the sale of electricity for a term not exceeding 30 years, and in any such case the board shall give to such State, county, municipality, or other organization ample time to fully comply with any local law now in existence or hereafter enacted providing for the necessary legal authority for such State, county, municipality, or other organization to contract with the board for such power: Provided further, That all contracts entered into between the Authority and any municipality or other political subdivision or cooperative association shall provide that the electric power shall be sold and distributed to the ultimate consumer without discrimination as between consumers of the same class, and such contract shall be voidable at the election of the Authority if a discriminatory rate, rebate, or other special concession is made or given to any consumer or user by the municipality or other political subdivision: And provided further, That as to any surplus power not so sold as above provided to States, counties, municipalities, or other said organizations, before the Authority shall sell the same to any person or corporation engaged in the distribution and resale of electricity for profit, it shall require said person or corporation to agree that any resale of such electric power by said person or corporation shall be sold to the ultimate consumer of such electric power at a price that shall not exceed an amount found to be reasonable, just, and fair by the Federal Power Commission, or its successor as a Federal regulatory body having similar jurisdiction; and in case of any such sale, if an amount is charged the ultimate consumer which is in excess of the price so deemed to be just, reasonable, and fair by the Federal Power Commission, or its successor as aforesaid, the contract for such sale between the board and such distributor of electricity shall by the Authority be declared to be null and void and the same shall be canceled.

SEC. 14. The net proceeds derived by the board from the sale of power and any of the products manufactured by the Authority, after deducting the cost of operation, maintenance, depreciation, amortization, and an amount deemed by the board as necessary to withhold as operating capital, or devoted by the board to new construction, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States at the end of each calendar year.

SEC. 15. The Authority is hereby empowered, when and if the market demands justify, to complete Dam No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, Ala., and the steam plant at nitrate plant no. 2, in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, by installing in Dam No. 2 the additional power units, according to the plans and specifications of said dam, and the additional power unit in the steam plant at nitrate plant no. 2.

SEC. 16. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized, with appropriations hereafter to be made available by the Congress or from funds arising from the sale of bonds, to construct, either directly or by contract to the lowest responsible bidder or bidders, after due advertisement, a dam which has by long usage become known and designated as the Cove Creek Dam in and across the Clinch River in the State of Tennessee, together with a transmission line to Muscle Shoals interconnecting with any intermediate power plants: Provided, That such transmission line may be constructed only if the board is unable to make contracts satisfactory to the Authority with owners of privately owned lines for the transmission of power, or for the use or the purchase of transmission lines, and if, after investigation, the Authority shall find that such transmission line is economically justifiable and necessary to carry out the purposes of this act. Such construction shall be according to the latest and most approved designs of the Chief of Engineers, including powerhouse and hydroelectric installations and equipment for the generation of electric power in order that the waters of the said Clinch River may be impounded and stored above said dam for the purpose of promoting navigation by increasing and regulating the flow of the Clinch River and the Tennessee River below, so that the maximum amount of primary power may be developed at Dam No. 2 and at any and all other dams below the said Cove Creek Dam.

SEC. 17. In order to enable and empower the board to carry out the authority hereby conferred in the most economical and efficient manner, it is hereby authorized and empowered in the exercise of the powers of national defense, in the aid of navigation, and in the control of the flood waters of the Tennessee and Mississippi Rivers, constituting channels of interstate commerce, to exercise the right of eminent domain and to condemn all lands, easements, rights of way, and other area necessary in order to obtain a site for said Cove Creek Dam, and the flowage rights for the reservoir of water above said dam and to negotiate and conclude contracts with States, counties, municipalities, and all State agencies, and with railroads, railroad corporations, common carriers, and all public-utility commissions, and any other person, firm, or corporation, for the relocation of railroad tracks, highways, highway bridges, mills, ferries, electric-light plants, and any and all other properties, enterprises, and projects whose removal may be necessary in order to carry out the provisions of this act. When said Cove Creek Dam, transmission line, and power house shall have been completed, the possession, use, and control thereof shall be intrusted to the authority for use and operation in connection with the general Muscle Shoals and Tennessee Valley project and to promote flood control and navigation in the Tennessee River.

SEC. 18. The Authority, as an instrumentality and agency of the Government of the United States for the purpose of executing its lawful powers, shall have access to the Patent Office of the United States for the purpose of studying, ascertaining, and copying all methods, formulae, and scientific information (but not including access to pending applications for patents) necessary to enable the Authority to use and employ the most efficacious and economical process for the production of fixed nitrogen, or any essential ingredient of fertilizer, or any method of improving and cheapening the production of hydroelectric power, and any owner of a patent whose patent rights may have been thus in any way copied, used, infringed, or employed by the exercise of this right by the Authority shall have as the exclusive remedy a cause of action against the Authority, to be instituted and prosecuted on the equity side of the district court of the United States, in any district where infringement has occurred for the recovery of judgment for reasonable compensation. Service may be made in any such way as the court may direct. The Commissioner of Patents shall furnish to the Authority, at its request and without payment of fees, copies of documents on file in his office.

SEC. 19. The Government of the United States hereby reserves the right, in case of war or national emergency declared by Congress, to take possession of all or any part of the property described or referred to in this act for the purpose of manufacturing explosives, or for other war purposes.

SEC. 20. (a) All general penal statutes relating to the larceny, embezzlement, conversion, or to the improper handling, retention, use, or disposal of public moneys or property of the United States shall apply to the moneys and property of the Authority and to moneys and properties of the United States entrusted to the Authority.

(b) Any person, who, with intent to defraud the Authority, or to deceive any director, officer, or employee of the Authority or any officer or employee of the United States, makes any false entry in any book of the Authority, or makes any false report or statement for the Authority shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

(c) Any person who shall receive any compensation, rebate, or reward, or shall enter into any conspiracy, collusion, or agreement, express or implied, with intent to defraud the Authority or wrongfully and unlawfully to defeat its purposes, shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 21. In order that the board may not be delayed in carrying out the program authorized herein the sum of $10,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for that purpose from the Treasury of the United States, of which not to exceed $4,000,000 shall be made available with which to begin construction of Cove Creek Dam during the calendar year 1933, and begin the production of fertilizer and/or fertilizer ingredients.

SEC. 22. The President of the United States, for 1 year from the date of the enactment of this act, is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into negotiations and conclude agreements with any person, firm, or corporation for the exchange of electric energy generated and to be generated by the Authority at any plant intrusted to and under the control of the Authority, in consideration of the conveyance by any such person, firm, or corporation of any property or property rights on which the Authority may construct a plant or plants for the production of electric energy, upon such terms, conditions, and limitations as to the President shall seem meet and proper. The President is further authorized for 1 year from the date of this act to lease or sell to any person, firm, or corporation such land not needed for national defense, fertilizer production, power production, or other governmental purposes upon such terms, conditions, and limitations as to the President shall seem meet and proper: Provided, however, That the President shall first have the land appraised: Provided further, That no lease shall be for a term to exceed 50 years: Provided further, That any sale shall be on condition that said land shall be used for industrial purposes only.

SEC. 23. The Authority may cause proceedings to be instituted for the acquisition by condemnation of any lands, easements, or rights of way which, in the opinion of the board are necessary in carrying out the foregoing projects. The proceedings shall be instituted in the United States district court for the district in which the land, easement, right of way, or other interest is located, and such court shall have full jurisdiction to divest the complete title to the property sought to be acquired out of all persons or claimants and vest the same in the United States in fee simple, and to enter a decree quieting the title thereto in the United States of America.

Upon the filing of a petition for condemnation and for the purpose of ascertaining the value of the property to be acquired, and assessing the compensation to be paid, the court shall appoint three commissioners, who shall be disinterested persons and who shall take and subscribe to an oath that they do not own any lands, or interest or easement in any lands, which it may be desirable for the United States to acquire in the furtherance of said projects, and such commissioners shall not be selected from the locality wherein the land sought to be condemned lies. Such commissioners shall receive a per diem of not less than $15 per day for their services, together with an additional amount of $5 per day for subsistence for time actually spent in performing their duties as commissioners.

It shall be the duty of such commissioners to examine into the value of the lands sought to be condemned, to conduct hearings and receive evidence, and generally to take such appropriate steps as may be proper for the determination of the value of the said lands sought to be condemned, and for such purpose the commissioners are authorized to administer oaths and subpena witnesses, which said witnesses shall receive the same fees as are provided for witnesses in the Federal courts. The said commissioners shall thereupon file a report setting forth their conclusions as to the value of the said property sought to be condemned, making a separate award and valuation in the premises with respect to each separate parcel involved. Upon the filing of such award in court the clerk of said court shall give notice of the filing of such award to the parties to said proceeding, in manner and form as directed by the judge of said court. Within 30 days after giving notice of such award by the clerk of said court, as hereinabove provided, any party to such proceeding deeming himself aggrieved may file in writing with the clerk of said district court a demand for a jury trial upon the question of the reasonableness of the award so made, and upon such filing of a demand, or any such demand or demands, the judge of said district court shall cause a jury to be empaneled pursuant to the usual practices of such district court, and thereupon the causes of all parties so demanding jury trials shall be heard de novo by the court and jury and awards made according to the usual practices of such district courts.

Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to entitle each property owner to have a separate jury empaneled to determine the award to be made for any piece or parcel of property owned by him, but the trial judge shall determine and order the manner of the trial of said causes respecting the rights of the several owners, either by having the same jury determine the rights of all litigants who shall demand jury trials, or by grouping several tracts or parcels of land into separate jury groups, in which event, in his discretion, the trial judge or the trial judges who may be presiding at such trial or trials shall permit all litigants or counsel for litigants affected or to be affected by the determination of such jury to examine the jurors upon voir dire and to participate in the arguments to be presented to the jury at the conclusion of the evidence.

Where property to be affected by this act is situated in more than one judicial district of the United States, its value shall be determined by a jury to be selected of and from the judicial district where any part of such property is situated.

In the event of any property owned in whole or in part by minors, or insane persons, or incompetent persons, or estates of deceased persons, then the legal representatives of such minors, insane persons, incompetent persons, or estates shall have power by and with the consent and approval of the trial judge in whose court said matter is for determination to consent to or reject the awards of the commissioners herein provided for, and in the event there be no legal representatives or the legal representatives for such minors, insane persons, or incompetent persons shall fail or decline to act, then such trial judge may, upon motion, appoint a guardian ad litem to act for such minors, insane persons, or incompetent persons, and such guardian ad litem shall act to the full extent and to the same purpose and effect as his ward could act, if competent, and such guardian ad litem shall be deemed to have full power and authority to respond, to conduct or maintain any proceeding herein provided for affecting his said ward.

Upon acceptance of an award by the owner of any property herein provided to be appropriated and the payment of the money awarded, or upon the award of the jury and judgment of the district court and the payment of the money by the United States pursuant thereto, and the payment of the money awarded into the registry of the court by the authority herein provided for, the title to said property and the right to the possession thereof shall pass to the United States and the United States shall be entitled to a writ in the same proceeding to dispossess the former owner of said property and all lessees, agents, and attorneys of such former owner, and to put the United States, by its corporate creature and agent, the authority, into possession of said property.

Appeals from the final judgment of the district courts of the United States shall be prosecuted in like manner as appeals in other cases, but no supersedeas shall be allowed, but the amount so paid into the registry of the court shall remain in the registry of said court and shall from time to time, under order of the district judge be increased or diminished and disbursed in accordance with the final disposition of said cause.

SEC. 24. The board, acting for the Authority, is hereby authorized and empowered to issue on the credit of the United States and to sell bonds not exceeding $50,000,000 in amount, having a maturity not more than 60 years from the date of issue thereof, and bearing interest not exceeding 3 percent per annum, and when said bonds are so issued, they shall constitute a first lien upon all net income from property of the United States hereby intrusted, and hereafter to be intrusted, to the possession and control of the Authority, after payment of operating costs, maintenance, depreciation, and reasonable capital charges. Said bonds shall be issued and sold in amounts and prices approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, but all such bonds as may be so issued and sold shall have equal rank as to lien upon the net income from said property. None of said bonds shall be sold below par, and no fee, commission, or compensation whatever shall be paid to any person, firm, or corporation for handling, negotiating the sale, or selling the said bonds. All of such bonds so issued and sold shall have all the rights and privileges accorded by law to Panama Canal bonds, authorized by section 8 of the act of June 28, 1902, chapter 1302, as amended by the act of December 21, 1905 (ch. 3, sec. 1, 34 Stat. 5), as now compiled in section 743 of title 31 of the United States Code. All funds derived from the sale of such bonds shall be paid over to the Authority.

SEC. 25. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to investigate and to declare, as a result of his investigation, what proportion and part of the cost of any power plant hereafter to be acquired or constructed, and entrusted to the Authority, is properly and fairly chargeable to the several and respective factors of flood control, navigation, and power, and such declaration by the President shall be the final and official determination thereof. Such determination and declaration shall thereafter be binding upon the Government, and upon any of the holders of the bonds herein authorized to be issued and sold, in the event of any litigation concerning any bonds defaulted as to principal or interest, or both, and such declaration and determination shall be the basis of apportionment of contribution from the general funds of the Government and from the power funds of the Authority in the appraisal of existing plants and in the financing of construction for other plants: Provided, That as to Dam No. 2 the amount of the cost chargeable to power is hereby fixed at $30,000,000, and the remainder of the total cost to the date of this act shall be charged to national defense, flood control, and navigation: Provided further, That the Authority shall pay annually into the Federal Treasury 2 percent on the $30,000,000 chargeable to power: Provided further, That the Authority shall create a sinking fund which, paid in annually with compound interest, will amortize and return to the Federal Treasury the entire cost of the said dam to the date of this act over a period of 60 years.

SEC. 26. Insofar as applicable the benefits of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, shall extend to persons given employment under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 27. To aid further the proper use, conservation, and development of the natural resources of the Tennessee River Drainage Basin and of such adjoining territory as may be related to or materially affected by the developments consequent to this act, and to provide for the general welfare of the citizens of said areas, the President is hereby authorized, by such means or methods as he may deem proper within the limits of appropriations made therefor by Congress, to make such surveys of and general plans for said Tennessee Basin and adjoining territory as may be useful to the Congress and to the several States in guiding and controlling the extent, sequence, and nature of development that may be equitably and economically advanced through the expenditure of public funds or through the guidance or control of public authority, all for the general purpose of fostering an orderly and proper physical, economic, and social development of said areas; and the President is further authorized in making said surveys and plans to cooperate with the States affected thereby.

SEC. 28. The President shall, from time to time, as the work provided for in this act progresses, recommend to Congress such legislation as he deems proper to carry out the general purposes stated in said section and for the especial purpose of bringing about in said Tennessee Drainage Basin and adjoining territory in conformity with said general purposes (1) the maximum amount of flood control; (2) the maximum development of said Tennessee River and its tributaries for navigation purposes; (3) the maximum generation of electric power consistent with flood control and navigation; (4) the proper use of marginal lands; (5) the proper method of reforestation of all lands in said drainage basin suitable for reforestation; (6) the most practical method of improving agricultural conditions in the valleys of said drainage basin; and (7) the economic and social well-being of the people living in said river basin and all adjacent territory.

SEC. 29. That all appropriations necessary to carry out the provisions of this act are hereby authorized.

SEC. 30. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed, so far as they affect the operations contemplated by this act.

SEC. 31. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly declared and reserved, but no such amendment or repeal shall operate to impair the obligation of any contract made by said authority under any power conferred by this act.

SEC. 32. The sections of this act are hereby declared to be separable; and in the event any one or more sections of this act be held to be unconstitutional, the same shall not affect the validity of other sections of this act.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the sponsor of the bill under consideration.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, we come today to the realization of a dream that in some form or fashion has engaged the thought and commanded the efforts of men for over 100 years. It was in 1824 that John C. Calhoun, of South Carolina, as Secretary of War in President Monroe's Cabinet, wrote the first report on the Tennessee River asking for a survey of the stream looking to its use for commercial and military operations. Is it not fitting that we come to the realization of this dream today, in large measure, because of the able leadership and the splendid services of another distinguished son of South Carolina, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, Mr. McSWAIN. [Applause.] Permit me to say that in these 100 years and more there have been many excellent documents written on the Tennessee River, but there is no abler document on this subject than the majority report on the pending bill drafted by the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. McSWAIN, and those of you who would get a clear, full, and fascinating picture of this great project need but read this majority report. [Applause.]

I know I voice the sentiments of each of you when I say that we are happy that after a rather extensive illness with influenza the Representative from the Muscle Shoals district of Alabama, Judge ALMON, is able to be with us at this hour. [Applause.] I do not really think we could pass a Muscle Shoals bill without Judge ALMON's presence. He has worked for this project so long and so consistently that we affectionately call him "Muscle Shoals." [Applause.] When this great project is developed, it will stand through the years a witness to his unremitting toil and his self-sacrificing labors.

The bill now before us for consideration does not altogether represent my views on this subject. I take it that it does not represent fully the views of any one man. The chairman of the committee, Mr. McSWAIN, and myself visited Muscle Shoals with the President of the United States. We also had two extensive conferences with him, and as a result of these conferences we drafted a bill to carry out the broad principles of the President's program for the Tennessee River. The bill was amended by the Committee on Military Affairs in some particulars, but stands today, in my judgment, as the expression, in its broad aspects, of the program that the President of the United States has in mind for the Tennessee River and that great river basin.

The President, in his message to Congress, in calling on Congress to legislate that he might carry out this project, spoke of the fact that the program was more than one of mere power development; that it included great questions of soil erosion, of soil exhaustion, of afforestation, of the elimination of marginal lands from agricultural use, of agricultural conservation, of the distribution and development of industry; in fact, of the development of a great river basin that would affect not only the lives of those in that basin today but that would affect the welfare and the happiness of millions yet unborn.

The Tennessee Valley has often been spoken of as the Ruhr of America, and it has been said that in this valley there are conjunctions of raw materials of all kinds, of coal, iron, and waterpower, more fateful than conjunctions of the stars. As the President in his message said, this development touches and gives life to all forms of human concern.

The Government has today at Muscle Shoals, on the Tennessee River, the great Wilson Dam with a height of about 92 feet and a length of almost a mile. It has the great nitrate plant no. 2, with a capacity for turning out annually 50,000 tons of pure nitrogen, and nitrate plant no. 1, with a capacity for turning out annually some 10,000 tons of pure nitrogen, but which have never been successfully operated.

Much will be said in this debate about Government operation and about putting the Government into business. Let me say to you that the Congress of the United States has tried for 15 years to secure a satisfactory lease for the Government properties on the Tennessee River, and it has never yet been able to get a lessee that would meet the terms and conditions which the Congress thought were fair and reasonable to the Government.

This is not the first bill for Government operation that has been presented to the Congress. In 1920 so conservative and so distinguished a gentleman as Senator WADSWORTH, at the time a Senator from New York and now a Member of this House, introduced a bill in the Senate setting up a Government corporation to manufacture fertilizer at Muscle Shoals, and to sell it to the farmers. Mr. SNELL, the distinguished minority leader of this House, at one time introduced a bill for Government operation, and even went so far as to authorize the construction of transmission lines for the Government to transmit electric energy.

The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Morin, when he was the Republican Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, brought in a Government operation bill, and the organic law under which the Muscle Shoals project was built, section 124 of the National Defense Act of 1916, expressly provides that this project shall be operated by the Government and shall never be operated in conjunction with any private industry or private enterprise. We are today carrying out what was written into the organic law and what was the intent and the purpose of the Congress when the Muscle Shoals project was authorized.

The bill before us sets up what is termed the "authority", consisting of three members, to be appointed by the President of the United States and to be confirmed by the Senate. The original appointees are to have terms of 3, 6, and 9 years, and thereafter the terms are to be for a period of 9 years.

The Authority is given the power to build dams on the Tennessee River, and the act expressly lays down the policy that the authority, in the construction of the dams, shall build joint power and navigation dams so that the power may in large measure take care of the cost of navigation.

With the exception of Cove Creek Dam and Dam No. 3, before the authority can build any dam it must first have the approval of the President of the United States, and it must know that there is a reasonable market demand for the power to be generated at the dam.

The reason Cove Creek and Dam No. 3 are excepted from the provision is that these two dams have always been considered as an integral part of the Government-owned project at Muscle Shoals.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] will address you and tell you about Cove Creek Dam, this marvelous project, 225 feet high, containing 3,000,000 acre-feet of water. There will be so much water in the Cove Creek Dam that if the city of Washington was on a level with a wall around the city and all the water that is to be in the Cove Creek Dam were poured in on the city of Washington, we would be working today 75 feet under the surface of the water.

The dam is a storage dam, and by impounding the water for release and use in dry seasons, it will double the value of the Government power properties at Muscle Shoals, and will pay for itself in 20 years by the savings alone that will result from its control of floods and prevention of property destruction.

The bill provides further that when the authority builds a dam it must create a sinking fund, which paid into annually, with compound interest, will amortize the entire cost of the dam over a period of 60 years.

It also provides that the authority shall pay interest on any bonds issued for the construction of a dam. If any money comes out of the Treasury for the construction of a dam, the bill provides that the authority shall pay to the Treasury 2 percent each year on the money used in the construction of the dam and chargeable to the cost of power.

Another provision in the bill permits the authority to construct a dam provided, before the construction, it has a bona fide lessee that will pay such an amount as will meet the amortization charges and interest charges.

We have provided here, gentlemen, in this bill, a business proposition—the construction of these dams on a sound financial structure.

The Government of the United States has spent altogether $1,800,000,000 on the rivers and harbors of this country, but not one dollar has it gotten back and not one dollar of interest has it received on this vast amount of money; and the Treasury never will get back any of this principal or interest.

On the Ohio River alone the Government has expended $120,000,000, without any expectation or hope of its return or of one dollar of interest on the money.

Did you ever hear of the Cape Cod Canal? Not one nickel back, not one cent of interest. In this bill, what do we do? We say that the Government built the Wilson Dam. Yes; and it was built as a great war measure, at an excessive war cost, but we will make the authority amortize the entire cost of the dam over a period of 60 years. Then we go farther and say that the authority shall pay into the Treasury of the United States 2-percent interest upon the cost of the dam chargeable to power, that cost being $30,000,000. So we not only provide for the return of all future money with interest on the money while it is being used but we go back and take this war project and get back for the Government every dollar put into the dam with interest on $30,000,000 of the investment.

Can any gentleman on this floor cite any other war-time project where the Government is going to get back the money with interest on the investment?

Mr. LEE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. The gentleman has shown that he has considerable information upon this subject. I should like to know what difference there is between this bill and the bill of Senator GEORGE W. NORRIS, of Nebraska? Personally, I am interested in that, because I am for the Norris bill.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. As I go along and take up the different features of this bill, I shall try to make the differentiation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. And if the gentleman will yield, he will find that this is a considerably better bill than the Norris bill.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. As the Norris bill now stands, it has none of these business elements that I have been talking about. There is nothing in the Norris bill today that would cause the authority to amortize out the cost of any dam. There is nothing in that bill that would cause the authority to pay any interest to the Government for any money that might be used in the construction of a dam. This bill is on a much better business basis.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. How long has the gentleman been a Member of the House?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Ten years.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. Well, the gentleman has been voting for the Norris bill right along, has he not?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Many features of the Norris bill have been incorporated in different bills that we have voted for, but just to say that we have voted for the Norris bill would not tell the whole story. The House has passed a bill and the Senate has passed a bill and those bills have gone to conference; differences between the bills have been ironed out, and on two occasions the conference reports have been adopted, and on both occasions the bills were vetoed—once by Mr. Coolidge and once by Mr. Hoover—as the gentleman will remember.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. NORRIS is a good enough Democrat for me. And I am willing to follow him on this bill absolutely, without any amendment or anything else.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I shall point out the differences as I go along if time permits. This bill provides a specific method for the return of the money expended to the Government, and the Norris bill does not.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. My opinion is that this is not as good a bill as the Norris bill.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. What will this bill cost? One gentleman this morning stated that it is going to cost the Government a billion dollars.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MARTIN of Oregon). The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The bill authorizes the authority to issue $50,000,000 worth of bonds, the authority, of course, to pay the interest upon the bonds. Then it authorizes appropriations by Congress. It further authorizes the authority to use any profits it may have after it has met its amortization charges and paid its interest charges, but besides the $50,000,000 authorized for bonds this authority cannot spend any money except what profits there may be and what the Congress of the United States sees fit to give it. This means that a bill has to be passed through both Houses of Congress and signed by the President before one dollar goes out of the Treasury of the United States for the use of the authority.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. TABER. That is exclusive of the $50,000,000?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Outside of the $50,000,000. As to the cost, the engineers of the Army have made a complete survey of the Tennessee River. They have determined where dams can be built, where they must be built for the full development of the river so as to have the maximum amount of power, and so as to give the best navigation. If every dam that can be built on the river should be built, the estimates of the engineers made back in 1928 would give you a total cost of only $209,000,000. It was thought at the time, even though we were then in the midst of the boom, that $209,000,000 was an excessive estimate. Today the Chief of Engineers will tell you that all of the dams can be built for 65 percent of the original estimates. Therefore the authority today could build every dam for less than $150,000,000, and do not forget that, except the $50,000,000 of bonds, the authority has to come to you gentlemen for every nickel it is going to expend in the construction of a dam.

As to fertilizer, the fertilizer people came to us and suggested that the best thing to do would be to make it a power project, and the power people suggested that the best thing to do would be to make it a fertilizer project.

So we took the advice of both and made it both a fertilizer and a power project, and under the fertilizer provisions of the bill the authority is authorized to lease the nitrate plants to a private lessee on terms and conditions that will insure the manufacture of fertilizer at Muscle Shoals. If the authority cannot secure a satisfactory lease, then the authority is to operate the plants there, provided that the operation proves feasible and economical.

The operation of the plants at Muscle Shoals has time and again been stated to be the great hope of the American farmer so far as the cost of his fertilizer is concerned. Why? Not because of the American fertilizer industry, if you please, but because the American farmer must buy each year over half of all the nitrogen that he uses either from Chile or from Europe, and these foreign nations have a world cartel or world monopoly that fixes the price of nitrogen, and the farmer must pay that price. The depression came and the cartel for a time went to pieces, but in the United States Daily, under date of August 20 last, we find the following headline:

> Nitrate interests of Europe and Chile in compact. Agreement is negotiated for fixing prices.

What this bill would do would be to free the American farmer from his dependence upon the foreign nitrogen monopoly.

It has been stated that the Muscle Shoals plants are obsolete. Here are three advertisements of recent date advertising for sale to American farmers the very product that the big nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals manufactures, and at Niagara Falls today the American Cyanamid Co. is operating a plant which is 50 percent greater in capacity than is the Government plant at Muscle Shoals, and is turning out fertilizer successfully and economically, using the same process exactly as that of the big Government nitrate plant.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. What limitation is there upon the cost of fertilizer to the farmer, if any?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. There is a 4-percent limitation on the cost. Where the authority manufactures the fertilizer it cannot sell it for over 4 percent on the cost of the manufacture, and preference in sales must be given to farmers and farm organizations.

I had hoped I would be able to discuss the power provisions of this bill; but, of course, in the few remaining minutes that I have, this is impossible. I am sure that other gentlemen will take up this phase of the bill and go into it in detail, advising you as to the transmission lines and other provisions with reference to the distribution of power. Permit me to say that under the bill, preference is given to States, counties, municipalities, and nonprofit organizations of farmers and citizens for purchase of the power.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I only have 3 minutes. I am sorry I cannot yield.

The dream is that the operation of this bill will not only bring industrial development through cheap power but that, first and foremost, it will carry cheap power to the domestic consumer and more particularly to the farmer out on his farm, and provisions to insure this are in the bill.

The bill, Mr. Speaker, is a part of the President's program of conservation and rehabilitation. If you gentlemen could have been privileged to talk with him about this project, as were the chairman of the committee [Mr. McSWAIN] and myself, you would have been tremendously gratified, as we were, to find the grasp and broad vision that the President has of this great question. As we sat there with him we could not but feel that here is a man who understands our time and the needs of our people and who has the pure heart to comprehend and the rectified will to choose the right course of action. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] has expired.

RECOGNITION OF SOVIET RUSSIA

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by incorporating in the RECORD a speech made by me at the American Legion mass meeting against the recognition of Soviet Russia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following speech delivered by myself at the American Legion mass meeting opposing recognition of Soviet Russia, at Washington Auditorium, Washington, D.C., on Tuesday evening, April 18, 1933:

The question of granting diplomatic recognition to the Soviet Government of Russia is one of the most important and far-reaching issues before the United States, and is entitled to the most careful consideration by the American people and by our own Government officials. President Roosevelt stated just prior to election that he had an open mind on the recognition of Soviet Russia, and he desired to study the problem and ascertain the facts. As Chief Executive, it is but natural and right that he should make a thorough survey of all the facts and approach the entire issue with an open mind, as it is a tremendous problem and largely a new one to him.

Mr. Raymond Moley, Assistant Secretary of State, a member of the "brain trust", together with Mr. Tugwell and Mordecai Ezekiel, is reported in yesterday's papers as "studying the question of recognition." According to the newspaper report, he is seeking grounds on which it could be shown that recognition would be especially beneficial to the United States, and if he succeeds within the next 8 weeks the President will informally approach the Soviet Government on the question. I should like to inquire—beneficial to whom? The Communists, Socialists, pink intellectuals, and certain elements in Wall Street, including the Chase National Bank, unless the new management has had a change of heart.

I suggest that Mr. Moley might try to ascertain what the American people think about it. He might ask Senator WALSH, of Massachusetts, who filed a protest against recognition signed by 683,700 of his constituents. He might ask Senator COPELAND, the senior Senator from New York, who refuses to compromise with communism in any form. Or he might ask the American Legion, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the American Federation of Labor, the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, which voted 300 to 3 against recognition, and the great fraternal, patriotic, and church organizations, many of which are represented here tonight.

It has been reported that Mr. Moley had a long interview with Col. Hugh Cooper, who probably made his usual promise of a billion dollars' worth of trade. Colonel Cooper has lived so long in Soviet Russia that he has confused dollars with rubles, worth 5 cents apiece. Theodore Dreiser and William Z. Foster, both leading Communists, might also shed some light on the benefits of recognition. The American people have recently been the target for advice and propaganda of several distinguished foreigners with Communist inclinations. Is it not time that American citizens cease aping and applauding prominent foreigners such as George Bernard Shaw and Professor Einstein when they ridicule and condemn our country, and uphold and commend communism? Comrade Shaw, once a brilliant literateur, has, in his dotage, become nothing but a mere Communist propagandist, and Professor Einstein mixes relativity with Stalinism and communism wherever he goes. At the recent Shaw meeting in New York he was entirely surrounded by American bankers looking for notoriety and reflected glory from the great English Communist. It is about time New York bankers attended to their own banking business, instead of devoting themselves to foreign affiliates and liabilities such as Shaw and Einstein. It is apparently true that some of our bankers and Shaw and Einstein have much in common, as they start from the same basis—that suckers are born every minute.

Representative BECK is right, that the American people ought to have pride enough to ignore Shaw, and I add Einstein to the list of foreigners who tell us everything is rotten in America and denounce us as boobs and ignoramuses.

Senator BORAH stated recently in the Senate that there has never been, since Stalin became dictator of the Russian Government, any attempt to interfere with the governmental affairs of the United States or to seek by propaganda to interfere with the governmental affairs of this country. I do not like long-distance disputes, but what does Senator BORAH mean by interference with governmental affairs? Perhaps Senator BORAH is not familiar with the following speech of Dictator Stalin, which he made at a meeting of the American Commission of the Comintern, at Moscow, in the month of May, 1929:

"I consider that the Communist Party of the United States is one of the few Communist parties to which history has given decisive tasks from the point of view of the world revolutionary movement. The revolutionary crisis has not yet reached the United States, but we already have knowledge of numerous facts which suggest that it is approaching.

"It is necessary that the American Communist Party should be capable of meeting the moment of crisis fully equipped to take the direction of future class wars in the United States. You must prepare for that, comrades, with all your strength and by every means; you must constantly improve and bolshevize the American Communist Party. You must forge real revolutionary cadres and leaders of the proletariat who will be capable of leading the millions of American workers toward the revolutionary class wars."

Former Governor Smith, than whom no man knows more about the government of New York State and less generally about foreign affairs, and especially about Soviet Russia and the Communist Internationale, gave the Senate the benefit of his knowledge by advocating recognition, and is now being used as exhibit A by the Senator from Idaho.

Senator BORAH emphasized that President Washington, with the advice and assistance of Hamilton and Jefferson, had accorded recognition to France while the Committee of Public Safety was still in control of that country during the French Revolution. Why not? What has that got to do with the present situation?

No competent person questions the stability of the Soviet dictatorship or that it is a de facto government. Personally, I am willing to concede that it is not our business what kind of government exists in Russia, or any other nation, unless it be Cuba, in view of our obligations under the Platt amendment. I would gladly support recognition of Soviet Russia tomorrow if it had a socialist government, or any kind of a government that did not insist on interfering or meddling with our domestic and internal institutions by urging, through the Communist Internationale, with headquarters at Moscow, strikes, riots, sabotage, and industrial unrest, and the overthrow of our republican form of government by force and violence.

The recognition of the Soviet Government, controlled by the Russian Communist Party, which seeks to sow seeds of class hatred, atheism, and world revolution in every non-Communist country, would be a lie to international law and to official diplomatic relations. Former Secretary of State Elihu Root summed up the American position in the following able and concise statement: "The recognition of one government by another is not a mere courtesy. It is an act having a definite and specific meaning, and it involves an acceptance by the recognizing government of the principles, purposes, and avowed intentions of the recognized government as being in conformity with the rules which govern the conduct of civilized nations toward each other. For the United States to recognize Russia would be to publicly acknowledge that the avowed purpose of the present Russian Government to overthrow our system of government is consistent with international friendship. Of course, that would be a lie."

It seems to me that there is no room for argument. The American people will not compromise with any attempt of a foreign government to interfere with our domestic institutions, and, of course, will not tolerate the revolutionary activities and vicious and diseased propaganda of the Communist Internationale directed at our civil liberties, our free institutions, and our form of government. I decline to argue whether the Soviet Government is strictly responsible for the acts of the Communist Internationale further than to quote Zinovieff, formerly head of the Communist Internationale, regarding its relations to the Soviet Government: "It is the foundation and roof of the same building; one belongs to the other." The Russian Communist Party, the Soviet Government, and Red Internationale have interlocking directorates, and all three take their orders from the political bureau headed by Stalin and Molitov. Its fundamental aim is world revolution and the establishment of a soviet dictatorship throughout the world by force and violence.

We do not intend to recognize Soviet Russia, because we do not propose to have the soviet consulates established in all our industrial cities, north and south, to become nests of Communist propaganda and class hatred, as they have done in Germany, China, and elsewhere. We are not afraid of such revolutionary propaganda in our midst, but we do not propose to admit it any more than we would such dread diseases as leprosy, bubonic plague, or typhus. We have plenty of preventive hygiene in the United States and many wonderful modern hospitals and able surgeons, and could segregate and take care of such contagious diseases, but, naturally, we don't admit them.

It is a libel against the American people to say that they are afraid of Communist propaganda. Why, the Regular Army, National Guard, American Legion, and Veterans of Foreign Wars could—using a Russian word—"liquidate" all the Communists in the United States in a few weeks' time, in case of any attempt at a Communist revolution. But, in the midst of our present economic crisis, it would be foolhardy to recognize Soviet Russia and thereby permit the Communist Internationale, under diplomatic immunity, to become established in our industrial cities, in the Farm Belt, and among the Negroes of the South to provide organized leadership to revolutionary activities in the United States.

Recognition of Soviet Russia, in order to strengthen our hands against Japan, is preposterous. I do not care a tinker's damn if Japan and Soviet Russia fight it out for Siberia or Manchuria. I am opposed to sending a single American soldier to police Manchuria. I am opposed to acting as a wet nurse to foreign nations, or picking the aggressor nation. I am opposed to any war with Japan except for defense.

I am sick, tired, and disgusted with the so-called "Stimson note-sending policy", any time the Japanese took a Manchurian town or a Japanese soldier tried to cut off a Chinese pigtail. It is the height of hypocrisy for the United States to be passing moral judgments on other countries, in view of our Monroe Doctrine, the seizure of the Panama Canal, and our adventures into Haiti and Nicaragua. Let us cease sticking out our tongues and making finger noses at Japan, and above all stop this maudlin and senseless talk of recognizing Russia in order to punish Japan.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute for the purpose of making a statement.

I wish to say that I think the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] unwittingly did an injustice to the minority members of the Committee on Military Affairs in connection with the debate upon the rule. It is a fact that party lines have never been drawn in the Committee on Military Affairs, and as far as it may ever be in my power to control it, they never will be so drawn. I wish to say that the minority members of that committee, during the discussions in executive session, while they are bitterly opposed to the principle of the bill, offered at times helpful and constructive suggestions; and I acknowledge that their ideas as business men, with reference to how, even though they are opposed to the proposition, it could be made to work successfully for the benefit of the whole country, have been worthy of our consideration, and in some cases of our adoption. This bill is the joint product of the 25 individual members of that committee sitting around the table with earnest desire to do what they think is best for all the people. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] has expired.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, the bill which is now before us, known as the "Tennessee Valley authority bill", is another item in the administration's program and another instance where President Roosevelt has prepared in advance the principles of a measure which he desires to have enacted by Congress.

I shall direct my remarks to one feature which today is not the biggest item—namely, Muscle Shoals. Muscle Shoals has become a political byword. There never was a project calling for the expenditure of the taxpayers' money which had less intrinsic merit and which was accompanied by more insidious propaganda. This project was conceived and born in the brains of lobbyists. It was nurtured by politicians. It was developed by selfish interests. It has come down through the years with this type of support and without virtue of any sort.

It is this background of Muscle Shoals to which I desire to make particular reference, and therefore I ask the indulgence of the House while I place before it, almost in chronological order, the history of these years of lobbying and political activity.

The source of my information, I may say to the House, in addition to that gained through my own personal association with the subject since I have been a Member of this body, is the report of the Select House Committee to Investigate War Expenditures. This committee, during the second session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, conducted a thorough investigation of the Muscle Shoals project and came to the conclusion that President Wilson's development of the Muscle Shoals was but the culmination of years of effort and striving on the part of certain interests to induce the Federal Government to dam the Tennessee River for the production of hydroelectric power. I shall briefly trace the history of these efforts as brought out in the committee's report.

It appears that one J. W. Worthington, of Sheffield, Ala., was one of the first persons to take an interest in the development of Muscle Shoals for power purposes, and the report states that he began to have conferences with Senator Morgan, of Alabama, about the project as early as 1901. In 1905, Senator Morgan prepared a report on the subject of Muscle Shoals. The following year Worthington interested a gentleman named Frank S. Washburn in the project, and these two persons immediately organized the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Power Co., a subsidiary of the Alabama Power Co. Afterward, it seems, Washburn became interested in the fixation of nitrogen from the air, and in 1908 he formed the American Cyanamid Co., of Niagara Falls, Canada.

The Muscle Shoals, of course, are a shallows in the Tennessee River, which from the earliest times had been an obstacle to navigation. As early as 1828 Congress donated to the State of Alabama a large quantity of land in order that the State might sell the land and with the funds realized construct a canal around the rapids. A canal was later built, but it was found to be inadequate and was subsequently abandoned. In 1890, however, the Federal Government, at a cost of over $3,000,000, built a larger canal around the rapids, and this canal remained in use until the Muscle Shoals area was developed during and after the war.

Constant and persistent efforts were made from time to time to get Congress to abandon the canal and build a series of dams, under the guise of navigation improvement, but for the real purpose of developing hydroelectric power for commercial purposes. In 1907, the then Representative from the Muscle Shoals district introduced a bill in this House which would have permitted the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Power Co., which Worthington and Washburn had organized, to build three dams in that vicinity, the Federal Government to pay the cost of the locks and the expense of building the dams and the power company to sell the power under Government regulation. The bill was referred to the Rivers and Harbors Committee but was never reported to the House. In the succeeding Congresses similar bills were introduced, usually by the same Representative, but no action was ever taken on them by the committee.

The Rivers and Harbors Act of 1907 provided for the appointment of a Board of Engineers to examine the Muscle Shoals with reference to permitting the improvement of that stretch of the river by private capital, and in a report afterward made the Board took the position that no portion of the expense of any improvement along the lines of the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Power Co. proposal should be borne by the United States. As an exhibit to this report, there appears a memorandum prepared by Frank S. Washburn in which he contended that the Government should assist his company in building the dam.

In 1908, the Rivers and Harbors Committee requested the Board of Engineers to review their previous report, and after doing so the Board adhered to its previous recommendation. Two years later a similar request was made upon the Board, and a report was subsequently submitted which became known as "Document No. 20." At hearings conducted by the Board of Engineers, Washburn and Worthington appeared and insisted upon their plan for Government cooperation. Their final proposal was that the Government should finance the building of a dam and hydroelectric plant at a cost of $18,700,000, of which the Government was to contribute $8,575,000 as the amount attributable to navigation improvement and a further sum of $1,750,000 for flowage rights. The power company was to lease the dam for 100 years and was to repay the Government during that time for that part of the project attributable to power development. Interest was to run at 3 percent, which was about half what the company would have had to pay private capital for a loan.

This report of the engineers served as the basis for an item in the river and harbor bill of 1915 calling for an appropriation of $150,000 for the completion of surveys, and so forth, looking to the improvement of the Tennessee River in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals for the purpose, as stated in the bill, of—

> Navigation, combined with the development of water power by the United States alone or in cooperation with private interests.

After a bitter debate in the House, during which the real purpose of the appropriation was exposed, the provision was stricken from the bill on motion of Representative Lenroot, of Wisconsin. Mr. Lenroot quoted from the report of the Board of Engineers to show that the proposed appropriation was not for the purpose of furnishing information to Congress, but that it was considered necessary in order, to quote the report of the board, "that there need be no unnecessary delay in active prosecution of the work whenever it is authorized." He argued that to vote for the appropriation was to vote to commit the Federal Government to an $18,000,000 expenditure out of the Public Treasury and a 100-year lease to a water-power monopoly.

The water-power monopoly referred to by Mr. Lenroot was the Alabama Power Co., which prior to the World War had bought up all available power sites along the Tennessee River, including land in the Muscle Shoals area.

During 1915, Worthington appeared before the Rivers and Harbors Committee, of which I was then a member, and presented an elaborate plan, and also a book, setting forth the advantages of the Muscle Shoals proposition. In May of that year a group of Senators and Representatives visited Muscle Shoals at his invitation. As a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, I accompanied the delegation; and, while I was impressed with the possibilities of Muscle Shoals, I did not feel that the Federal Government should subsidize a private power venture under the guise of a navigation improvement.

In referring to this visit of Members of Congress to Muscle Shoals, the report of the Select Committee to Investigate War Expenditures says:

> Even this congressional visit did not seem to create a sentiment in Congress favorable to the proposition advanced. After these visits, Mr. Worthington decided that the only way to procure Federal aid in the improvement of the Muscle Shoals would be to persuade the Congress that it was necessary to procure nitrogen for war purposes, in the event we became involved in the war.

The basis for the foregoing statement may be found in the testimony of Worthington before the investigating committee, when he said:

> I then decided that the only hope for the development of the great possibilities at Muscle Shoals, and at other points on the Tennessee River, would probably be that Congress would have to decide—or the Government would have to decide, certainly so if we went into the war—upon some plan of providing the country with the needed supply of nitrogen.

Worthington and Washburn at once changed their plan of campaign. In connection with the agricultural appropriation bill for 1917, the House Agriculture Committee, at the request of Representative Heflin, held hearings on the advisability of erecting a nitrate plant, to which the Government was to contribute $20,000,000, or half the cost. The origin of the proposal was, of course, in Messrs. Worthington and Washburn, and the latter appeared before the committee and argued in behalf of the proposition. The committee, however, declined to take favorable action. A similar measure was advocated by Mr. Washburn before the Senate Agriculture Committee.

In March 1916 there was reported to the House a bill which subsequently became known as the National Defense Act. Section 82 of the bill—which, by the way, was so short and unobtrusive as to attract little attention—provided for an appropriation of $20,000,000 for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen by the development of water power or other means. No particular site was mentioned for the location of the plant. However, it was freely charged on the floor that this provision was only a subterfuge to secure Federal capitalization for the development of Muscle Shoals, a proposition which had been definitely rejected on its merits. There was ample evidence to support this allegation. For example, in the report of the Military Affairs Committee the argument in support of the nitrate section of the bill consisted wholly of a lengthy quotation from the testimony of this same Washburn before that committee.

The day after the bill was reported to the House Mr. Worthington sent the following telegram to a gentleman in Florence, Ala., who was chairman of a so-called "Muscle Shoals finance committee", a propaganda organization:

> Will you please extend my thanks and hearty feeling of congratulations and encouragement to the courageous, upstanding, constructive people of Florence, and tell them that the bill [was] introduced in the House by the Military Affairs Committee authorizing the development of water power and construction of atmospheric nitrogen nitric-acid plants. * * * Our efforts supported by the lead of Florence secured the authorization for the proposed development, and if Florence will stand pat, put up, and see us through, we will get these plants. The total development with fertilizer plants to cost $50,000,000.
>
> J. W. WORTHINGTON.

I draw the attention of the House to Mr. Worthington's words, "Our efforts * * * secured the authorization", and to the claim that they would get the plants although no site was mentioned in the bill.

Under the provisions of the nitrate section of the bill the selection of the site was to be left to the President. However, it was evident in the debates that everyone knew that Muscle Shoals was in the minds of the sponsors of the proposal. One southern Representative admitted that he had what he called a "selfish interest" in the nitrate provision, saying that he hoped it was not unfortunate for the project that the best water-power sites were located in the South.

Representative Lenroot, of Wisconsin, who was later a Senator from that State, paid his respects to the nitrate provision of the bill as follows:

> This lobby has gone before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and urged this proposition as a navigation proposition. They have gone before the Committee on Military Affairs and urged it as a preparedness proposition. They have gone before the Committee on Agriculture and urged it as a fertilizer proposition, and they have now been successful in getting this thing in a very ingenious form in the amendment that is now before us, very innocent appearing on its face, although they have not all they want nor what they hope to get at the hands of these conferees.

The late Nicholas Longworth referred to the nitrate proposition as "the old wolf in sheep's clothing", and at a later date, in speaking of the same provision, he said:

> What is this so-called "nitrate proposition"? It is a scheme to spend $20,000,000 of the people's money absolutely uselessly, so far as they are concerned, and the inherent vice of it all is that this money is being taken under false pretenses. In the name of national preparedness we are going to spend $20,000,000, and this is but an entering wedge, for eventually it will cost millions more if carried out upon a scheme which has nothing whatever to do with national preparedness, upon a scheme which, when advocated on its real merits, has been repeatedly repudiated by Congress.

With what prophetic vision Mr. Longworth spoke when he said that this provision was but an entering wedge, and that it would eventually cost many millions more!

After considerable debate on the nitrate provision, the House eliminated it from the bill by a vote of 224 to 180. However, it refused to stay dead. When the bill reached the Senate, Senator Underwood and others started a movement to reinsert the provision. The same charges that had been made against it in the House were reiterated in the Senate. Senator Kenyon, of Iowa, in speaking of the proposal, said:

Mr. Washburn's plan, which is very similar to the plan set forth in Document No. 20 has been elucidated by him before the Military Affairs Committee of the House, before the Committee on Agriculture of the House, before the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate, and the plan is substantially the same plan, with some variations, as the one the Army engineers reported in favor of. That is why I have said that, in my judgment, the evidence is sufficient to show sufficient basis for the statement made that under the Underwood amendment we might just as well write the location Muscle Shoals.

The Senate adopted the nitrate provision after it had been considerably amended, but its essential character was not changed. The bill was sent to conference, and further changes were made there. When the conference report was considered in the House and Senate, the old charges were renewed, but to no avail. The conference report was agreed to and the nitrate provision became law.

As finally enacted, the provision gave to the President the authority to determine the best, cheapest, and most available means of manufacturing nitrates and to construct, maintain, and operate plants for its manufacture, and dams and powerhouses for the generation of electricity to be used in its production. An initial appropriation of $20,000,000 was provided for carrying out the purpose of the act.

Although the National Defense Act was enacted in June 1916, nothing was done under the nitrate-plant provision until early in 1917, at which time a committee of scientists, appointed by the National Academy of Sciences at the invitation of the Secretary of War, made a report stating their recommendations. In the meantime, the Chief of Ordnance of the Army, General Crozier, had requested Dr. Charles L. Parsons, then chief chemist of the Bureau of Mines, to go abroad and make a study of nitrate production for the War Department. Later the Secretary of War appointed a so-called "nitrate supply committee", headed by General Crozier and containing among its membership some of the former members of the committee named by the Academy of Sciences. This committee reported to the Secretary of War on August 21, 1917, recommending that $3,000,000 be set aside for the building of a nitrate plant using the synthetic-ammonia process developed by the General Chemical Co. Our friend Washburn, of course, was interested in the cyanamide process. This report was submitted to the President by the Secretary of War, and the latter was then directed to carry out the recommendations.

Thereupon the nitrates division of the War Department took steps to obtain a site for the proposed plant. Under the direction of Colonel Joyes, of the Ordnance Department, an investigation of proposed sites was made, involving some 60 locations. In his report Colonel Joyes strongly recommended Chattanooga, Tenn., for the location of the plant. The nitrate supply committee had previously recommended that the plant be located at a site somewhere in southwest Virginia or adjoining territory in West Virginia near to the sulphur, sulphuric acid, and coal supplies of that region.

In his letter of September 22, 1917, submitting the recommendations of Colonel Joyes to the Secretary of War, General Crozier added his own recommendation of the Chattanooga site. It was brought out in the hearings of the Committee to Investigate War Expenditures that on the margin of this letter General Crozier had written in longhand the following postscript:

The President has selected Sheffield. So informed by Secretary of War 9/28.

Just why the President selected the Sheffield site the committee was unable to determine. However, it made the following statement in its report:

A fair and candid consideration of the facts cannot fail to the conclusion that the location of nitrate plant no. 1 at Sheffield, Ala., was the result of a concerted plan for the improvement of that locality and the development of the hydroelectric power plant at the Muscle Shoals, and was the culmination of years of effort in that direction, some of which efforts have been hereinbefore briefly outlined, and efforts in which the President and the Secretary of War heartily concurred.

President Wilson's selection of the Sheffield site conclusively proved the statement made by Representative Longworth, when the nitrate-plant provision was written into the National Defense Act, that this provision was really the "old wolf in sheep's clothing."

All appearances indicated that the selection of the Muscle Shoals site for the proposed nitrate plant was a political move. A distinguished Member of the House from Illinois, Mr. Graham, stated on this floor on May 18, 1922, that it originated in the desire of President Wilson to build up one section of the country at the expense of the Public Treasury under the guise of a war necessity. Representative Longworth often inquired why, if the nitrate plants were erected as a war measure, they were placed where not an ounce of water power could be produced for several years. The answer, of course, is that it was pork-barrel legislation, pure and simple.

It appears that during the summer and early fall of 1917 there was a great deal of discussion in the War Department relative to the construction of additional nitrate plants. The War Expenditures Committee determined, as a matter of fact, that the nitrate program then determined upon—

Originated with the War Industries Board of the Council of National Defense—

To quote the report of the committee—and is directly traceable to Mr. Bernard M. Baruch, chairman of that board, who admits that he was the moving spirit in the plans of the Government.

The report further states that it was "obvious that Mr. Baruch was conferring continuously with Mr. Frank S. Washburn as to this matter."

In spite of the fact that practically all of the scientific advice sought by the War Department was to the effect that it was not desirable to embark upon an extensive construction of nitrate plants, the decision to do so was made by those in authority. Col. J. E. Hoffer, Chief of the Gun Division of the War Department during the late war, testified before the investigation committee that he had participated in several conferences at which our friend Washburn was present and in which the advantages of the cyanamide process of nitrate fixation was set forth and discussed. He stated that at these conferences the decision was reached to develop the Muscle Shoals project. The report of the War Expenditures Committee makes the following statement with reference to Mr. Washburn's participation in this decision:

Colonel Joyes at once entered into negotiations with Mr. Washburn and the American Cyanamid Co. for the construction of a cynamide-nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals, Ala. There were several conferences during the summer of 1917, and some investigations were made as to the desirability of building a nitrate plant or plants at other places than at Muscle Shoals. However, Mr. Washburn at all times seriously objected to having such a plant put at any other location. For instance, there was a plan to build two plants of smaller capacity, one to be located at Keokuk, Iowa, where there was a very considerable amount of hydroelectric power immediately available, and the other to be located elsewhere; but Mr. Washburn would not consent to this, and the Department concurred in what he said.

The proposals considered for the building of additional plants were those of the American Cyanamid Co. to develop Muscle Shoals. Washburn's initial proposal contemplated his ultimate ownership of the plant, which was to be built at Government expense and turned over to him after the war. Another proposal contemplated his ownership of only the ammonia plants. It was finally agreed, however, that the project would be built on a cost-plus basis, the exclusive ownership to be in the United States.

The report of the investigating committee makes an interesting comment on the reason for the location of nitrate plants nos. 3 and 4 in Ohio. The older Members of the House will recall, as I have already brought out, that the late Nicholas Longworth was always a bitter opponent of the proposed development of Muscle Shoals, regardless of the form which the proposal took. Even before the nitrate plants were authorized under the National Defense Act of 1916 he had called the attention of the House to the real purpose behind the movement.

The report of the committee has this to say about the Ohio plants:

> The site selected by the War Department for nitrate plant no. 3, at Toledo, Ohio, was entirely unsuitable for the location of such a plant, it being surrounded by water and otherwise largely inaccessible. The site selected for nitrate plant no. 4, in the Little Miami Valley, near Cincinnati, Ohio, was equally unsuitable, in a locality where construction was costly, labor hard to accommodate, and with high prospective expense for transportation of raw materials.
>
> It is evident that criticism of the nitrate program and the location of nitrate plants nos. 1 and 2, at Sheffield and Muscle Shoals, by Ohio Representatives in Congress was the inducing cause in the location of plants nos. 3 and 4 in Ohio, in an unsuccessful effort to quiet and assuage such hostile criticisms.

When the decision was made to build nitrate plant no. 2 at Muscle Shoals, Washburn and his associates concluded that it would be advisable for them to form a subsidiary corporation to build this plant for the Government. Washburn then formed the Air Nitrates Corporation, with a capital stock of $1,000, largely owned by himself. It appears that Washburn had at least two reasons for forming this dummy corporation, the first being to avoid taxes on the parent company, the American Cyanamid Co., and the second to avoid subjecting the assets of the parent company to liability in connection with the planning, construction, and operation of the plants.

It is interesting to note that while the estimated cost of plant no. 2 was first placed as $16,000,000 and then later raised to $30,000,000, its actual cost up to December 31, 1919, was approximately $70,000,000. Of course, Washburn's $1,000 corporation, working on a cost-plus basis, had no incentive to hold down the cost.

Of the funds used for the construction of nitrate plant no. 1, about half were allocated from the $20,000,000 appropriation under the National Defense Act of 1916 and the remainder from an appropriation made for armament of fortifications, which was not contemplated by Congress to be used for that purpose. The entire amount spent in the construction of plant no. 2 and the two Ohio plants was allocated from this latter appropriation. These plants, therefore, were not subject to the restrictions laid down in the National Defense Act. Wilson Dam, like plant no. 1, was begun with appropriations from the fund provided by the National Defense Act.

The responsibility for the development of the Muscle Shoals area is squarely laid at the feet of President Wilson in the following finding of the War Expenditures Committee:

> The responsibility for the location of United States nitrate plants nos. 1 and 2 and the building of the Muscle Shoals Dam rests upon the President of the United States. Plant no. 1 was located at Sheffield by his orders, contrary to the advice and report of every board or officer who had theretofore considered the matter. Plant no. 2 was located at Muscle Shoals by his direction, also contrary to the recommendations of the technical experts who had investigated plant sites. The Wilson Dam was ordered to be built by the President and that at a time when he must have known it could not be completed with the funds available for that purpose, and that it could not be completed in time to be of service during the war.

When the war ended, we had two nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals and had laid the groundwork for the construction of Wilson Dam. The nitrate plants had produced no nitrates during the war, thus fulfilling a prophecy made by the late Nicholas Longworth on May 20, 1916, when he said:

> Without posing as a prophet or the son of a prophet I venture this prediction, that not a pound of nitrogen will ever be made at this plant for the use of the Government in time of war.

Instead of suspending work on Wilson Dam when the war ended, President Wilson ordered the work continued through the use of unexpended funds previously appropriated and with moneys transferred from other funds. In April, 1921, work on the dam was temporarily stopped because further funds were not available. With respect to the continuation of the work after the armistice, the report of the War Expenditures Committee has this to say:

> It is obvious that it was the purpose of the War Department, after the signing of the armistice, to put the work at Muscle Shoals in such condition as to compel Congress to make further appropriations to add to and complete the improvements and plants begun at that place during the war. When hostilities had ceased, an uncompleted steam-power plant costing $10,000,000 was rushed to completion; the Waco quarry has been acquired, and $60,000 has been expended for land for the same; a modern electric plant, industrial village, transmission lines, and railroads have been completed for the Alabama Power Co. at a cost of over $5,000,000, while work on the dam has been suspended by the Priorities Board, when it was known an armistice would be signed, on November 9, 1918, work was ordered recommenced and rushed, although it was known by those giving these orders that there were not sufficient available funds with which to complete the dam.

The folly of the whole nitrates program is evident when we realize that all the nitrates used by this Government for all purposes during the war were produced in the United States by the byproduct coke ovens of the country or imported from Chile. However, we have Muscle Shoals on our hands, and it is up to the Congress and to the President to make the best of a bad situation. What has been done cannot be undone.

The House is familiar with the plans that have been brought before us for the disposition or operation of Muscle Shoals since the war ended. We have had an offer from Henry Ford to buy the plants; we have had offers from fertilizer and power companies to lease the project; but no sale or lease proposition has ever passed both Houses of Congress and been submitted to the President except as an alternative in bills providing for Government operation. We now have before us the plan of President Roosevelt as modified by the Military Affairs Committee.

It will be recalled that in 1925 President Coolidge appointed a commission to determine the best, cheapest, and most available means for the production of nitrates, and this commission recommended that private operation would be the most advantageous course possible, both for the Government and for the public. However, due to the limitations which Congress has placed in all leasing plans, such as the requirement that the lessee shall manufacture fertilizer and guarantee to produce a fixed quantity of nitrogen annually, private capital has found it impracticable to submit a bid which would be acceptable.

I am unalterably opposed to Government operation of Muscle Shoals. My opposition is based not only on the fact that I am against Government competition with private business as a matter of principle, but on the further fact that it would mean the expenditure of millions of dollars more on properties which have already cost the taxpayers of this country $150,000,000 without any return.

It is proposed to produce fertilizer in the nitrate plants, neither of which is equipped for that purpose. This means the installation of additional machinery. In nitrate plant no. 1, even the existing machinery would have to be replaced, as it was never successful. Owing to changes in methods of nitrogen fixation, in which there has been a considerable advance since the war, much of the existing machinery in plant no. 2 would undoubtedly have to be replaced also. What it would cost to put these plants in condition to manufacture fertilizer apparently has never been determined, but it is certain that it would be a large amount, running into the millions of dollars. At the present time I have no doubt the Government could build a complete modern plant of equal capacity for what it would cost to bring the old plants up to date.

So far as the Wilson Dam is concerned, we are told that it will require the expenditure of several millions of dollars to bring the hydroelectric plant up to its maximum capacity. Then we are told that on account of the large variation in the flow of the Tennessee River it will be necessary to build Cove Creek Dam, at a site some two or three hundred miles up the river, in order to increase the primary power at Wilson Dam. This project alone will cost in the neighborhood of $34,000,000, not, however, including the cost of a transmission line to Muscle Shoals. Thus, in order to put the Muscle Shoals project in condition for the Government to operate it, the taxpayers will have to put up millions of dollars more in addition to that already spent.

Of course, I know that under the bill it is proposed to issue $50,000,000 of bonds for the purpose of providing funds for this expense, and that the interest on these bonds will constitute a lien upon the proceeds from the operation of the Muscle Shoals properties, but they are bonds of the United States and will be a direct charge upon the Treasury in the event the operation of Muscle Shoals is not a paying proposition. Moreover, it is not contemplated that this $50,000,000 will be adequate to cover all probable expenses, as is stated in the report of the Military Affairs Committee.

So far as the proposed Cove Creek Dam is concerned, I know our Democratic brethren will say that President Hoover himself advocated this project. But, my friends, he did not recommend it unqualifiedly. In his veto message on the Muscle Shoals bill in the Seventy-first Congress he said:

> The Federal Government should, as in the case of Boulder Canyon, construct Cove Creek Dam as a regulatory measure for the flood protection of the Tennessee Valley and the development of its water resources, but on the same bases as those imposed at Boulder Canyon; that is, that construction should be undertaken at such time as the proposed commission is able to secure contracts for use of the increased water supply to power users or the lease of the power produced as a byproduct from such a dam on terms that will return to the Government interest upon its outlay with amortization.

No such limitations are imposed on the construction of Cove Creek Dam by the bill now before us. In the first place, no previous contract for the sale of power is required, and, secondly, no stipulation is made that the operation of the dam shall be on a profit-making basis.

That the proposed dam would not return to the Government interest on its money with amortization is evident from the report of Lt. Col. M. C. Tyler, of the Army Engineer Corps, to President Hoover's Muscle Shoals Commission. In discussing the economics of the proposed power and navigation dams on the Tennessee River, Colonel Tyler said:

> The Cove Creek project will have the maximum power value only if operated in public-utility service. The power plant at Cove Creek must be practically shut down 4 months during the winter of each year in order to give the greatest service during the low-water months. The value of the Cove Creek project itself for power in the public-utility system is about $17,000,000, while the estimated cost is $34,143,000. The construction of this project at the present time cannot be justified, as it shows a deficit of about $17,000,000.

It has been conclusively shown that as a business proposition the Government cannot successfully operate a wholesale power business. President Hoover, in his veto message, pointed out that the probable operating cost would be in excess of $9,000,000 per annum, while the estimated receipts, on the basis of the realizations of private companies operating in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, probably would not exceed a little over $7,000,000. Moreover, it must be remembered that the Muscle Shoals area is at present more than adequately served by existing private power companies having large capital investments. The Government would have to compete with these private companies for business. They are now capable of supplying more than the peak demand for power, and this demand has been steadily decreasing during the last few years. Government competition would force these plants into idleness, with a consequent loss of their capital investment. The consumer of electricity would not benefit, because it has been shown that even to meet existing power prices the Government would have to operate at a loss, and this loss would have to be paid out of the Federal Treasury. If the power were sold at a profit, it would probably cost the consumers more than they now pay for electricity produced in private plants.

With reference to the general question of the proposed sale of power by the Federal Government, the report of Lieutenant Colonel Tyler, of the Army Engineer Corps, which was made to President Hoover's Muscle Shoals Commission, draws the following conclusions:

> 1. The Government's power plants at Muscle Shoals and the proposed Cove Creek development are not suitably located to serve as the main generating stations of an extensive independent power system.
> 2. The construction of an independent system would involve large expenditures of public funds.
> 3. The cost of transmitting power in such a system would be high and the reliability of service at long distances from the generating center would be poor.
> 4. The construction of such an independent system would be an economic waste, in that it would duplicate transmission facilities now ample to serve that region.
> 5. It may be expected that the deficit from the construction and operation of such system, which will have to be met by the Federal Treasury and by the general taxpayers, will largely exceed any savings from lower rates which may accrue to the limited local public need.

These conclusions were drawn by a competent, disinterested engineer, with no ax to grind, and are worthy of the most careful consideration. Of course, I know that under the bill now before us it is proposed to avoid duplicating present transmission lines by authorizing the authority to lease such lines, or if negotiations for leasing fail to acquire the lines by condemnation. While this may serve to avoid the " economic waste " referred to by Colonel Tyler, it enables the Government to drive existing power companies out of existence.

Reverting to the matter of fertilizer production, I think no one will contend that we do not, at the present time, have an ample domestic supply of nitrogen. Therefore it is unnecessary to maintain the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals for national-defense purposes. Moreover, it has been authoritatively stated that so far as the manufacture of fertilizer by the Government is concerned, it could not be produced as cheaply as it now is being sold in the wholesale markets. The price of fertilizer has declined tremendously since the war, and there is every reason to believe that private competition and development will cause even further reductions in the price.

The bill now before us contemplates extensive experiments in fertilizer production in addition to the manufacture of nitrogen. On this point, Dr. E. P. Howard, a chemical engineer in the Department of Agriculture, a few years ago stated before the House Military Affairs Committee that he did not see any need of operating Muscle Shoals as an experimental plant, as the art of nitrogen-fixation, he said, had advanced too far ahead of that. Dr. F. G. Cottrell, also of the Department of Agriculture, stated at the same time that he felt the Muscle Shoals set-up to be too large to be efficient for the kind of experimentation he thought most worth while, and said that, in his opinion, it could be done better and more economically on a smaller scale.

Aside from the question of whether the Government ought, as a matter of principle, to operate a power and fertilizer business, it appears to me that it would be unwise and uneconomical for it to do so. Now, as to the question of Government competition with private business, there is much that might be said. However, it is unnecessary to do any more than remind the House that once begun on a large scale, such as is proposed at Muscle Shoals, there is no telling where it will end. If we are to have the Government in the fertilizer and power business there is no reason why it should not also go into other industries which are imbued with as much, or even more, of a public interest.

Instead of throwing away any more of the public money on this sectional project, especially at this time when we are endeavoring to guard the Treasury from unnecessary expense, I am in favor of selling or leasing the plants in their present condition to private capital. We have already spent in the neighborhood of $150,000,000 on Muscle Shoals, and to spend millions more would simply be throwing good money after bad.

It is acknowledged that we cannot get from our investment at Muscle Shoals what it has cost us, but any sacrifice that we may have to make in disposing of the plants will at least result in some return on the money already spent, whereas to spend any more in attempting to salvage our "white elephant", Wilson's folly, will only result in making it a "bigger and whiter" one. Let the properties be sold for what they will bring, or let them be leased to private capital without restriction on their use. Only in this way can there be any permanent solution of the Muscle Shoals problem. To commit ourselves to any more development in that region will only make the problem a permanent one, which will rise again from time to time to plague future generations. It would be far better, instead of appropriating more money or authorizing a bond issue, to take a complete loss of our investment to date and wipe the slate clean.

Although I stated at the opening of my remarks that I would allude only to one feature of this bill, namely, Muscle Shoals, I feel that I should, in closing make a brief reference to the bill as a whole. The measure now before us, in its present form, was introduced on Thursday after a few days' hearings on the general subject matter. We are taking the bill up for consideration today, Saturday, and will vote on it Monday. In 2 days, therefore, we are to pass upon a program of such great magnitude that it is difficult to visualize. Not only are we setting the Government up permanently in the fertilizer and power business, but we are undertaking a program for the general development of one section of the country at the expense of the Public Treasury, which may take 50 years to complete. We are committing the Government to an ultimate expenditure that may run into the hundreds of millions of dollars, and because the Executive has asked for this measure this Democratic-controlled House is going to place its rubber stamp of approval upon it without even permitting the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t", and without fully realizing the consequences of its action. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who address the House upon this bill may have leave to extend their own remarks in the RECORD in connection with their remarks delivered on the floor.

Mr. LEE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman asking general authority for all Members of the House to extend their remarks upon the bill?

Mr. McSWAIN. The request now made is only for the gentlemen who address the House in general debate so their addresses may appear continuously in the RECORD. I shall present the general request the gentleman speaks of at the conclusion of the debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MARTIN of Oregon). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON], who represents the district in which the Muscle Shoals properties are located, such time as he may desire.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, Muscle Shoals is located in the northwest corner of the State of Alabama on the Tennessee River in the district which I have represented in this body continuously for the past 18 years and within 5 miles of my home. I have devoted much of my time in behalf of the development and operation of these Government plants; this is well known to the Members of the House with whom I have served during these years.

This is the greatest water-power site east of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio River. President Wilson located the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals by the authority given him in the National Defense Act of 1916. The nitrate plants were constructed according to this act for two fundamental purposes—for the manufacture of munition in time of war and fertilizer for the benefit of American agriculture in peace time. The plants were completed just as the war ended, and the Wilson Dam and hydroelectric development were completed afterward. We had much difficulty in securing the completion of the Wilson Dam after the war and have made various efforts to have the fertilizer plants put in operation since 1920, but have failed, due to the opposition of the power and fertilizer interests. Two bills have been sent to the White House, but neither met with the approval of either President Coolidge or President Hoover.

During Mr. Roosevelt's campaign for the Presidency he promised us that he would visit Muscle Shoals and make a personal inspection of the plants, if elected. About 2 weeks before he was inaugurated as President he made a full and complete inspection of the Muscle Shoals plants and stated publicly to my constituents that he was surprised to find the plants so large and in such splendid condition and early during his administration he would recommend legislation providing for the operation of the plants and development of the Tennessee River Basin.

On April 10 President Roosevelt sent to the Congress a special message recommending the enactment of this legislation. Afterward identical bills were introduced by Representatives McSWAIN, of South Carolina, HILL of Alabama, and myself for the purpose of enacting into law the recommendation of the President. These bills were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs of the House. This committee has considered very carefully the entire subject and has reported the bill introduced by Mr. HILL, a member of the committee, with certain amendments. The chairman, Mr. McSWAIN, has filed for your information a full and complete report on this measure from which you can secure much valuable information on the subject, and I trust that you will study the same very carefully.

I believe the President will appoint a board of directors of ability and experience for the Tennessee Valley authority and the board will select a general manager of experience and ability, and the administration of this act will be a great success. While this is local in some aspects in many others it is national, and will be Nation-wide in its scope and influence, and if a success, as is expected, the same project will be promoted in other sections of the country; as has been clearly stated by President Roosevelt.

The Representatives from Alabama and Tennessee and adjoining States have always supported legislation providing for river and harbor improvement in all sections of the country, also for the irrigation projects to recover the arid lands of the West, the construction of the Roosevelt Dam, the Cape Cod Dam, in which the Representatives of the New England States were interested, and lastly in the construction of the Boulder Dam. During all this time the Tennessee River, one of the greatest inland waterways of the country, has been neglected. Now, I appeal to the Representatives from all sections of this country in the interest of fair play that you give this measure your loyal support. [Applause.]

This legislation would give the people of that section of the Nation cheap water transportation, cheap electric power, the production of cheap concentrated fertilizer for the benefit of the farmers, provide flood control, and preserve the natural resources of the Tennessee Valley, and at the same time it will establish a great laboratory for the purpose of determining the cheapest and best method of manufacturing fertilizer, which is one of the greatest needs of agriculture at this time.

The bill expressly directs the construction by the Government of the Cove Creek Dam, a great storage reservoir on the Clinch River, a tributary of the Tennessee River. This dam will double the primary power at Muscle Shoals and all other dams on the entire river, in addition to preventing floods. It also directs the building of Dam No. 3, located 15 miles above the Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals. This dam will increase the power at the Wilson Dam and provide 9-foot navigation for a long distance up the river toward Chattanooga. It is also provided in the bill that plant no. 2 or its equivalent be kept in readiness for the manufacture of explosives in the event of war.

We hear and talk much about farm relief. One of the greatest needs of the farmers is a cheap concentrated fertilizer. This can be made at Muscle Shoals. Nitrate plant no. 2 is one of the best plants in the world. It uses the cyanamid process, which is the best for the locality where there is an abundance of cheap power. It is said this is the only plant in the world of its kind that is standing idle. It is true that some improvements have been made on the process since plant no. 2 was built, but this is chiefly to reduce the amount of power required, and this improvement can be made there at a very small expense.

The cyanamid process is being used successfully in Canada and a number of European countries. We are even importing fertilizer into this country made by the cyanamid process in Europe.

The plants cannot be maintained for national defense unless operated for the production of fertilizer in time of peace; they would rust out and become obsolete. I have no patience with the claim of a few of the Army officers that the plants should not be retained for national defense, claiming in the event of war explosives can be purchased cheaper than they can be produced at Muscle Shoals. On what do they base such a statement? If this plant is maintained for manufacture of explosives, and we should become involved in another war, of course the Government could buy munitions cheaper by reason of having a plant of its own than if we were dependent upon munition makers, as during the last war. Congress would not have appropriated the enormous sum expended in the construction of these plants had it not been provided in the organic law of 1916 that the plants should be used for the manufacture of fertilizer for the benefit of the American farmer.

The Government operation of these plants is really not in competition with the fertilizer interest for the reason they are nothing but fertilizer mixers. They buy all the material, such as nitrogen, potash, and phosphoric acid, and mix it into fertilizer containing about 16 percent of plant food. They buy most of the nitrogen from the Chilean Nitrate Trust, a foreign monopoly, at an enormous price and, as a result, the farmers have received no benefit from the expenditure of money at Muscle Shoals which was intended for their benefit.

The power interests have opposed the enactment of all legislation for the purpose of utilizing the hydroelectric development of Muscle Shoals for the benefit of the people, and the people in that community are not securing any cheaper rates than before the power was developed at Muscle Shoals. They are paying more than twice the amount being paid in Ontario, Canada, and in municipalities which own and operate their plants.

Five of the seven Republican members of the Committee on Military Affairs have filed a minority report opposing Government operation of the fertilizer plants and the manufacture and sale of electric power at Muscle Shoals. The Organic Law of 1916, providing for this development, expressly provides that the plants shall be operated by the Government. The Government has operated the power plant for the past 6 or 8 years under the Republican administration, selling the power directly to the Alabama Power Co. for about 2 mills a kilowatt-hour, and the power company has resold it for 1 to 8 cents per kilowatt-hour for industrial and domestic purposes. One of the municipalities adjoining Muscle Shoals applied to the Republican administration, several years ago, for permission to purchase power from the Government for the benefit of the municipality, and agreed to extend transmission lines to the switchboard of the Government. A delegation of more than 50 leading citizens of that locality came to Washington and appealed to the Republican administration for permission to buy this power, but their claim was denied, and they continued to operate the plant for the benefit of the power company. So, it would seem at least in bad taste for the Republican Representatives to object to the operation of the plants by the Government. [Applause.] It does seem that they prefer the plants to remain idle and the most of the power run to waste rather than operate them for the benefit of the people, as provided in the law authorizing this development.

Private fertilizer interest can prevent the Government operation of this plant by leasing the same from the President within 12 months from the date of the approval of this bill, as expressly provided therein.

It is claimed by the National Fertilizer Association that the production of fertilizer in commercial quantities would interfere with the business of all the fertilizer manufacturers. It was admitted before the congressional committee a few years ago by the representative of the National Fertilizer Association that the chief objection to the operation of the Muscle Shoals plants for the manufacture of fertilizer was that it would lower the price of fertilizer. It cannot be claimed that the reduction in the price of fertilizer is the cause of the losses sustained by the fertilizer mixers in recent years, for their prices have been so high and the quality of their material so inferior that the farmers have been forced to discontinue to purchase the same. That, it would seem, is the chief cause of their distress as well as the depression which is affecting the business of all industries. According to a report authorized by resolution of the Seventy-second Congress, the United States Government is at present in competition with private enterprise in 41 lines of activity. So the manufacture and sale of fertilizer by the Federal Government is nothing new. The question now to be decided is, Shall the plants at Muscle Shoals remain idle and rust out or be put in operation as provided by law when they were built? As for me and mine, I favor the operation of the plants as provided in the pending bill.

As I have said, the manufacture of fertilizer at Muscle Shoals would not be local in its influence, for it has been proven by fertilizer experts before the committees of Congress that the price of fertilizer at Muscle Shoals would control the price of all fertilizer sold in this country. So farmers from Maine to California would be benefited by cheapening of the price of fertilizer. I appeal to the Members of the House from all sections of the country to support this bill.

The enactment of this legislation will make provision for the sale of power at a fair price. The bill as amended is fair to the power interests in that no competing transmission lines will be constructed by the Government unless the power company refuses to sell their lines. This legislation will fix a yardstick for the price of power in that locality, and if the power company does not make their rates to conform to the same, let them go out of business in that locality. [Applause.]

I desire to take this occasion to express my hearty appreciation and that of the people of the Muscle Shoals district, which I have the honor to represent, for his splendid program providing for this development which has so long been neglected. I trust this legislation will be passed by both Houses of Congress at an early date and be sent to the White House, where it will be promptly approved by our great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt. [Applause.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, Muscle Shoals legislation has been a hardy annual and has been brought in here from time to time clad in the iron armor of economic law, but today it comes to us in the glorious garments of a great vision.

I sympathize with and understand the startling effect upon the President of the United States when he first saw Muscle Shoals. It had the same effect on me, and I came away from there thoroughly convinced, after going over various parts of the Tennessee River, that the Tennessee Basin constitutes one of the greatest natural resources that this or any other nation ever had; and I go further in the belief that eventually, in the interest of our civilization, that great, undeveloped resource will have to be developed for the service of the people there and of the Nation as a whole.

However, under our present circumstances of universal distress, I cannot possibly agree that now is the time to bring a program of legislation before this House based upon a beautiful dream that will take $1,000,000,000 and, perhaps, two generations to complete. We are face to face with such terrific problems creating so real a pressure upon our resources of mind and character, that I feel this bill takes in so much territory that it is absolutely dangerous.

However, I am going to discuss only two aspects of the bill. I consider this bill a recognized, deliberate governmental attack upon two great private industries—first, upon the fertilizer industry of this country; and, secondly, upon the utility interests of the country.

I may forestall all questions when I say that I am not interested financially in either one of these industries. I never have been, and the fact is that since the depression I am not interested in anything financially. [Laughter.] So I speak simply as a student of social affairs and as a citizen of this country.

This bill is very frank. It admits that it is liable to injure these industries. On page 4, section (f), the bill provides:

> No member of the board shall have any financial interest in any public-utility corporation engaged in the business of distributing and selling power to the public, nor in any corporation engaged in the manufacture, selling, or distribution of fixed nitrogen or fertilizer—

Now, listen to this—> or any ingredients thereof, nor shall any member have any interest in any business that may be adversely affected by the success of the Muscle Shoals project as a producer of concentrated fertilizer or as a producer of electric power.

In other words, this bill proclaims the doctrine that the Government is ready to injure its citizens and taxpayers, but does not want any of its own agents to be injured in the process.

The fertilizer industry of this country is in distress. It has an investment of over $300,000,000. It employs 25,000 people. It has a capacity of 12,000,000 tons a year. And it now has a demand for less than 5,000,000 tons. Only today a telegram has been sent to the President of the United States signed by 103 fertilizer companies of this country asking for consideration of their rights in this legislation.

I am in favor of utilizing our investment on the Tennessee River. I would like to see the power developed. I think we ought to build the Cove Creek Reservoir and possibly finish No. 3 Dam, because we only have about 50,000 prime horsepower at Muscle Shoals today, without these additional projects. I am in favor of developing these sources of power for greater economy and then selling this power at the switchboard to the established institutions that are now in this territory with a great investment, giving excellent service. I favor leasing the fertilizer plants to private producers on reasonable economic terms.

We have invested in the utility industries of this country at the present time nearly $12,000,000,000. Over $2,000,000,000 of this is held by the insurance companies of the country and other institutions of a fiduciary nature. We have millions of investors in these institutions. Our privately owned utilities employ 4,000,000 people and pay in taxes every year more than Muscle Shoals has cost. In this Tennessee territory you have between three and four hundred million dollars invested in a half dozen utilities that are reaching a population of 12,000,000 people. They are selling now about 3,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours a year, 1,000,000,000 less than they sold 3 years ago. Their productive capacity is only about one half to three fourths used today, and the bill proposes to authorize an authority at public expense to produce another billion kilowatt-hours and to duplicate the transmission lines and the power plants of existing institutions in that territory, and thus injure their investment and put them out of business.

Mr. Speaker, I do not often speak here, because I think speaking here is largely a waste of time. I have no idea that I am going to change any votes. I expect to see this measure go through by a great vote of the faithful on this side of the aisle. That is what you are here for. I just want to go on record, because in days to come some of you gentlemen who are giving birth to this beautiful child today I am afraid will not be as proud of it after it grows up. However, I want to call your attention to something far more vital, far more central, in my judgment, than these economic facts and figures, great and vital as they are.

When the World War was over we began to realize that that great catastrophe was an explosion that ended an age in the civilized progress of mankind. Since then we have been in the dust and ashes of that explosion. The new pathway upon which to go forward has not yet been made plain.

When the great Russian Soviet experiment was launched I made up my mind, and have never changed it since, that when that experiment was developed it would have but one rival in the world. That was the wonderful social experiment known as "the United States of America." Either the whole world would become Russian or the whole world would become American. The two principles are as far apart as the poles, as light and darkness. Of course, they will modify each other tremendously in their application. But before civilization has settled down it must and will determine whether it is to be dominated by the Russian principle or by the American principle.

This bill, and every bill like it, is simply an attempt to graft onto our American system the Russian idea and make the Government everything and the citizen nothing.

The great ideal of American civilization is that the individual is the end of the civilizing process. Our Government exists to give him a chance to make a man of himself. The Government is the umpire in the game. When it takes the field as a player in hurtful competition with its own citizens it ceases to be American.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON. I cannot stop now, because I am going strong. I will see the gentleman at Hennessey's after mass.

Getting back to where we were, gentlemen, we are going to experiment here. We have been 150 years, with now a population of over 100,000,000 people, building up the greatest social structure the world has ever seen from the point of view of the common man, by individual initiative, individual industry, individual ownership of property, with the right to cooperate. We have made vast mistakes. We have had cruelties and oppressions and outrages originating amongst us. We have had villainies without limit, as occur in all civilizations, but the fact is we have this one great, vital thing, called America, and you are now going to attempt to make it over in 3 months, by a series of legislative enactments; and you know very little about how they will work or what the results will be. It cannot be done. The patient is very sick, the world is sick, but this great patient is a vital thing, and if you leave him alone and do not try to cure him by a thousand violent experiments and quack nostrums his vast innate recuperative resources will assert themselves, and he will in due time find his feet on the highway of progress and prosperity once more.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. EATON. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman for anything he wants.

Mr. McSWAIN. I ask the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey if he subscribes to the doctrine of his own party which follows expressly the doctrine of Theodore Roosevelt laid down in 1912, that water power developed in navigable streams should be held in the hands of the public for the benefit of all the people?

Mr. EATON. I am perfectly willing to have that, but let me tell my beloved and honored colleague, this thing is very much bigger than partisanship. We hear from you how wicked the Republicans are, and we tell you how wicked you are, but the fact is that we are all in the same boat, and we should all pull together. In fact, if we do not hang together we are going to hang separately. The principle involved in this thing is very much larger than any party. It strikes at the foundation of our American civilization. I have been opposed to it for these reasons if for no other, and I am going to stay opposed to it. My vote will not count. it will be lost, but I shall have the satisfaction of knowing that I have been faithful to my convictions, and bye and bye perhaps we will find out who is right.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Did the gentleman vote for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act?

Mr. EATON. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is not that socialism in its worst form?

Mr. EATON. It is not exactly in its worst form. I think this bill is in its worst form. [Laughter.] Now, if there are no other questions, I think I had better close. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in the language and in the spirit of that old-time Baptist hymnal, "This is the hour I long have sought and mourned, because I found it not." We who for the past 12 years have devoted our time and our energies to the solution of the perplexing Muscle Shoals problem are about to witness, at last, a fruition of our toil and tribulation and a realization of our dreams. As one of those who has practically lived with this subject during that long, drawn-out period fraught as it has been by a succession of blasted hopes and repeated disappointments, I rejoice indeed at the prospect of witnessing a definite and successful settlement of this issue which has beset and harassed the Congress and bedeviled a patient and long-suffering public for more than a decade. In fact, my colleagues, my "cup" of personal gratification "runneth over."

SHADOW-BOXING PERFORMANCE

Mr. Speaker, the only kick or consolation I got out of the Democratic landslide last fall was the assurance that the Seventy-third Congress would pass a Muscle Shoals bill which would receive Executive sanction. Congressional action on Muscle Shoals up to this time has been a purely puerile and "shadow-boxing" performance. The House would pass a bill which we knew in advance would be literally rewritten at the other end of the Capitol, and which we knew also was destined to certain veto at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. We repeated this ridiculous travesty until it got to be a national joke and likewise a national scandal. But behold the difference! We are considering a bill today which we have every reason to believe will be ratified in principle by the other body, and which we know will receive immediate approval at the White House. So, my friends, this old dilapidated, weather-beaten weathercock that has been used as a political football for a decade, during which time it has degenerated into a veritable congressional "white elephant", thank God, is approaching the end of its devious trail. We can already hear the death rattle in its husky throat.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to the interest I have in this proposition because of the public good I expect to see result from its enactment and operation, I modestly confess a very deep and sincere personal concern. When I tell you that the proposed Cove Creek Dam is not only situated in the district which I have the honor to represent, but is also in the county in which I reside, you can appreciate my profound interest in the measure before us. However, I am frank to say that this program possesses such tremendous merit that I would support it regardless of its geographical situation. This development in its largest sense and in its final analysis is not a local or sectional one. On the contrary, it is a national proposition which will ultimately become a vast and gigantic national asset. I supported the Boulder Dam project on the same theory, and I expect to continue to support similar improvements on the same principle.

IMPORTANCE OF TENNESSEE RIVER

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Membership of the House realizes that in point of potential hydroelectric energy, the Tennessee River is one of the greatest streams in the world. Eliminating the Columbia, the Colorado, and the Niagara Rivers, it is the greatest in continental United States, and I am advised that few rivers in the world possess the potential hydroelectric power equal to that of the Tennessee. With the development of the power sites contemplated in the survey of the War Department, the Tennessee will produce 2,900,000 horsepower of electric energy. Including its longest tributary, the Tennessee is approximately 1,000 miles in length. Its watershed consists of more than 40,000 square miles in which reside about 2,500,000 people. This basin at present is largely devoted to agriculture, though it contains vast and important mineral deposits, particularly coal, limestone, iron, copper, zinc, and phosphate rock, to say nothing of the inexhaustible quantity of marble and limestone of the first quality. The Tennessee River is a navigable waterway, and its entire length is under improvement by the Federal Government. I am informed that it is the only river in the United States that has had a complete survey of its navigation and hydroelectric possibilities. This tremendous horsepower, coupled with the adjacent natural resources, makes the Tennessee outstanding in comparison with the other great rivers I have heretofore mentioned.

When at peace, the Tennessee is a most picturesque stream, its extreme tributaries rising among the foothills of western Virginia. Like a beautiful coil of blue ribbon it winds its way through beautiful east Tennessee, across northern Alabama, and northeast Mississippi, where it veers abruptly to the north and again crosses Tennessee, separating two of her grand divisions, and finally empties into the Ohio near Paducah, Ky. Properly stated, the Ohio empties into the Tennessee, for the reason that at low-water mark the Tennessee has a greater flow than the Ohio. But when lashed by the storm, the Tennessee ceases to be a lamb in its demeanor, and becomes a raging lion, frequently when on a rampage leaving its banks and committing horrible devastation, materially contributing to the flood destruction on the lower Mississippi. Floods occur frequently on the main stream and on the lower part of most of the tributaries. The damage done by ordinary floods is not great; however, the flood of 1926 caused damages in excess of $2,650,000. It is estimated by the district engineer of the War Department that over a period of many years the flood destruction on the Tennessee will average $1,780,000 annually. The program outlined by this legislation will completely solve the flood problem on the Tennessee and its tributaries, and greatly reduce flood volume and momentum on the Mississippi; and the savings from this source alone will more than amortize the capital cost and maintenance of these projects in 60 years.

PROPOSITION SOUND

Mr. Speaker, it has been urged by those not in sympathy with this measure that the proposition is economically unsound, because, they contend, that during the past few years it has been demonstrated that power can be generated cheaper by steam than by hydro. In the first place, they overlook the fact that this is not simply a power proposition. In my judgment, power is of secondary importance. Navigation is the primary and paramount objective; power follows, and flood control is a very important element, to say nothing of the forestation, reforestation, and conservation features. If this were an exclusively power measure, with fuel reduced in price to its present unparalleled low level, I concede that in sound economics this measure could hardly be sustained. Why, Mr. Speaker, the proposed Cove Creek Dam is located within 8 miles or less of one of the largest bituminous coal fields in the United States. It is common knowledge that during the past few years the coal industry, not only in that area but throughout the whole United States, has been suffering from a prostration and paralysis never before experienced in the history of the industry. Hundreds of mines have been forced to suspend operation, and those that are working are running only 2 or 3 days a week and on starvation wages, selling their production at prices which barely enable them to exist. But, Mr. Speaker, we are confidently hoping for a revival in this great industry, and when normal conditions return who can say that power can be produced by steam when fuel is commanding normal prices as cheaply as it can be produced by water power?

Experience has shown us that fuel is subject to sudden and radical fluctuation, whereas water power is stable and permanent. The great Tennessee and other rivers are indifferent to prosperity and depression alike, and panics may come and panics may go, but "Old Man River just keeps rolling along." "He don't hoe 'taters and he don't plant cotton", and regardless of the fluctuations and vicissitudes with which his great competitor, Fuel, has to contend, in the language of the popular melody, "Old Man River just keeps rolling along."

EFFECT ON PRIVATE INVESTMENT

Mr. Speaker, recently there has been manifest a great deal of agitation among the power-company bondholders in my district, based, evidently, on the theory that this legislation will seriously impair, if not destroy, the value of their holdings. I have received hundreds of letters and telegrams from such stockholding constituents entreating me to oppose any measure that might jeopardize the value of these securities. I presume that my colleagues from the area affected are having a similar experience. I do not know whether this appeal has been superinduced by cunning propaganda or whether it is a spontaneous expression of genuine apprehension. But be that as it may, from a careful study and analysis of this bill I fail to see where its provisions can possibly do violence to legitimate private investment. It seems to me that the rights of the private power companies and their bondholders are reasonably safeguarded. Of course, this does not mean that any company whose financial structure is largely fictitious and whose stocks and bonds are based on values, or, rather, alleged values, consisting in a large measure of wind and water, will not suffer. But, Mr. Speaker, whether we pass this bill or not, private power companies cannot continue to pay interest and dividends on huge, superheterodyne stock and bond flotations that have no sound economic basis. The passage of this legislation may hasten the liquidation of such companies, if such there be. But, Mr. Speaker, can there be anything morally wrong in that premise? If they are unsound, they are destined to failure, anyhow. And while, to save their faces, they may attribute their failure to the passage of this legislation—in other words, use it as an alibi—nevertheless, everyone familiar with the facts will know that their failure was due to these unsound and illegitimate practices. No one, Mr. Speaker, has a higher regard for the sanctity of contracts than I have, and no one would oppose the confiscation of private property with greater vehemence than would I. But shall we hesitate to go forward with a great program—designed to give to the public cheaper power, to the farmer fertilizer at a reasonable price, to provide cheaper transportation facilities for our commerce, and to so regulate our streams as to prevent the devastation of constantly recurring floods—simply because, forsooth, such a program might, peradventure, conflict with the selfish interests of some private enterprise which has hawked and peddled a lot of its questionable securities to an innocent and unsuspecting public? That is the proposition in a nutshell.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that this bill proposes to deal absolutely fairly with these power companies. As I read and interpret this measure, after power at Muscle Shoals has been employed in a maximum manufacture of fertilizer, if any power remains the board, or so-called "authority", may sell it to the power companies, having in mind the interests of the consumers, if a satisfactory price can be agreed upon. If negotiations fail to bring about such an agreement said board, or authority, before committing the Government to the construction of transmission lines, will undertake to lease the wires from the power companies or purchase them, and if a satisfactory arrangement cannot be had, then and in that event the authority may proceed to condemn such lines or construct others. Is there anything unreasonable, arbitrary, or confiscatory about this procedure? Is not this eminent domain applied in the most just and equitable manner possible?

At one time, Mr. Speaker, as an attorney, I represented the East Tennessee Power Co. in a rather remote and unimportant capacity, and while I have not represented it for some time, in each of my campaigns my political enemies desperately seek to make an issue of this fact in an effort to injure me. Hundreds of my close personal friends are holders of the securities of this company, and I certainly would be the last person in the world to intentionally do it an injustice. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the apprehension of these companies that this legislation is calculated to destroy their investment is without proper warrant in fact. It will only affect these companies in proportion to the water and wind their financial structure contains.

THE FERTILIZER PHASE

And, Mr. Speaker, another important element contained in this proposal is the proposed manufacture of cheaper fertilizer for the benefit of the American farmers. Here is a real opportunity to give the farmer genuine relief. I know there has been a studied and persistent effort to ridicule this provision of the legislation on the ground that this proposition is likewise economically unsound. I know that the representatives of the great fertilizer industry of the United States take the position that the ingredients of fertilizer cannot be produced by the Government at Muscle Shoals anything like as cheaply as it is being produced by private capital. But, my friends, if this be true why are they so exercised about it? The farmers of the Nation, and especially of the South, are in dire need of fertilizer to stimulate and resuscitate the soil of their impoverished farms, but they cannot afford to purchase it in sufficient quantity due to exorbitant and prohibitive prices.

In the minority report filed in connection with the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 49, in the second session of the Seventy-first Congress, bearing on the production of fertilizer at Muscle Shoals, we find the following language:

> The first and direct result will be the production of a cheap nitrogenous plant food which will demonstrate to the farmers and the business people of the United States the actual cost of fixing nitrogen and of processing the same for use as fertilizer. Judging by numerous estimates made by experts, the reduction will cut the present cost of nitrogen products from 25 to 40 percent. This should break the power of the Chilean Nitrate Trust which has extracted tribute from the world and especially from the farmers of the United States, merely because Chile has a monopoly upon mineral nitrate of soda. Two hundred and sixty-five million dollars has been paid into the public treasury of Chile as the export duty upon nitrate of soda exported to the United States alone. When to this is added the exports of nitrate of soda to other countries, especially prior to the World War, the total receipts by the Government of Chile for such export tax must amount to more than a billion dollars. Thus the people of Chile have shifted a large part of their tax burden upon the shoulders of the people of other nations, merely because they possess a natural monopoly in an essential commodity vitally important in both peace and war.

Farther on in the report the committee added as follows:

> If the United States Government can help break this trust team and set the farmers of this country free, it will be one of the greatest blessings that agriculture has ever received.

Mr. Speaker, thus it will be seen that for many years the farmers of America have been the slaves of the fertilizer combine. The time is at hand when they should be delivered from this thraldom, and this measure provides the necessary instrumentality.

Due to the limit of time, Mr. Speaker, I am necessarily precluded from commenting on many phases of this measure that I would like to discuss, and therefore I must hasten to a conclusion.

RIGHTS OF TENNESSEE AND ALABAMA

I regret very much that the committee has seen fit to eliminate from the bill the section providing certain revenues to the States of Tennessee and Alabama, for manifest reasons, out of the earnings of these various plants. Appreciating the justness of this obligation, in each of the bills heretofore passed on this subject the rights of these two States in this respect were recognized. The bill introduced by Senator NORRIS, and likewise the bills introduced by

Congressman McSWAIN and Congressman HILL of Alabama at this session each contains the following provision:

SEC. 13. Five percent of the gross proceeds received by the board for the sale of power generated at Dam No. 2, or from the steam plant located in that vicinity, or from any other steam plant hereafter constructed in the State of Alabama, shall be paid to the State of Alabama; and 5 percent of the gross proceeds from the sale of power generated at Cove Creek Dam, hereinafter provided for, or any other dam or steam plant located in the State of Tennessee, shall be paid to the State of Tennessee. Upon the completion of said Cove Creek Dam the board shall ascertain how much excess power is thereby generated at Dam No. 2 and any other dam hereafter constructed by the Government of the United States on the Tennessee River, in the State of Alabama, or in the State of Tennessee and from the gross proceeds of the sale of such excess power 2½ percent shall be paid to the State of Alabama and 2½ percent to the State of Tennessee. These provisions shall apply to any other dam that may hereafter be constructed and controlled and operated by the board on the Tennessee River or any of its tributaries, the main purpose of which is to control flood waters and where the development of electric power is only incidental in the operation of such flood-control dam. In ascertaining the gross proceeds from the sale of such power upon which a percentage is paid to the States of Alabama and Tennessee the board shall not take into consideration the proceeds of any power sold to the Government of the United States, or any department of the Government of the United States used in the operation of any locks on the Tennessee River, or for any experimental purpose, or for the manufacture of fertilizer or any of the ingredients thereof, or for any other governmental purpose.

The bill which passed the Congress in 1928 which received a pocket veto at the White House, and the bill which passed again in 1930 only to meet a similar fate, each contained a similar provision to that just referred to. Leaving the Alabama picture to be treated by the able Representatives of that great State, I shall confine my remarks on this item to the Tennessee side of the proposition. In all candor, I ask you, my friends, why, by every process of reason and common justice, are not the taxpayers of Tennessee entitled to this consideration which, in my judgment, is far below fair and adequate redress?

The proposed Cove Creek Dam will inundate and absolutely destroy for all time approximately 54,000 acres of valuable agricultural lands in Tennessee. In other words, the taxpayers of that State forever lose tax values to the amount of approximately $1,000,000 based upon an assessment of 50 percent.

I would like to see language inserted in the bill providing that this revenue be paid directly to the counties affected, but I realize that this is a matter that will later address itself to the Tennessee Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, I hope to see the section on this subject, which was struck out by the committee, restored to the bill on the floor of the House, and at the proper time and place, if the committee will permit, I expect to make a motion to that effect. The Norris bill, now on the Senate Calendar, contains this provision, and I feel sure that it will be retained in the bill when that body acts on it. This will enable us to preserve the rights of these two States when the legislation goes to conference, regardless of any adverse action we may take here.

COMPLETE PROGRAM MUST NOT BE HAMPERED

Moreover, I regretted to see the committee modify the President's plan by altering the bill so as to require a showing of a certain market demand for power before other dams can be built than those expressly provided for in this measure. Again we are harking back to the power theory in contravention of the spirit and big purposes of what is known as "the Tennessee Valley improvement program." To accomplish the navigation and flood control contemplated by the President's plan, it will be necessary to complete the entire project. While a great many of the dams included in the program will be purely navigation units, there are a number of others which will combine navigation and power. Notably among the latter class is the Whites Creek project near Kingston, Tenn. I am advised by the office of the Chief of Engineers of the Army that Whites Creek presents one of the two most economical and desirable power possibilities in the entire system.

Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee did me the courtesy and the honor to invite me to appear and testify at the hearings on this measure. I gladly availed myself of the privilege. In my testimony before the committee I heartily endorsed the spirit and principle of the proposed legislation, and at the same time ventured a few suggestions as to amendments of a more or less important nature which I thought might improve the bill. Among the suggestions offered by me, to conform to established precedents, was one to make the board or governing authority bipartisan, and another was to reduce the terms for which the members of said authority were to hold office. I am glad to observe that both of these changes have been made. I was also very much gratified to note that the bill has been so amended as to place the construction of the Cove Creek Dam in the hands of the War Department. I think this is a very decided improvement, and I want to congratulate the committee on its wisdom and foresight in this particular, because I deem it of the utmost importance that this great public development be kept absolutely outside of the realm of politics.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I am about to conclude.

PREFERENCE FOR EX-SERVICE MEN

Some time ago, at the urgent behest of the President, the Congress passed the so-called "Economy Act", the effect of which will be to take $400,000,000 per year from the ex-service men of this country, their widows, and little children. Approximately one half million veterans, their widows, and dependent children will be the victims of this cruel legislation and will suffer untold tribulation as a result thereof. I voted against that bill because I felt that it imposed a too severe hardship on those who so heroically rallied to the colors when our Nation was in peril. I have no apologies for my remarks and my vote on that occasion, because I still feel very strongly that it violated a sacred fundamental and time-honored governmental policy that has in the past distinguished this Nation for generosity to those who were willing to bear its burdens in times of stress and storm. This policy has been our greatest bulwark against the insidious and dangerous doctrine of pacificism and its attendant evils in the past, and therefore one of the greatest guarantees of the perpetuity of this Republic and its sacred institutions.

Mr. Speaker, this measure affords a small opportunity to give at least a modicum of relief to some of our ex-service men who may be physically able to work. At the proper time I expect to offer an amendment giving a preference to honorably discharged American soldiers who are otherwise qualified in the execution of this great construction program; and I sincerely trust that the amendment will be accepted by the committee.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR NORRIS

In concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I consider that I would be recreant in my duty if I did not pay deserved tribute to that venerable old war-horse, Senator GEORGE W. NORRIS, whose patient, constant, and heroic efforts, more than that of anyone else, has made this colossal development possible. He has worked day and night, courageously and unceasingly over a period of many years for this great measure, the fruition of which will be an eternal monument to his memory. The Tennessee Valley, the South, and the entire Nation owe him a debt of everlasting gratitude for his self-sacrifice, his grim fortitude in the face of overwhelming odds, and his incessant and unremitting toil.

I hope to live to see Senator NORRIS and you other distinguished champions of this gigantic enterprise, both in the House and in the Senate, come to Tennessee when this program is completed. I look forward with keen anticipation to fishing and duck hunting with you on the placid surface of that great lake that will result from the construction of the dam at Cove Creek. And after we shall have regaled and satiated our appetites on fish and wild duck, I want to accompany you through the gorgeous pavilions of the Great Smoky Mountain National Park hard by—a park unequaled in sublimity and grandeur in this or any other country.

I solemnly conjure you to take advantage of the first possible opportunity presented, for verily, verily, I say unto you that with this great development east Tennessee will not only be the Ruhr of the United States but it will also be the Eden of America. [Applause.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill because I believe it is leading us in a dangerous direction. I believe that it is taking the money out of the pockets of the taxpayers and putting it into something that is not going to yield a return. I think I am entitled to come before the House on the merits of the measure. When the President of the United States exhibited rare courage and sent down to the House of Representatives a measure designed to save $500,000,000 to the Treasury of the United States and help toward putting America on the black side of the ledger, taking it out of the red, I supported him, and I supported him just as loyally and just as enthusiastically as any member of his own party. I feel that I can come here now before the House of Representatives and say to you that if I could believe that he was at all right, at all sound, I should go along with him; but ever since that economy measure was passed we have had one measure after another sent down here by the President at the behest of the professors designed not only not to inflate the structures of the country but to further deflate them. There was the farm bill, which cannot do anything else than reduce the price to the producer for everything that he produces. There was the forestry bill to spend $92,000,000, or whatever it was, upon a wildcat scheme which would not provide a quarter as much employment as the same money would take care of the distressed, if it were used for that. There was the bond issue bill for $500,000,000 yesterday, part of it to be turned over to the States and used by them not to relieve distress but to put them into further bond issues on construction projects for things they do not need and thereby further draw money out of the banks of the country and take money out of business. Then we have this measure designed in its ultimate effect—and I admit that you have the votes to carry it through—to go into a vast power development, a vast manufacturing development, a vast reclamation development, the cost of which is variously estimated by competent authorities to run to $1,200,000,000.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. The preceding speaker said that there would be 2,900,000 horsepower developed. Our committee has heard as much as 5,000,000 horsepower, but at $125 per horsepower, which is a fair figure and low, it would cost $362,500,000 for that alone, on his estimate and $725,000,000 based on 5,000,000 horsepower, just for the power alone.

Mr. TABER. That would not at all include the reclamation or reforestation or any recovery of marginal lands or anything like that.

Mr. GOSS. No.

Mr. TABER. Now, in times like this, when the prices of Government bonds are falling, when it is going to be hard for us to get credit if we do not keep faith with the Government, we must stop and think what we are doing. There is not a scintilla of evidence anywhere in these hearings of the statement that there is in this territory any demand for power. On the contrary, there is evidence that there is a surplus of power available now, and that power is not being sold at a terrifically high price. It is under control of public-service commissions everywhere, and insofar as it relates to interstate power, it is under the control of the Federal Power Commission in addition.

As far as fertilizer is concerned, the price of fertilizer in the last 5 or 6 years has been cut in two. Fertilizer today is a drug on the market and cannot be moved even at that cut price in a way that would warrant the introduction of a new plant into the picture. Why should we, with that picture, with that situation, think that we should embark the Government on a vast project of that character?

Now, let us look at our situation. Our taxpayers are suffering. Our taxpayers are at the point where many of them are obliged to compromise with their creditors. People are talking about capital levies to raise the money to take care of the Government. It will help a lot to put our factories and our mines and our railroads to work, to put another bond issue on them, which they must pay, to set up somebody else in competition with private industry! Is that not a nice thing for us to think about, especially at a time like this, when industry is suffering, when business is suffering in every way, to tax business and industry a little more to set up something in competition with them?

Let us look at another feature of this Government-in-business proposition. Most of us are not very old, but we are all old enough to carry our minds back to the time of the war. We remember that the Government took over the operation of the railroads at that time, and any of us who ever had occasion to ride on a train during that period or stand by the side of the road and see a train go by will remember that the rolling stock of the railroads and the roadbed and everything in connection with their equipment and their upkeep was allowed to get in a most deplorable and ridiculous condition. That is a sample of the way the Government does business. If the Government builds this dam at Cove Creek, if it builds this power plant to go with it, if it builds a nitrate plant to take the place of the one that the sponsor of the bill told us this afternoon was obsolete, or had never worked just right, what can we expect? I understand that is the plant which produces the large quantity. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. McSWAIN. If the gentleman will pardon me for interrupting——

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] was referring to nitrate plant no. 1, which used the Haber process, which never was a success. Plant no. 2, so far as the demonstration was concerned, was a complete success.

Mr. TABER. But plant no. 1 was the large producer?

Mr. McSWAIN. No, no. It is just the reverse.

Mr. TABER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thank the gentleman for the correction. Now, if we build another nitrate plant, it will cost the Government just twice as much as it would cost private business to construct it. It will cost the Government twice as much to operate it. It will be operated just twice as inefficiently.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has expired.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York 5 additional minutes.

Mr. TABER. The cost of production would be a great deal more than it would be under private operation of the plant; and under the terms of this bill you will not be able to produce fertilizer and sell it to the farmer at anywhere near the price he can buy it from private firms who operate private businesses.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. If the Government takes over this plant, will not the consumers pay lower rates for power?

Mr. TABER. No. They will pay higher rates, because they are only allowed to sell this power, according to my interpretation of the bill, on the basis of cost plus interest and depreciation. I do not believe the Government operation of this plant and its construction of the new plant that is to be built can be done on a basis so that it will produce power to compete with privately produced power.

Mr. DUNN. Is it not a fact that in Canada the consumers are paying much lower rates than are the consumers just across the river in the United States?

Mr. TABER. I do not understand that is the situation. Perhaps it is, but I do not understand it that way. I understand they are not taking the proper factors into consideration in figuring their costs, and that they are selling power for really less than cost and that the burden is put upon the taxpayers. There is where it will be put in this case. We are spending a lot of money involving the Government in getting ourselves into a mess. Why cannot we take this plant and be big enough to pass a bill that will lease the plants that are already there and that will produce power for a decent figure?

If we can do it on an intelligent and fair basis, we can get more out of it by a good deal than we can by entering into any other scheme.

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. HART. Did the gentleman support the Farm-Marketing Act that put $500,000,000 into competition with the grain and cotton dealers?

Mr. TABER. I am talking about this bill now. I did support it, but that bill turned out bad; and this bill is going to turn out bad. I honestly believe the gentleman himself feels it is going to turn out bad.

If we are going to be honest legislators on the things that are before us, we have got to pass on them on their merits, and when they have no merits we ought to turn them down. If we are to have economic recovery in this country, we have got to stop the wildcat projects that have been going on for years and years.

Mr. HART. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. HART. The Farm Marketing Act was a bad measure of the Hoover administration. I think the gentleman's suggestion that this is a bad measure is not justified.

Mr. TABER. That was a measure put out because it was feared something worse would be passed if that was not. The framers of this measure have gone to the *n*th degree in trying to find something that would be just as bad as it possibly could be.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. MITCHELL. I know the gentleman is sincere in his argument. I was wondering what disposition he would make of the present investment on the part of the Government representing approximately $150,000,000.

Mr. TABER. We have an investment of $150,000,000 which nobody values at over $40,000,000 or $45,000,000, as I understand it. I would lease it to some power company that would go ahead and operate it on a long-term lease under proper governmental supervision and control as to rates; and I believe this could be done if it were put up in that way and not involve the Government in any useless performances.

Mr. MITCHELL. The gentleman is familiar with the fact that we have been making efforts for some 15 years to lease or otherwise operate the property?

Mr. TABER. So many strings have been tied around the leases every time a bill has been proposed or passed that it has been absolutely impossible to get anybody to enter into the lease.

As a result of a bill passed a few years ago, President Hoover leased the plant so that it is returning approximately $550,000 to $650,000 a year. The cost of operation is $250,000. To my mind even that is better than embarking on a wildcat project such as this.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. And that is about 20 percent of what it ought to be, is it not?

Mr. TABER. Just about. I believe we could get five times that if we went at it in an intelligent way and passed a bill that would authorize its leasing on an intelligent basis.

Mr. MITCHELL. My colleague realizes, does he not, that the very measure he has referred to was twice vetoed by Republican Presidents?

Mr. TABER. Not that kind of a measure, but a measure which had so many strings tied to it that no one could possibly operate the plant with profit; and you cannot get anybody to operate anything efficiently and intelligently unless you allow them to make a profit out of it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING].

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, Members who are complaining about this bill putting the Government into competition with private enterprise seem not to distinguish between what belongs to private enterprise and what belongs to the public. To them it possibly would be all right for these great national resources that belong to the people to be turned over to private enterprise to be added into their charges when they assess the benefits received from the public consumption of power from their investment.

That which belongs to the public is different from that which belongs to private enterprise. The little fellow who tills his farm on the hillside nearby the Tennessee Valley is just as much entitled to the use of this public resource for a reasonable charge as the man who runs a great manufacturing establishment. The individual who is a shareholder in this national resource should at least share in the benefits of the great public reservoir of strength we have in this section of the country.

Let me mention just one project in connection with this stupendous development. Of course, dreamers and people who see visions have always been spoken of lightly at the time they dreamed their dreams or saw their visions. It may be all right to sneer at the President because he has had a great vision and a great dream with regard to this development, but my prediction is that those who are doing the sneering now will live to see the error of their judgment. With reckless prodigality we wasted the virgin forests and soil of this continent. It is time to build them back. This is a step in a farsighted policy to do that wise thing.

The engineers estimate that the development of the Cove Creek Dam will cost approximately $34,000,000. Many believe it could be built for $20,000,000. Even if it costs $34,000,000, the saving which would come from the prevention of flood damage each year would within a period of 20 years amortize the entire cost of the dam. In other words, private enterprise is losing its property on an average of $1,780,000 a year due to flood damage, which could be saved by the construction of the Cove Creek Dam. This is not an interference with private business. It is a saving to private business.

The construction of this one project, which is the key to the whole development of power in the valley, would, in my opinion, practically double the primary horsepower of every dam below Cove Creek. The pondage rights of this investment would bring more than 10 percent interest annually to the Government in perpetuity. This great project, which would convert 60,000 acres of land into a tremendous lake, as outlined by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] in his address a while ago, would create a storage reservoir which, as I say, would double the primary horsepower of every dam below it.

The Members who have discussed this matter have overlooked the provision in the bill which provides that the Government may build other dams where power demand justifies their building and lease the power at the switchboard to private enterprise over a period of 50 years. This bill would require the complete amortization of the construction cost and likewise interest chargeable to power development to be paid for the rental by the lessee.

No man on this floor, surely, could object to this if he believes in operation by private enterprise, and in the self-liquidating projects that have been proposed by the administration, because this would be an ideal opportunity for these great projects not specifically mentioned in the bill to become realities. Two of them, we hope, are to be built below Muscle Shoals at either Pickwick or Hamburg, and Aurora, constructed by Government money when there is a guaranty of a return of not only the interest on the investment but complete amortization at the end of 50 years, and then the Government will own the great dams that have been constructed without any charge against them. A bid to meet these conditions has already been made for one of these sites, and will almost assure speedy and much-needed development.

In other words, this great national resource belongs to the people, and I am sympathetic with any enterprise, whether it is the manufacture of fertilizer or the production of power, that is about to be disturbed by progress; but I do not think progress should be disturbed just because they are about to get in the way. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GLOVER].

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, the bill now before us, H.R. 5081, is possibly the most far-reaching in its effects of any legislation that has ever had consideration in this Congress. It is a bill for the development of the Muscle Shoals for future use by the people of the United States.

When this property was originally purchased by the United States Government, during the Wilson administration, it was declared in the act that it should be kept and maintained and used for the purpose of national defense in time of war and that in times of peace it should be used to aid agriculture. It was developed during the last war for national defense, and it should ever be preserved by the United States Government so if it is ever needed for the purpose of defense again, the United States will not find itself as it did before without any plant of this nature. It means much more than would the building of large battleships or the maintaining of a great navy in times of peace.

The Congress, since I have been a Member of it, has twice passed a bill of this nature for the development of Muscle Shoals so it could be used to help in agricultural interests in the United States. In the year 1928 and in 1930 bills were passed by Congress and sent to the President for his approval. Both the bills were very similar to the bill now reported favorably by the committee to this Congress. A large part of the bill now before the House is the identical language of the other bills. The bill passed in 1928 met a pocket veto by President Coolidge and the bill passed in 1930 was vetoed by President Hoover.

The increasing public interest in Muscle Shoals has demonstrated how intimately it touches so many sides of life. Muscle Shoals is a great factor and a part of the great problems of conservation of natural resources and of promoting navigation and flood relief. It was stated by the President that Muscle Shoals is only an integral part of what this great development is to be when completed. On the success or failure of this bill will largely depend the future development of great enterprises of this kind.

President Roosevelt, in his message on April 10, 1933, said:

> It is clear that the Muscle Shoals development is but a small part of the potential public usefulness of the entire Tennessee River. Such use, if envisioned in its entirety, transcends mere power development; it enters the wide fields of flood control, soil erosion, afforestation, elimination from agricultural use of marginal lands, and distribution and diversification of industry. In short, this power development of war days leads logically to national planning for a complete river watershed involving many States and the future lives and welfare of millions. It touches and gives life to all forms of human concerns.

The field of industry will be greatly enlarged and helped by the development of this great power plant. The bill provides for the transmission of this current for a distance not to exceed 400 miles and provides for the selling and distributing of this power, so that other transmission lines may be established by private individuals or corporations and carried to the various parts of the United States.

Nothing is needed more than cheap power for development. Electricity once did not enter into agriculture in any manner, but now in many of our agricultural sections electricity is used in great quantities. In my own State, the great State of Arkansas, the pumps that pump water for rice fields are run by electricity. Electric energy now enters into almost every development of our business; and the cheaper it can be produced, the more our industries will thrive. It is now a common necessity and used in most of the homes of America where it is accessible, and it would be in many more places had we the proper transmission of power.

The principal value of this development will be enjoyed by those engaged in agriculture. In the past our farmers have had to pay an exceedingly high price for the fertilizer used by them in truck growing or farming of any character, and on account of its high cost they have been made to suffer and pay tribute to the great interests that have been developing it. We feel that after this plant is developed, the farmer should receive his fertilizer at least 40 percent cheaper than he is now getting it.

Each time that this legislation has been before Congress, it has been bitterly fought by the manufacturers of fertilizer, for the reason that they know when this plant is developed they cannot continue to get the price they are now getting for nitrogen, phosphate, and other plant foods that enter into fertilizer. Lobbyists are here now and will camp in Washington until the final roll call in both Houses on this bill.

The farmer at home is not here, but we are here as his representatives to speak for him, and to hear his voice rather than to hear that of the lobbyist for these great concerns. I have voted for this bill every time it has been before Congress, and I shall vote for it again in the hope, and knowing, that when it passes this time that it will meet a friendly President who has the courage of his conviction to do that which is right for the people in this respect, regardless of the objection that has heretofore been made and made successfully.

It is contemplated that if this is successful, which we firmly believe it will be, that this is only the beginning of the development of the great water power that has gone to waste that should have been all the time serving man. With the passage of this bill giving to the farmer cheaper fertilizer, the passage of the farm relief bill that has passed this House and is now pending in the Senate, and the bill that passed this House providing for the relief of mortgage debt on farms and the passage of other legislation contemplated at this Congress, we feel that a new day for agriculture is near at hand.

When the President decided that we should be no longer crucified on the cross of gold and at the altar of shame, he made the greatest stride forward for agriculture that was ever made by any human being living or that has lived in the past.

There are only two things the matter with the United States, or that has been the governing cause and predominating factors in bringing about this panic that we have been living in for several months. One is the gold standard, and the other a high protective tariff. Added to that, the character of extravagance that has been carried on during the past 4 years by the administration that has just gone out of power is enough to wreck a nation.

We passed through the House yesterday a bill for the relief of the unemployed which will help take off the roll of unemployed a part of the 15,000,000 in the United States that are now out of work.

When the President of the United States, before his election, declared that what America needed was a "new deal" and that the forgotten man should be cared for, no one conceived at that time that he could accomplish in the short time the great things he has in carrying out that promise. The light of a new day is soon to dawn upon us. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I favor the passage of the bill mainly because it will reduce the price of fertilizer some 50 percent. The farmers in my section of the country are large users of fertilizer, but are now operating upon such a small margin that they cannot pay existing prices for it. The fact is, the farmers of the Nation have had to reduce their fertilizer purchases from some 8,200,000 tons in 1930 to about 4,300,000 tons in 1932.

If you will multiply even the 4,300,000 tons by $30 per ton you will get the enormous amount of $129,000,000. At this same rate the American farmers would have spent about one quarter of a billion dollars for fertilizer in 1930. If the bill saves our growers 50 percent, and we believe it will, then the American farmers would be saved some $55,000,000 annually and some $125,000,000 annually when business revives. I claim this bill to be the best farm-relief legislation presented to the Congress at this session.

The Muscle Shoals problem has been before the Congress for about 15 years. Nine years ago, when I was elected to Congress, I pledged in my platform to do all possible to the end that this great plant be utilized for the production of fertilizer during peace time. Twice have I voted for this end, and twice have Republican Presidents vetoed such legislative proposals. Mr. Speaker, the time has arrived. The right man is now in the White House. His heart throbs for the common interest of the rank and file of the American people. He feels for the down-trodden and the oppressed. He wants to relieve the American farmers of existing distress. He has recommended the passage of this legislation, and soon our hopes will be realized through his signature to this legislation. President Roosevelt has the courage and vision to embrace this opportunity for the American people and utilize this huge but now idle enterprise for the common good.

The farms of the Southeast—nearly all of them—are on leached soil, which requires liberal application of fertilizer. The State of Florida is one of the largest acreage consumers of commercial fertilizer because of the character of its products. Citrus fruits, vegetables, and similar crops require large applications. Much of Florida's soil is thin soil; there is hardly a county in the State of Florida which would not benefit greatly by the passage of this bill. It will mean a saving in the fertilizer bill to my own county of some thirty to seventy thousand dollars annually. It will save Florida growers probably more than $2,000,000 annually in their fertilizer bill. Our growers are no longer able to pay the high prices they have been forced to pay for commercial fertilizer. Passage of this legislation is imperative and is the greatest farm-relief measure that the Congress could pass. For more than 8 years I have labored for the passage of this bill and believe now, under the leadership of President Roosevelt, this worthy legislation will be promptly realized. It is folly to permit the vast investment of taxpayers' money at Muscle Shoals to remain idle, especially when our farmers imperatively need all benefits that it can afford.

About $150,000,000 of the taxpayers' money has been expended at Muscle Shoals. Until now it has brought very little in return to the American people, but with the enactment of this legislation it will return incalculable benefits to our citizens. I shall vote for the bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER].

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the splendid statement made by my colleague the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL]. He mentioned the fact that in 1824 that prince of statesmen, that superb parliamentary gladiator, that matchless master of logic, John C. Calhoun, advocated the improvement of Muscle Shoals. His reference to Calhoun's proposal reminded me of another incident in connection with Muscle Shoals. Years ago in making a study of the policy of our Government in reference to our public lands, and in connection therewith, our policies with reference to rivers, harbors, and internal improvements, I discovered that the first grant of public land made by the United States Government for the improvement of our inland waterways was on May 20, 1828, when Congress granted to the State of Alabama 400,000 acres of land, the proceeds of the sale of which were to be used for the improvement of Muscle Shoals and Colbert Shoals, and other portions of the Tennessee River in the State of Alabama, the purpose being to construct a canal around the shoals in the interest of navigation.

More than a century ago Congress considered Muscle Shoals a valuable asset, and even then dreamers foresaw its great value and were reaching out for some feasible method by which the Government might utilize this national resource, the present and potential value of which it would be difficult to overappraise.

Muscle Shoals is the gift of a benign Providence to the American people. The Almighty, when he spoke this world into existence, and while it was plastic and still quivering from irresistible and indescribable internal convulsions, with His swift-moving finger furrowed out and molded the Tennessee Valley and froze its rugged terrain so man might easily impound and harness the turbulent flood waters rushing from mountain to sea, and appropriate their power for the happiness and comfort of the present and all future generations.

The limited time allowed for debate will not permit me to analyze or discuss this bill. I shall support this measure, although I am not in full accord with some of its provisions.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, the President, in a special message to Congress, asked for dictatorial powers to reduce Federal expenditures to save the Nation from impending disaster. The message made a profound impression because of the gravity of the situation.

People throughout the country were stunned by the disclosure that our Nation was faced with insolvency because of the failure to balance the Budget.

The appeal of the President was so masterful and the exigency pictured by him so graphic and so great that the dictatorial power requested was promptly granted.

The burden of this reduction in Federal expenditures has fallen heavily upon the veterans. A majority of the veterans affected by the reduction come from the ranks of toil, thousands of whom are now unemployed and have been unemployed for a long period of time. Nothing short of the threatened collapse of our Government could have impelled our President to ask so great a sacrifice from the veterans of the Civil, the Spanish, and the World Wars.

It is fair to say, I believe, that nothing short of the appeal of the President to grant him this power to save the country would have caused the Members of the House of Representatives to vote to empower the Executive to make drastic reductions in the pensions of the veterans.

Retrenchment has been asked and demanded in the name of patriotism. Now, in the face of a deficit of $5,000,000,000 and the dire distress of the country, the astounding proposal is made to spend $50,000,000 now to develop Muscle Shoals. This is only the initial expenditure.

A request for dictatorial Executive power to save money is not consistent with a scheme like this to squander the public funds to dam rivers, reclaim swamps, and plant trees, even under the guise of relief.

When the measure was before the Congress, asking for unlimited power for the Executive to reduce expenditures and balance the Budget, the pleas made were so graphic and presented with such fervor that one could almost visualize as well as hear the walls of the Government crashing about our heads. Now, after authorizing the President to take from the veterans and their dependents $300,000,000 to preserve the Government from bankruptcy and ruin, it is proposed to raise political hypocrisy to the *n*th degree by squandering $50,000,000 now on the Tennessee River on a project ultimately to cost $1,000,000,000.

It was stated here today by the gentleman from Tennessee that similar raids are to be made on the Treasury to develop river bottoms in other sections of the country.

This is not retrenchment. It is wild, unrestrained, and inexcusable extravagance, and I am opposed to this bill at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LLOYD].

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, it is fitting, I believe, that as a member of this committee and coming as I do from the great State of Washington, within whose confines is contained more than one fifth of the potential power of the United States, I should say a word upon this bill. I shall not, in the few minutes that are allotted to me, undertake to discuss the bill in logical or connected sequence, but simply make a few observations which, to my mind, may be pertinent and persuasive.

All of the arguments that you have heard from the opposition have been repeated from time to time as civilization has progressed throughout the history of man. I assume that when the first old pirate stood upon his promontory over the only harbor where ships could land, and when it was proposed by the people of his country to make that harbor free to the shipping of the world, he believed sincerely that such an act was an infringement upon his rights of property; and I assume, too, that a hundred years ago the man who owned a toll road looked with grave misgiving upon a policy that should end in free highways for all who chose to travel.

As a matter of fact, my own manner of thought has always been on the side of the advocates of individual property rights. My people were pioneers who, before me, were taught in the stern school of individuality; so I had long been a believer in the rights of the individual to own and control property of every kind, character, and description. Time and experience and observation have caused me to depart somewhat from the habit of thought that all things are subject to rights of individual ownership and control, and I have come to classify power with our rivers and harbors and highways and public domains as one of the great gifts from a bountiful Providence which it was intended should be free to all the people for all time.

During the hearings before the committee I was constrained to give grave thought and view with some apprehension the claims of the representatives of the power companies that within this district to be affected there were investments in preferred securities of upward of $400,000,000, the value of which would be seriously impaired by Government competition in the development of the Muscle Shoals plant. A threat, at least, to distribute the power produced, to destroy in part or in whole investments that have been made in good faith, is not to be lightly considered; but I have come to believe that in a large part these investments do not represent sound values.

I am reminded of the testimony taken before our committee of a little power project on the White Salmon River in my own State, where $2,000,000 was spent in the complete building, financing, and promoting of that project, and then, when the plant was completely developed, the promoters bonded the water right upon which they had originally filed at a cost of approximately $40 for an additional $10,000,000 and sold the bonds thus secured to an unsuspecting public, making an investment of $12,000,000 upon a plant that had cost but two million, and requiring, of course, the users of that power to pay a rate sufficient to pay interest and dividends upon six times the actual cost of the plant.

Manifestly, investments thus secured are not sound investments, and we cannot expect to require the users of power to continue to pay, through all time, upon financed and refinanced investments of this character, a charge that never was commensurate with the real investment made. I have been persuaded by the testimony taken before the committee that this scheme of financing that I have just described to you is a fair representation of the financing that has been resorted to by practically all the power projects developed under private control. There is something so intangible about the development of power that it lends itself to unsound methods. To the investor it appears as an ever-running stream which will continue through all time to furnish fair dividends and profits, but the promoter who resorts to holding companies pyramided one upon another to hide the true state of his investment seems always to forget the ever-running silver river and sees only the golden stream.

We are told that in the present state of our Nation's finances we cannot afford to expend the money necessary to this great development, and that there is no market demand for more power than is now being produced, and yet the hearings before the committee have convinced me that, low as they say the power rates are, they are at least five times too high, and it is idle to say that because the demand is not there at the present price there would not be ample demand for twice the power now developed if the price were brought down to a cost commensurate with the real investment and the users were not required to pay an ever-mounting interest charge upon the representations of a value that never existed.

On the other hand, I am not afraid to spend any reasonable amount of money to stimulate the purchasing power of the American people. I know of no way that we can start our factories and mines and mills and farms to again go forth upon the road to prosperity, except by an expenditure of money that will permit our people to have work and a new and greater purchasing power than they ever had before. The history of this Nation tells us that we never have come out of the depression by curbing the expenditure of money. We never would have come out of the depression following the Civil War but for the fact that this Government, by money and by subsidies, lent itself to the materialization of the most chimerical dream the world has ever known and builded out across 3,000 miles of wilderness a railroad that commenced at the borderland of civilization and ended in the haze of sunset. No practical man in the world could have justified that venture upon accepted business principles, and yet it was the stimulus that brought new life to a nation upon the verge of collapse.

If by the building of Muscle Shoals we can stimulate the lifeblood of this Nation and build a new industrial empire in the Southland and bring to all of our people a new vision and a new hope, whatever we spend in the way of effort and money, which is the representative of effort, will have been well spent indeed.

Our friends who decry the embarkation of Government into this field of private industry and say that this is but the entering wedge are perhaps right, but the wedge has already entered. Under the late Republican administrations the great Boulder Dam project of the Colorado River came into life and being, and it is my hope that when the finances of this Nation may be in better repair we may go one step further so that the four corners of the country may find representation in the great field of power to turn the wheels of industry as time rolls on, and when that day comes not only will Niagara in the Northeast and Muscle Shoals in the Southeast and Boulder Dam in the Southwest be living examples of what cheap power can do for the people but the great Columbia River in my own State will be pouring its billions of gallons of water over the greatest project of all time to build and create the greatest empire within this Nation.

Oh, they say that our great President who has envisioned this project is a dreamer and has only dreamed a dream. As I grow older I wonder sometimes if the practical men and the great engineers are not the intangible and uncertain things of life, and dreams, the tangible things. Dreamers have ever been derided and decried, and yet the great dreams of the world have continued to come true.

I am reminded of the great dreamer who more than 400 years ago sailed across a storm-tossed sea, and Columbus discovered a new country. Washington dreamed a dream at Valley Forge, and, from that dream envisioned there burst forth the Stars and Stripes and the hopes and aspirations of a free people. Lincoln dreamed a dream, and, when the roar of cannon stilled, that dream came true and in its realization struck the shackles from 4,000,000 slaves. Only a little way from here and a few short years ago, two dreaming mechanics dreamed a dream, and men learned to fly. Edison dreamed a dream, and a world of darkness burst forth into light. Marconi dreamed a dream, and music filled the air; and if this dream that is here decried today may yet come true to lift the burdens from the weary backs of those who toil and bring some light and happiness and gladness into a sore, distressed, and weary world, that dreamer's name will be enshrined forever in the hearts of all mankind.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PEYSER].

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, as a new member of the Committee on Military Affairs I have listened attentively to the remarks, both during the hearings and the executive sessions, on the Muscle Shoals and Tennessee River proposition.

I come from a district far removed from the project which is involved in this legislation, but I cannot conscientiously get from under the proposition which has been looked into and advocated so strongly by the President of the United States.

It is my intention to support the President, as I supported him in the past, believing that this is only part of the general program he has mapped out. If this is one of the eight or more structures that he proposes to use to build up our Government again I am not going to weaken any part of that entire proposition. I am going to follow him right through, because I believe that the success which will follow the adoption of this measure will develop along the same lines in other parts of the country, which will be for the benefit of most of the people and for the most good.

I have listened to the arguments advanced by the opponents on the other side of the room, and I know that this is not a party program, as is evidenced by the fact that a similar measure has been supported by several Members on the Republican side of the House who are present in this Congress. I refer to the minority leader, Representative SNELL, and Representative WADSWORTH during the time he was a United States Senator.

I will not enter into the discussion of the technical side of the Muscle Shoals development for the reason that other members of the committee which has this bill in charge have been delving into its history for many years past. My only idea is to cover, in these few remarks to you, the belief that as a general proposition and as an experiment that it is worth the trial, in the effort to salvage the investment that the Government at present has in this development.

As stated previously, it is my intention to vote for this measure, and I have given you my reasons for so doing. I sincerely trust that as many of my colleagues as can see their way clear to support it will do so.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask how the time stands for our benefit on Monday, for I think we have gone this afternoon as far as we can?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MARTIN of Oregon). The gentleman from South Carolina has 2 hours and 2 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Michigan has 2 hours and 9 minutes remaining.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 27 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until Monday, April 24, 1933, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. O'MALLEY: A bill (H.R. 5171) authorizing the Postmaster General of the United States to issue a series of special postage stamps in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the white man's discovery of Wisconsin; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. BUSBY: A bill (H.R. 5172) to declare a monetary policy and regulate the value of money in accordance with paragraph 5, section 8, article I, of the Constitution of the United States, to provide for the maintenance and stabilization of the gold standard, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. DREWRY: A bill (H.R. 5173) granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Virginia to maintain a bridge already constructed to replace a weak structure in the same location across the Staunton and Dan Rivers, in Mecklenburg County, Va., on United States Route No. 15; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H.R. 5174) to set aside certain lands for the Leech Lake Band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. LLOYD: A bill (H.R. 5175) to provide a preliminary examination of the Green River, Wash., with a view to the control of its floods; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. McSWAIN: A bill (H.R. 5176) to authorize the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to withhold the pay of officers, warrant officers, and nurses of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps to cover indebtedness to the United States under certain conditions; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PARKER of Georgia: A bill (H.R. 5177) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act authorizing the South Carolina and the Georgia Highway Departments to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Savannah River at or near Burtons Ferry, near Sylvania, Ga.", approved May 26, 1928; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BURKE of California: A bill (H.R. 5178) for the relief of Verald M. Drake and his dependents; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CALDWELL: A bill (H.R. 5179) granting an increase of pension to Alda E. Ramm; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COLLINS of California: A bill (H.R. 5180) granting a pension to Deborah Hacklander; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DOWELL: A bill (H.R. 5181) granting a pension to Emily Knauer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DREWRY: A bill (H.R. 5182) for the relief of George R. Slate; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HILDEBRANDT: A bill (H.R. 5183) for the relief of C. B. Dickinson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOLLISTER: A bill (H.R. 5184) for the relief of Sevellon Smith; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia: A bill (H.R. 5185) granting an increase of pension to Malinda J. Jacobs; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5186) granting a pension to Cora C. O'Neill; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5187) granting a pension to Margaret J. McClure; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5188) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Pritchard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5189) granting a pension to Flora Coulter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5190) granting back pay to Auguste C. Loiseau; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5191) granting an increase of pension to Nannie Queen; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5192) granting a pension to Samuel Edwards; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5193) granting an increase of pension to Sarah L. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5194) granting an increase of pension to Hannah Gibbs; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5195) granting a pension to Unoca Ferguson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H.R. 5196) for the relief of certain riparian owners for losses sustained by them on the drained Mud Lake bottom in Marshall County, in the State of Minnesota; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5197) granting a pension to Louis Qual; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LLOYD: A bill (H.R. 5198) for the relief of William Fenwick Howey; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MERRITT: A bill (H.R. 5199) granting a pension to Veronica Zolyomy; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REECE: A bill (H.R. 5200) for the relief of Wallace Hensley Welch; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. REID of Illinois: A bill (H.R. 5201) for the relief of Luke Francis Brennan; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WILCOX: A bill (H.R. 5202) for the relief of Frank Anderson; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

640. By Mr. BACON: Petition of 3,258 citizens, nearly all residing in New York, protesting against any change in immigration laws to permit admission of aliens, outside of quota, belonging to political refugee classes; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

641. By Mr. CARTER of California: Assembly Joint Resolution No. 9, State of California, memorializing Congress to adopt legislation with reference to manufacture of arms, munitions, and implements of war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

642. By Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota: Resolution from the commander on behalf of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, stating opposition to naval appropriations with provisos; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

643. Also, resolution protesting the removal of the Hydrographic Office, Navy Department, from Duluth, Minn., by the Chamber of Commerce of Duluth; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

644. Also, resolution from the Railway Mail Post, No. 23, American Legion, at St. Paul, Minn., asking that postmasters in first-, second-, and third-class offices be placed under civil service; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

645. By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Resolution unanimously adopted by the Legislature of the State of Texas, urging removal of the Federal tax on gasoline; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

646. By Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota: Petition protesting against House bill 3769, now in committee; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

647. By Mr. KENNEY: Petition of unemployed associations of Bergen County, N.J.; to the Committee on Labor.

648. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of Creed A. Neeper, New York City, urging support and passage of the home mortgage bill, S. 1317; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

649. Also, petition of National Fertilizer Association, Inc., Washington, D.C., concerning House bill 5081; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

650. Also, petition of National Association of Postal Supervisors, Branch 100, New York City, opposing retirement of Federal employees after 30 years' service; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

651. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of Creed A. Neeper, New York City, favoring the passage of Senate bill 1317, the home mortgage bill; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

652. By Mr. WELCH: Petition of California State Legislature, Assembly Joint Resolution No. 24, relative to memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact a moratorium on foreclosures of real property mortgages and on sales under deeds of trust on real property; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

653. Also, petition of California State Legislature, Assembly Joint Resolution No. 9, relative to memorializing Congress to adopt legislation with reference to manufacture of arms, munitions, and implements of war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE

MONDAY, APRIL 24, 1933

(Legislative day of Monday, Apr. 17, 1933)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. KENDRICK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Bone	Capper	Dickinson
Ashurst	Borah	Caraway	Dieterich
Austin	Bratton	Connally	Dill
Bachman	Brown	Coolidge	Duffy
Bailey	Bulkley	Copeland	Erickson
Bankhead	Bulow	Costigan	Fletcher
Barbour	Byrd	Couzens	Frazier
Black	Byrnes	Cutting	George
Glass	Logan	Patterson	Thomas, Okla.
Goldsborough	Lonergan	Pittman	Thomas, Utah
Gore	Long	Pope	Townsend
Hale	McAdoo	Reed	Trammell
Harrison	McCarran	Reynolds	Tydings
Hastings	McGill	Robinson, Ind.	Vandenberg
Hatfield	McKellar	Russell	Van Nuys
Hayden	McNary	Schall	Wagner
Johnson	Murphy	Sheppard	Walcott
Kean	Norbeck	Shipstead	Wheeler
Kendrick	Norris	Smith	White
Keyes	Nye	Steiwer
King	Overton	Stephens

Mr. KENDRICK. I wish to announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. COOLIDGE. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is absent on official business as a member of the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CUTTING. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] will be absent from the Senate today on account of illness in his family. I desire this announcement to stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

FUNCTIONS OF THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT (S.DOC. NO. 42)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 351, Seventy-second Congress, a report of the functions of the Treasury Department, including accounting, disbursing, collecting, purchasing, and personnel administration, together with the authority for the performance of the several functions, and, insofar as practicable, the annual costs thereof, which, with the accompanying statements, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

FUNCTIONS OF THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION (S.DOC. NO. 41)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, submitting, in response to Senate Resolution 351, Seventy-second Congress, a report of the various functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, including accounting, disbursing, collecting, purchasing, and personnel, together with the authority for the performance of each function and the annual cost thereof, which, with the accompanying statements, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed with illustrations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Senate Joint Memorial 6 (by Senators Herrin, Knous, Sanders, Peiffer, Ehrhart, Smith, Hill, Rumbaugh, Houston, Nelson, Manly, Unfug)

A memorial memorializing the Congress of the United States to include adequate appropriations for the continued efficient maintenance of supervision of oil, gas, coal, and nonmetallic minerals operations by the Mineral Leasing Division of the United States Geological Survey

Whereas the Congress of the United States on February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437), on June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 812), and March 4, 1923 (42 Stat. 1448), and under special agreement by the United States passed certain laws regulating production of oil, gas, coal, and nonmetallic minerals on the public domain; and

Whereas one of the provisions of the act of February 25, 1920, provides that 10 percent of all moneys collected as royalties, bonuses, and rentals shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and credited as miscellaneous receipts, and that 37½ percent shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of the fiscal year to the State within the boundaries of which the leased lands or deposits are or were located, and that 52½ percent shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of a reclamation fund created by act of Congress approved June 17, 1902; and

Whereas the State of Colorado and other Western States own a large number of tracts of land within and adjacent to the lands of the United States, and which said lands are in grave danger of being damaged by reason of the improper drilling, mining, and producing operations, and lack of efficient supervision in the event the said Mineral Leasing Division of the United States Geological Survey is rendered less efficient by reason of the appropriation of insufficient funds by the Congress of the United States for continuing efficient and proper field supervision of said operations, and thereby both the National and State Governments will suffer by reason of lack of careful drilling and mining operations and production by irresponsible and careless operators; and

Whereas the said Mineral Leasing Division is one of the few agencies of our Government which is self-supporting and which uses only approximately 5 percent of the money collected by the Government in its supervisory operations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Twenty-ninth General Assembly of the State of Colorado, That the general assembly hereby urge and request that the Congress of the United States of America make the appropriations for the Mineral Leasing Division of the Geological Survey sufficient to enable the said division to function efficiently for the protection of the oil, gas, coal, and nonmetallic mineral resources of the Western States of the United States, which States are vitally interested both directly and indirectly in the conservation of our oil, gas, coal, and nonmetallic mineral resources; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States, the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, the Vice President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget of the United States, to the United States Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado, and to the Governors of the several Western States.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, memorializing Congress to enact legislation providing that all patent rights for arms, munitions, and other equipment to be used for war purposes should be acquired by the Government and that the subject be presented at future international disarmament conferences, which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. JOHNSON on the 22d instant, p. 2136, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, memorializing Congress to enact legislation providing a moratorium on foreclosures of real-property mortgages and on sales under deeds of trust on real property, which was ordered to lie on the table.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. JOHNSON on the 22d instant, p. 2136, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

He also laid before the Senate the petition of Local Union, No. 293, Sheet Metal Workers International Association, of Pasadena, Calif., praying for the greatest possible consideration of the question of discontinuing vocational education in the public schools before any action is taken thereon, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Twenty-eighth Ward Taxpayers' Protective Association, of Brooklyn, N.Y., favoring the restoration of the former rate of 2 cents per ounce on first-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Harry Boland Council, American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic, of New Rochelle, N.Y., favoring insistence by the Government on full, regular, and prompt payment of European indebtedness to the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate two petitions and a letter in the nature of a petition signed by 133 citizens of the State of Louisiana, praying for a senatorial investigation of alleged acts and conduct of Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate 7 memorials, 5 telegrams, and 12 letters in the nature of memorials from 470 citizens and organizations in the State of Louisiana, and letters from one citizen each of Minnesota, Pennsylvania, and Texas, endorsing Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, condemning attacks made upon him, and remonstrating against a senatorial investigation of his alleged acts and conduct, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco, Calif., favoring the setting aside of April 30 as Presidential Day as an expression of confidence in, and approval of the actions of, the President of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of Supervisors of the County of Los Angeles, Calif., approving in substance the provisions and purpose of the so-called "Black bill", providing for the establishment of a 5-day, 30-hour work week, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a memorial from Anna Jarvis, of Mother's Day, Inc., of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the adoption of the resolution (S.Res. 16, submitted by Mr. COPELAND on March 10, 1933), favoring an expression on Mother's Day of our love and reverence for motherhood, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the board of directors of the Knoxville (Tenn.) Chamber of Commerce, deploring the attitude of the United States Chamber of Commerce in its expressions with respect to the Muscle Shoals project and the construction of the Cove Creek Dam, up to and including the year 1931, and the recent statements of Mr. Harriman, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, in opposition to the development of natural resources, etc., and commending President Roosevelt for his intensive interest in the development of the Tennessee Valley, which were ordered to lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF THE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nomination of James B. Young, of Pennsylvania, now a Foreign Service officer of class 3 and a consul, to be a consul general of the United States of America, which was ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

NOMINATIONS OF BRECKENRIDGE LONG AND SUMNER WELLES

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Oregon to the matter I am about to bring before the Senate. I want to ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, to present two reports from the Committee on Foreign Relations, the first recommending that the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Breckenridge Long, of Missouri, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Italy, and the second recommending the confirmation of the nomination of Sumner Welles, of Maryland, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Cuba.

I will state that there is a desire that these nominations should be immediately confirmed, and I ask that they may be confirmed at this time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Committee on Foreign Relations has given due consideration to these nominations?

Mr. PITTMAN. It has, the report is unanimous, and no protests whatsoever have been filed.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, the nominations are confirmed.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that the President be notified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the President will be notified of the confirmation of the nominations.

PRINTING OF MANUSCRIPT "CONTRACTS PAYABLE IN GOLD"

Mr. HAYDEN. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably Senate Resolution 62, submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], authorizing the printing as a Senate document of the manuscript entitled "Contracts Payable in Gold", and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S.Res. 62) submitted by Mr. SHIPSTEAD on the 21st instant was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the manuscript entitled "Contracts Payable in Gold", by George Cyrus Thorpe, showing the legal effect of agreements to pay in gold, be printed as a Senate document.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred, as follows:

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 1513) to amend Public Act No. 435 of the Seventy-second Congress, relating to sales of timber on Indian land; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 1514) authorizing the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to convey certain lands to Harrison County, Miss.; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 1515) granting permits for the importation or manufacture for nonbeverage purposes of spirituous liquors of particular kind or quality where the supply in the United States is insufficient to meet the current need therefor; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 1516) for the relief of Michael Bello; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1517) for the relief of Louis Kusnitz; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRATTON:

A bill (S. 1518) providing for waiver of prosecution by indictment in certain criminal proceedings; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BULKLEY:

A bill (S. 1519) for the relief of Theodore Torok; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT OF EMERGENCY RELIEF AND CONSTRUCTION ACT

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 509) to amend the emergency relief and construction act of 1932, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

CONTROLLED INFLATION

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject of the so-called "Thomas amendment" and controlled inflation, delivered by the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] over the radio on April 22, 1933.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience of the United States, the most important subject now before the Congress of the United States—and I may go farther and say the most important question that has faced our country since the World War—is the question of currency inflation now pending.

Before going into a discussion of this subject, please permit me to express my gratitude to the Columbia Broadcasting network and those acting with it for this opportunity of attempting to explain to you the great problem of controlled inflation.

I am deeply appreciative also of the very generous introduction of my distinguished friend and popular broadcaster, Mr. Frederic William Wile.

Now to the subject of controlled inflation: In order that you may understand, first, the necessity for the inflation of our currency, I will give you a brief history of the condition of our circulating media, the rise in the value of the purchasing power of our dollar, and the relative fall in the price of commodities.

And let us remember that while the dollar purchases the products of the farm, labor, and other property, that those who must have the dollar with which to pay their debts and their taxes and to obtain the necessities of life must purchase the dollar with their commodities, their labor, or their property. When money is scarce, you have to pay more for it in labor, commodities, and lands.

We may therefore either say that the value of a dollar is too high or we may express the same thought by saying that the value of products or commodities or land is too low. Today, for instance, cotton, wheat, meats, wool, and other products, and lands are worth only about one half what they were prior to 1930. In other words, at the present time you must give about twice as much of these things to obtain a dollar as you did prior to 1930.

It is perfectly evident, then, that if you wish to change the conditions that now exist and return to the conditions that existed prior to 1930, then you must raise commodity prices and land values as measured by the dollar to what they were prior to 1930. If this is done, the result is the deflation of the dollar to the extent of practically one half. Expressed in another way, the dollar will then buy only half as much as it will now, and products and lands will purchase twice as many dollars as they now purchase. This can be accomplished through reflation of our currencies.

Everybody in the United States should desire the accomplishment of this result. It would benefit everyone. It would allow the producer a surplus over the cost of production, with which he could purchase not only the bare necessities of life but those manufactured articles and other things that are necessary to our high standard of living and make for health, comfort, education, and happiness. It would restore prosperity to our country, and it seems, in view of our past experience and the failure of our futile remedies, that such is the only method that will accomplish the restoration of prosperity.

I am assigned the topic of "controlled inflation."

This, in reality, means the same as "reflation", or expansion of our currencies and our credits to the point where they existed, on the average, prior to 1930. We must remember, in speaking of reflation, or controlled inflation, that there has been a tremendous deflation in circulating media, credits, and values since 1929.

As far as currencies are concerned, there is as large a quantity of currencies in the United States as there was prior to 1930, but such currencies are not circulating in trade and commerce. They are not in the possession of the people. They are locked up in the banks of the country in the form of capital and deposits. Banks have been refusing to lend money because loans were not safe, so they claimed, while commodity values and other values were decreasing and unemployment was increasing.

We have attempted, through every form of legislation, not only to empower the banks to lend money but to induce them to make loans for the purpose of stopping the disastrous liquidation, and also to enable self-liquidating projects to be constructed. All of these efforts and all of these schemes and devices and all of this legislation have failed to accomplish the purpose for which they were intended.

The banks that were members of the Federal Reserve System of the country had eligible paper——that means good securities—that could be rediscounted at the Federal Reserve banks for Federal Reserve notes of a value of $4,000,000,000. The banks did not avail themselves of this large potential money issue because they did not need Federal Reserve notes, as they were not making loans to the people of the country.

Then came the Glass-Steagall bank bill, which permitted member banks to use Government bonds as security—or, in other words, as eligible paper—upon which to obtain currency from the Federal Reserve banks. This act practically doubled the eligible securities of the member banks. Yet they did not avail themselves of this enormous power to get currency from the Federal Reserve banks and circulate it through loans in the United States. Only an insignificant amount of this currency was ever called for.

And after the passage of that act conditions in the country got steadily worse. Some banks not only refused to make loans, but at the time they accumulated reserves of money 2 or 3 times the amount required by law. It is true that they had a good excuse for holding this money out of circulation. They contended that they had to keep enough money on hand to meet the demands of the depositors—in other words, to meet runs on their banks.

This currency, while in existence, and, according to the Treasury reports, in circulation, was, in fact, not in circulation, and is not now in circulation, but is as useless to the people of the country as though it were locked up in the vaults of the Treasury or sunk in the bottom of the ocean.

But we are told that the chief circulating medium of this country is not currency but checks and drafts. Well, what has happened to checks and drafts? Prior to 1930 the daily turnover was about $13,000,000,000. The average for the last several months has been about one fourth of that amount. Check and draft turnovers depend upon purchases by depositors, and depositors have not been purchasing. Depositors cannot be blamed because, like the bankers, they could not safely use their money. When the value of everything is falling, they will not take the chance.

The only person or institution apparently that can afford to take the chance of expanding currency and credit is the people's Government. It has to take the chance because it is acting for all of the people, and because without the inflation of currencies, credits, and values, our Government, as well as our people, will continue their rapid spiral downward to economic and social destruction.

There are a few holders of vast fortunes in our country who are fighting the increase in the price of cotton, wheat, and other products because, as they argue, they will then have to pay many more of their dollars for such products. This is a narrow-minded argument. Their money will be worth nothing to them if the 30,900,000 people who depend upon agriculture for their purchasing power, and the 26,000,000 of men, women, and children who depend upon labor for their purchasing power continue to be nonpurchasers in our domestic market. Their factories will not be able to produce; their banks will not be able to lend; nor will they, as individuals or corporations, be able to produce or to lend.

The proposed Thomas amendment to the farm bill, in the form in which it was recast and introduced in the Senate on Thursday last, meets with the President's approval. Yesterday it met with a bitter attack by Senator REED, of Pennsylvania. He charged that it provided for an unlimited inflation; that the notes to be issued were greenbacks, like those issued in 1862. He presented some old arguments that have been presented for the last 3 or 4 years.

How much the passage of such an amendment may accomplish is subject to argument. What the "stand pat", do-nothing policy of the past 3 years did do, we know. Now, the amendment introduced by Senator THOMAS and approved by the President does not propose to issue greenbacks, or fiat currencies, nor is it a proposition for the unlimited issues of currencies, as was suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania. It provides that the President, through the Secretary of the Treasury, may enter into agreements with the Federal Reserve banks, with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, wherein such banks shall agree, out of their immense resources, to circulate $3,000,000,000 in Federal Reserve notes through the purchase in the open market of Government bonds, and through the purchase of Treasury bills. If these banks enter into such an agreement, and so expand such currency, and it results in raising commodity prices, restoring employment, and starting prosperity, then that will be the end of the currency inflation. If these banks refuse to enter into such an agreement, and refuse to use their resources and instrumentalities to meet the emergency, then the President will cause the Treasury Department to issue Treasury notes, not in excess of $3,000,000,000, with which to accomplish the purpose that such Federal Reserve banks refuse to undertake. Again, as the restoration of prosperity through the raising of commodity prices to a reasonable level is the aim of the President, he will, of course, utilize the power granted to him by Congress to issue such part of the $3,000,000,000 in Treasury notes as is necessary to accomplish the purpose intended.

In other words, the total power of inflation granted to the President under the amendment is only $6,000,000,000, with the possibility, and we hope the probability, that only half of this sum will be required to bring about the desired and necessary ends. Even with the circulation of the entire $6,000,000,000 there would still be less circulating media in the country than there was in 1928 and 1929.

Under the proposed amendment the proposed issue will not be greenbacks or any other form of fiat unsecured money. If the $3,000,000,000 is issued by the Federal Reserve banks, it will be in Federal Reserve notes secured to the extent of 40 percent by gold. If it be Treasury notes, then they will have behind them the same security as we have behind our Government bonds, and will be full legal tender for all debts, public and private.

In addition to that the amendment provides that there shall be appropriations for the annual retirement of 4 percent of such Treasury notes; in other words, all of such notes will be retired within 25 years. Nor is this all. These notes may be issued only for the purpose of purchasing the maturing obligations of the Government, such as bonds and Treasury bills. The obligations of the Government will be no greater by the issuance of these notes than they were before the notes were issued, because with the issuance of the notes an equal value of other Government obligations are retired and canceled. The difference is that the bonds and other obligations that are retired by the exchange of these notes are interest-bearing, while the notes that are issued will be non-interest-bearing.

Again, the bonds are not a circulating medium, while the notes will be. It is not the policy of the Government to permit any undue or sudden inflation of currencies, credits, and values; and it has ample power to prevent such an occurrence.

There is another power granted to the President in the proposed amendment which provides that the President may fix the weight of the gold dollar if he finds from investigation that it is necessary for the protection of our foreign commerce against the adverse effect of the depreciated moneys or currencies of other governments. It is universally admitted that our foreign commerce is now suffering from such cause. Great Britain and some 39 other countries are off the gold standard. Their currencies, such as the pound sterling, have depreciated in value in international trade from 30 to 60 percent. The value of such currencies in international trade is measured by their exchange value for gold. For instance, prior to September 1931, the British pound sterling would buy $4.86 worth of gold. Today it will purchase about two thirds as much gold. Therefore in international trade the value of the pound sterling has fallen around one third.

These countries of cheap money and cheap currencies can buy foreign products for less in countries of depreciated currencies than they can in the United States. But when these countries, with their products, buy the dollar they can take it back to their own countries and purchase from one third to two thirds more of their own currency.

Since the President's proclamation placing the embargo on the exportation of gold the value of the dollar in international trade has fallen or depreciated. This depreciation of the dollar has caused depositors to use their money to purchase products and property, with the result that commodity prices and stocks and lands have increased in value. The proposed amendment will further reduce the value of the dollar by comparison with products, and therefore depositors, anticipating this, are buying products and lands. This is a step in the right direction. It is what has been sought for the past 3 years. It will restore confidence in our values; it will loosen up money. It will start the wheels of industry and the employment of men and women. It will undoubtedly cause a steady and continuous increase in property values. Our people need not expect any wild inflation, which is commonly designated as "a boom." We want no such boom. The reaction from it would be too great. The President will not permit it.

And yet this race among governments to cheapen their money, so that they may obtain an advantage in international trade as against their competitors of higher-valued money, must necessarily cease. The end of such a race, unless soon stopped, will reach the point where moneys are so unstable and valueless that we will be driven to the recourse of barter in trade. The action of our Government is a demonstration of the necessity for the adjustment and stabilization of the moneys of the countries engaged in international trade.

The provision granting the power to the President to fix the weight of gold enables him to meet any depreciation in the currency of any government. It is a power that he would deeply regret to be compelled to use. It is a power that he would never use unless the actions of other governments made it absolutely necessary to the preservation of our foreign trade. It is a power that he should have, and that, in my opinion, is necessary when our Government enters the coming economic conference. It gives him power at such conference not only to meet any move by any other government, but to agree with other governments on a fixed value for the currencies of each of such governments in international trade. If the hands of the President are tied, then God help our country. The President deserves the confidence and trust of the American people.

There is another provision in the amendment which authorizes the President to accept silver at a value of not to exceed 50 cents an ounce in payment of foreign debts, and not to exceed $100,000,000 worth in the aggregate.

This may be of value to foreign governments in meeting payments due prior to the economic conference. We know that these governments deplore the necessity of repudiating their debts. We give due weight to their arguments that they have not the gold to safely transfer, and we do not desire to accept their commodities in payment.

The British Government for India owes Great Britain approximately $30,000,000. Such Government, so we are credibly informed, desires to pay Great Britain in silver, the market price of which today is under 50 cents an ounce. Great Britain owes the United States $74,950,000 as interest on June 15. Under the terms of the amendment Great Britain can pay this debt in silver. The United States, in the event of accepting this silver, would coin $74,950,000 in standard silver dollars and subsidiary coinage, issuing and circulating silver certificates as against the dollars.

The acquisition of this silver by the United States would reduce the oversupply of silver in the markets of the world derived from the melting up of silver coins by India and tend to increase the price of silver, which would greatly enlarge our export market with China, India, South America, and other silver-using countries. No one would lose by this transaction, while the United States and Great Britain would surely gain. Let all of our citizens stand with the President in his fight against depression.

SENATOR LA FOLLETTE'S EFFORTS FOR EMERGENCY RELIEF

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD an article from the Capital Times, of Madison, Wis., of the issue April 15, 1933, on the subject of the efforts of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to obtain unemployment relief.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Capital Times, Madison, Wis., Apr. 15, 1933]

THE STORY OF BOB LA FOLLETTE'S GALLANT, UPHILL FIGHT FOR RELIEF

Passage of the bill to provide $500,000,000 of Federal funds to relieve human suffering marks the first major victory since the collapse of 1929 for millions of men, women, and children who have been the chief casualties of the depression.

The fight for this legislation has lasted more than 3 years. It began in the winter of 1929–30, when BOB LA FOLLETTE, of Wisconsin, demanded on the floor of the United States Senate that the Federal Government, not the local taxpayers of States, counties, and cities, should assume the primary burden of human relief.

For 3 years, in four sessions of Congress, Senator LA FOLLETTE has fought unceasingly for this principle against tremendous odds.

His battle has been waged for a twofold program. He has insisted (1) that Washington could not shirk its share of the responsibility for the relief of the victims of a depression resulting primarily from mistaken policies of the Federal Government; (2) that the Federal Government should launch a Nation-wide program for useful public works to provide jobs for the unemployed, stimulate business, and check deflation.

On March 30 the United States Senate reversed itself by passing, 53 to 17, the $500,000,000 Federal relief bill drafted by Senators LA FOLLETTE, COSTIGAN, and WAGNER. This measure follows the terms of the La Follette-Costigan bill, twice rejected in the Senate at previous sessions.

After final action by Congress the bill will go to the White House. There it is assured of approval from the successor of Herbert Hoover, who stood like a rock against Federal aid for the unemployed through three winters of starvation.

LIFTING THE WHITE HOUSE EMBARGO ON PUBLIC WORKS

Almost simultaneous with Senate approval of the La Follette-Costigan relief plan comes the heartening news that President Roosevelt will scrap another Hoover policy by lifting the White House embargo on public-works legislation.

Under the Hoover regime, the main reliance of the Federal Government to "revive prosperity" was placed upon balancing the Budget, cheese-paring economy, and other devices to stimulate the stock market and "restore confidence."

President Roosevelt apparently has the wisdom to see that we have had enough of psychological remedies and that the people rightfully expect their Government to provide actual jobs for those who are willing to work.

When the public-works program outlined by the President is undertaken on a national scale, the administration will have come up to the position LA FOLLETTE, of Wisconsin, has occupied throughout the depression. It will have virtually adopted the program LA FOLLETTE has strongly defended against the sniping attacks of the Nation's press, the Insulls, the Mitchells, and the other spokesmen for Wall Street who have dictated Federal policy before and since the crash in 1929.

The story of LA FOLLETTE'S fight to get the attention of Government officials at Washington off the banks, the railroads, and big insurance companies long enough to see the havoc wrought in wrecked homes and broken families, and his insistence upon fundamental remedies to recreate purchasing power as the essential step toward a balanced prosperity, are embedded deeply in the public records of the last 3 years.

IN 1931 LA FOLLETTE BROUGHT FORWARD PROGRAM

Beginning at the December session of Congress in 1929, LA FOLLETTE started his militant opposition to the Hoover policies and brought forward a clear-cut alternative program for national reconstruction.

At the opening session, within 60 days after the stock-market crash, the President asked Congress to rush through a bill to reduce Federal taxes by $160,000,000 on incomes for 1929, on which taxes were already payable. The avowed intent of this legislation was to "peg" the falling stock market by reducing the payments for big income and corporate taxpayers.

LA FOLLETTE opposed the bill on the Senate floor, warning that the depression was too serious to be checked by sleight-of-hand methods. He demanded that taxes already payable under existing law should be collected to meet the need for genuine relief which he foresaw would be necessary.

When President Hoover announced at the White House on March 8, 1930, that the crisis was past and predicted that unemployment would cease to be a problem "within 60 days", LA FOLLETTE challenged the statement and continued his uphill fight to force Congress to enact remedial legislation.

During the recess before Congress convened in December 1930 the Senator from Wisconsin sent out questionnaires to the mayors of all cities of 5,000 population and over to get the real facts concerning unemployment conditions in every section of the country. Using the replies to this inquiry and telegrams furnished him by President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, from central labor boards throughout the United States, he succeeded at the 1930 session in forcing administration officials in charge of relief and construction to appear before the Senate Appropriations Committee in January 1931. His analysis of their testimony belied the administration's claim that prosperity was "just around the corner."

A BREACH OF FAITH WITH THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

LA FOLLETTE took the floor in the Senate February 10, 1931, to protest vigorously against adjournment of Congress on March 4 without the enactment of Federal relief legislation. He said:

"The evidence is overwhelming that the urban centers are now suffering from a more serious economic crisis than has ever confronted the country. * * * With at least 6,000,000 unemployed, with another 5,000,000 on part time, it is a very conservative estimate to say that, with their dependents, at least 22,000,000 people are affected.

"To fail to provide any relief for this great group is a breach of faith with the American people. * * * This is the second winter of unemployment. As shown in the survey which I presented to the Senate from 303 cities scattered over 41 States of the country, it is evident that many communities have already exhausted the resources of voluntary contributions. * * * It has been argued in this controversy by those supporting the administration that the local communities should be called upon to take care of the unemployed.

"I, for one, cannot see the logic of that argument for two reasons: First, because if any governmental entity is responsible, or has had any share of responsibility in producing this economic crisis, then surely it is the Federal Government. The governments of the cities and the governments of the various States cannot be said to have enacted legislation which has contributed to the present business depression. It is only the Federal Government, in enacting legislation affecting economic conditions in the country, which has any responsibility in this matter; and yet it is argued that Congress is the one governmental agency which should not afford any assistance in the existing crisis.

"Secondly, Mr. President, to throw the entire burden upon the cities is to place it entirely upon real and tangible property. Those who derive their income from stocks and bonds and other forms of securities will go scot free. We leave it to their generosity to determine the amount of their contribution in meeting the demands of suffering and distress. Upon the homes of workingmen who are out of work, upon the little corner grocery, and the small property owner the administration contends the entire burden should fall.

"Mr. President, there has been much talk about a dole in the present situation, but up until this time I have not had anyone supporting the administration's policy explain to me the difference between a dollar appropriated by a city or a county or a dollar appropriated out of the Federal Treasury."

MARSHALLING THE EVIDENCE OF ACUTE DISTRESS

During the recess in the summer of 1931, LA FOLLETTE continued his independent investigation, sending out a second questionnaire to mayors of cities. On December 9, 1931, a few days after the new Congress assembled, Senators LA FOLLETTE and COSTIGAN introduced separate bills for Federal relief, which were referred to the Committee on Manufactures, of which LA FOLLETTE was chairman.

Hearings on the bills were promptly ordered by Chairman LA FOLLETTE, continuing from December 28, 1931, over the Christmas recess to January 9. On January 21 the La Follette-Costigan bill (S. 3045), combining the two measures, was reported to the Senate, and on February 2 LA FOLLETTE succeeded in having the bill made the unfinished business before the Senate, the debate continuing for 2 weeks.

On February 2 and 3 LA FOLLETTE spoke for 5 hours, marshaling the evidence produced before the committee and compelling the Senate to listen to scores of cases of acute distress among the unemployed and their families.

It was this debate, led by Senators LA FOLLETTE and COSTIGAN, in which reactionary Republican and Democratic leaders were for the first time forced to face the facts and to admit the necessity of immediate Federal aid to cities and States whose treasuries had broken down under the demand for relief.

Unable longer to ignore the array of facts assembled at the committee hearings, old-guard Senators in both the Republican and Democratic camps sought to shift the issue by proposing loans to the States in lieu of the appropriation of $375,000,000 for direct emergency relief proposed in the La Follette-Costigan bill.

SPOKESMAN FOR PRESIDENT HOOVER BITTERLY DENOUNCED THE BILL

After Senator FESS, of Ohio, chairman of the Republican National Committee, and spokesman for President Hoover, had bitterly denounced the bill, Senator BORAH, of Idaho, spoke in reply. He said:

"Mr. President, we seem to have the philosophy of the senior Senator from Ohio in all its naked and hideous ugliness. He takes the position that the National Government should not aid the suffering, the needy, the sick, and the distressed, even though the local government is not taking care of them. * * *

"A few days ago we passed what is known as "the Reconstruction Finance Corporation measure." I do not question now the necessity. I challenge any Senator upon this floor to find the slightest sanction for that measure in any authority that is given to the Congress of the United States. * * * What I am complaining of is that men who voted to take money out of the Treasury of the United States to revive private business are now unwilling to take money out of the Treasury of the United States to preserve human life when we know it to be imperiled. * * *

"We have lodged governmental powers in the people of the United States. This is their Government. It was made for them. They defend it upon the field of battle; they give their lives for it; and when distress comes the Government owes something to the people. * * *

"The senior Senator from Ohio spent considerable time on the system of the dole. He left the floor without defining the dole. * * * There is no proposal here to pay a stated sum to individuals, regardless of whether or not they are in actual need.

"There is nothing proposed in the nature of a dole such as they have in England. * * * There is not the semblance of a dole here. * * * Mr. President, this is a practical proposition. Theory disappears when people are hungry. We may call it a dole, but they call it something to eat.

"I have read almost in full the hearings taken before the committee of which the able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is chairman. That committee did a fine and helpful thing in bringing out the real facts. If anyone thinks conditions have been exaggerated, let him read these hearings. * * * I do not believe conditions have been exaggerated. * * * I sometimes doubt if the Great War itself, with all its suffering and sacrifices, entailed greater misery and more agony of heart than these long, fateful days in the aftermath of war."

"NO MORE INTELLIGENT HEARINGS EVER CONDUCTED"—SENATOR JOHNSON

Senator JOHNSON, of California, took up the cudgels for the measure as the debate continued. He said:

"I want to yield the fullest meed of praise of which I am capable of expression to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] for the magnificent work they have done in connection with the measure that is pending now before the Senate, and to say to them, too, that that work, no matter what may be the fate of the bill that is before us now, has not been done in vain.

"No more intelligent hearings, in my opinion, were ever conducted by a Senate committee than were conducted by the committee over which the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] presides. No more informative hearings have ever been brought to this body than this bill has brought after the deliberations of the committee headed by the senior Senator from Wisconsin. * * *

"The difficulty with the legislation which has been passed thus far by the Congress in this depression has been that it has all begun at the top. * * * Now, sir, finally we come down to the bottom; we come down to those who are little able to aid themselves. * * * For the first time in the history of this depression, thanks to the ability and perseverance of Messrs. LA FOLLETTE and COSTIGAN, we are to deal with men and women and children who demand of the United States Government some sort of relief in this horrid period of distress."

PETITION DENOUNCING "COMMUNISTIC DOLE"

Senator REED of Pennsylvania attacked the bill, declaring the depression would soon end and that the sufferings of the people were not to be compared with those of former panics. Senator KEAN, of New Jersey, a multimillionaire financier, presented a petition from the New Jersey Taxpayers' Association, advocating a sales tax and denouncing the "communistic Costigan-La Follette dole from the Federal Treasury."

On February 16 the bill was defeated by a vote of 48 to 35. All the progressives of both parties in the Senate voted for its passage. For the bill were 19 Democrats, 15 Republicans, and 1 Farmer-Laborite, with 21 Democrats and 27 Republicans against it. Thus a majority of both parties voted to kill the measure.

After the defeat of the bill LA FOLLETTE obtained from the Manufactures Committee a favorable report on a substitute by Senator WAGNER, of New York, providing for reimbursable loans to the States rather than outright grants from the Federal Government. The Wagner bill was reported by LA FOLLETTE from committee on February 29, but the leaders in the Senate permitted no action upon it until it was incorporated in the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of July 21.

Upon the convening of the "lame duck" session of the Seventy-second Congress in December 1932 Senator LA FOLLETTE for the third time addressed a questionnaire to the mayors of cities. The La Follette-Costigan bill was reintroduced, and hearings were held before the Manufactures Committee from January 3 to 17, 1933. The bill was favorably reported on January 27, but on February 20 it was defeated for a second time by a vote of 44 to 28. The "lame duck" session adjourned without action to extend Federal aid to the millions of unemployed workers, estimated to number 12,000,000 toward the close of the fourth winter of the depression.

The bill which passed the Senate on March 30, 1933, abandons the "loan" principle of the Wagner bill of 1932 and provides $500,000,000 for direct grants to the States. Thus the basic principle of the La Follette-Costigan bill has been accepted. After 3 years of struggle the burden of relief is about to be shifted from local and State taxpayers to the Federal Government, which throughout the Hoover administration failed to provide, except by loans, a dollar of Federal funds to aid in the direct relief of the human victims of the depression.

LA FOLLETTE'S FIGHT WILL SAVE MILLIONS

The fight Senator LA FOLLETTE has made for 3 years in the United States Senate—on the floor, in committee, and during recesses of Congress—will not only mitigate human suffering and provide food for men, women, and children on the verge of starvation, but it will likewise reduce, by every dollar of the Federal expenditure, the crushing burden of taxation which the Hoover policy of local relief has saddled upon the owners of homes, farms, and other property subject to State and local taxation. In Wisconsin alone, LA FOLLETTE'S fight, which has been carried to complete victory, will save millions to local taxpayers.

During the campaign of 1932 Senator GLASS, of Virginia, and Alfred E. Smith named Senator LA FOLLETTE as one of the few men in Congress who had foreseen the gravity of the depression and brought forward adequate measures to combat it. The people of Wisconsin know that this remarkable record of their senior Senator has been written in the teeth of continuous misrepresentation and abuse from reactionary politicians and a mendacious press within and without the State.

Bob La Follette, the elder, met the same kind of opposition when, almost alone in the United States Senate, he resisted American entrance into the World War and foretold its economic consequences, from which we are suffering today. The people of Wisconsin are fortunate to have another LA FOLLETTE in the Senate with courage, vision, and statesmanship tested and tried in the fires of a national crisis.

EXPANDING THE CURRENCY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR LONG

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a speech delivered by the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] over a network of radio stations of the National Broadcasting Co. from Washington, D.C., on April 21, 1933, on the subject of "Expanding the Currency."

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, I am pleased tonight to have the opportunity to speak from coast to coast on the most interesting subject with which we are now dealing in the American Congress. I do not wish to claim a great deal of credit for the events now transpiring, but I do wish to call to your attention, in order that you might understand it from a historical standpoint, the fight which has been going on here in Congress for nearly a year and a half to expand the currency of the United States Government.

There has been a fight, and that fight has been led by Senator WHEELER, of Montana, Senator THOMAS of Oklahoma, and myself, HUEY P. LONG, of Louisiana, undertaking to require the United States Government to supply the people with sufficient money to carry on the business of this country.

In order that I might explain what we have undertaken to do, because it now seems that we have succeeded, though the fight has been arduous, long, and tiresome, and under critical circumstances, in order to explain it, I will make this statement: In 1921 the American dollar, based upon commodity values, was worth about 60 cents. In 1927 and 1928 the American dollar, based upon commodity values was worth $1. In 1932 and 1933, the American dollar, based upon commodity values, was worth $1.60.

Now, let me restate that: In 1927 and 1928 the American dollar was worth 60 cents. In 1928 and 1929 it was worth a dollar, and in 1932 and 1933 the American dollar was worth $1.60. That is, based upon commodity values. That means, ladies and gentlemen, that in the Western States the man who borrowed a dollar in 1921, worth 60 cents, in 1932 had to pay back that dollar worth $1.60—two and a half for one. It broke down the purchasing power of the American farmer; it wrecked economic adjustment of the country; and as a result of it, a paralysis existed in America.

As a result of that condition, or rather as a consequence of it, last year an alleged filibuster was conducted in the Senate, that filibuster having been conducted between three Senators—THOMAS of Oklahoma; WHEELER, of Montana; and LONG, of Louisiana—and brought about a fight to compel expansion of the currency to restore commodity prices in the United States. We made a fight, commonly denominated a filibuster, to require the United States Government to lay down the principles for the expansion of the currency. We announced we would content ourselves with no legislation unless it embodied provision for the protection of the American debtor, so they might deal in American dollars on the basis of the American dollar when they contracted a debt they are now required to pay.

I wish to break in at this moment. I am advised by Frank Russell, the rather peculiar vice president of the National Broadcasting Co. located here in Washington, that tonight marks the eighth anniversary of radio station WSMB, located in one of God's chosen spots, New Orleans. You boys have done a great job in building up your station, WSMB, and I send you my hearty congratulations and best wishes and hope you keep up the great work.

Now, ladies and gentlemen, we are not indulging ourselves in any great fight, but we have made one fight, and one fight only, and that has been a fight for the decentralization of wealth, and I would not have you share any illusion while we are now apparently on the threshhold of success. I would not have you believe for one moment that the expansion of the currency will solve the problem of decentralization of wealth, for which we have fought so long and for which we have undertaken to secure an accomplishment by bringing down the fortunes of the big men and restoring the value of property ownership in the little man.

In order that I might be understood, ladies and gentlemen, let me say this: I was not willing that my fortitude and position in politics be regulated to coordinate to the wishes of Congress or the President of the United States. I regarded our handling of the banking situation as tragical and a menace. We closed so many banks with our banking legislation that from five to six billions of dollars of bank deposits became frozen. I was not in sympathy with that and I have undertaken to bring about a reopening of all banks.

I was not in favor of the economy bill passed by the State administration and the national administration to cut down the amount of compensation paid soldiers of wars fought for America. On the contrary, I felt every veteran of the Spanish-American War and World War should receive what compensation had been allowed him, and I fought against the so-called "economy bill", not only because it failed to take care of veterans of the Spanish-American War and World War, but because it took from the man who was injured money he needed to support himself and family and to undertake to bring himself back to health, safety, and life to come.

Therefore, ladies and gentlemen, I made no pretense on the question. I did not approve of the program on the bank transactions; I was opposed to the so-called "economy bill", and I was opposed to this bill appropriating $250,000,000 of the money of the people of the United States to plant trees in the United States and pay men $1 a day to do it. But, ladies and gentlemen, I went along with the administration because I felt it was better to give it a chance to succeed, however wrong it might be, rather than to have it handicapped by anything that I might do. But later on we undertook to bring about a test vote in the United States Senate to show that we were in favor of an inflation of the currency, or rather an expansion of the currency so there would be enough money left in America to carry on the legitimate business of commerce, agriculture, and various and sundry other transactions.

Late as may have been our success, we are happy tonight to tell you that the President of the United States and the other great statesmen of finance have swallowed our demand, hook, line, and sinker, and tonight, ladies and gentlemen, it appears that the expansion of the currency is but a few moments (based upon world time) when we will have before us a law for the signature of our great President expanding our currency to such an extent that there will be gold and silver and certificates sufficient to carry on and to accommodate the legal requirements of the people of the United States of America. So much for that.

We are happy, ladies and gentlemen; we claim no credit whatever for what we have done. We are glad Senator WHEELER'S amendment providing for 16-to-1 silver was passed by a majority vote on the Democratic side of the Senate—the Democrats voted approval. It was defeated only by the fact that a majority of the Republicans voted against silver being remonetized.

Senator WHEELER will go down in our ranks as the leading exponent of advanced thought on expansion of currency. So much for his great name which none of us can share when it comes to accomplishments.

Now, it appears that when we have reconvened Congress on Monday it will be a matter of but a few moments—maybe a few days—when we shall have remonetized silver most probably; we will have expanded currency most certainly, giving the people of the United States a medium of exchange to carry on ordinary and customary transactions, without such paralysis as has handicapped the business of this country in the past few months and years.

I am now going to address myself to another subject—that is, decentralization of wealth. I have been asked to speak repeatedly in the larger cities of the United States and to explain my philosophy of government. This week I spoke in the city of New York. I am again pleased and happy to speak over the Nation's radio system from this Capital, Washington, D.C.

My philosophy, my friends, is not a new philosophy. It is opposed, I believe, because of its simplicity. I have advocated in the land of too much to eat, there should be none to starve. I have advocated that in the land of too much to wear, there should be none naked. I propose that in the land of too many houses, there should be none without homes to live in. In a word, I propose that in a land of plenty, there should not be suffering because there is too much.

I, therefore, have proposed, ladies and gentlemen of America, that we should return to the basic and fundamental laws of our Creator, that we should gain the support of our Government from the big fortunes on the top, and not oppress the man on the bottom in order to carry on and not create a state of social unrest, but a protected and civilized government.

If I might illustrate to you what I propose, I would say that in 1916 the entire United States was startled by the exposure that 60 percent of the wealth was in the hands of 2 percent of the people, and that 65 percent of the people owned less than 5 percent of our wealth, leaving a middle class of 33 percent which owned 35 percent of our wealth. We were startled by the fact that 60 percent of our wealth was owned by 2 percent of the people and 65 percent of the people owned less than 5 percent of the wealth. But, ladies and gentlemen, today the middle class has been wiped out and 90 percent of the wealth of America is owned by from 5 to 7 percent of the people of America; and, as a result of it, we have allowed the wealth of this country to become concentrated into the hands of a few people, resulting in starvation of the masses and in the overloading and overbonding of the great mass, instead of giving over the largest percentage of the wealth to the larger percentage of the people.

As a result of this situation we wonder why, my friends, there is starvation in the land of plenty! The reason is the fact that we have allowed this country to be gradually and steadily accumulated into the hands of a few men; and, as a result of it, a mere handful of men own more of the Nation's wealth today than 95 percent of the population of the United States all put together.

How are we going to counter this proposition? How are we to expect the people of America to exist when a few are allowed to gradually suck through such a system of windpipes and power pipes until a mere minority of 1 percent own more than 60 percent of the entire national wealth?

Why, ladies and gentlemen, it is a condition that cannot survive, under which no country can starve and live, and therefore we propose to the American people tonight that we be allowed to decentralize the wealth of this country and share the wealth of this land and the fruits of this land and the labor of this land among American people rather than have thirteen to fourteen millions of people idle and another twenty to thirty millions of people starving, in order that a mere handful comprising a plutocracy can have a strangle hold on the wealth and industry and thriving agriculture of the entire American public.

For that reason I have proposed in the United States Senate and the lower House of Congress three laws, and they are these: When a man earns a million dollars a year after paying all taxes and expenses he will be required to contribute all over a million dollars to the United States Government. That means a man is allowed to earn net $1,000,000 a year and no more than that; and then we propose, second, that after a man dies with a fortune, that he can give each one of his children $5,000,000 apiece; but that he cannot give more than $5,000,000 to any one child that he has never hit a lick of work to earn, the balance to go to the Government.

Then the third law I have proposed is a capital levy tax. It provides when a man has a fortune of more than a million dollars he shall give 1 percent of all over a million dollars to the Government. It proposes when a man is worth more than $2,000,000 he should give 2 percent of all he owns above two million to the Government. It provides when a man owns more than $10,000,000, he shall give 10 percent of all he owns above ten million and until it finally reaches $100,000,000, and then it provides when a man owns more than $100,000,000, that he shall give everything that he owns above $100,000,000 to the United States Government.

Why? For two reasons. First, when a man has earned $1,000,000 a year, he has earned enough. Then a child has no right starting life with more than $5,000,000; and, third, when a man has accumulated a fortune of $100,000,000 he has enough, and the balance should go to the Government.

That is one reason. The second is that it will give the United States Government $15,000,000,000 a year for the next 10 years. It will give it enough money to balance its Budget of expenses; enough to carry on public works; it will give it enough to carry on all works of public improvement; enough to amply finance the guaranty of bank deposits; and give this country so much money it will not have to levy one dime of taxes on a poor man, but on the bloated fortune status, until there would be no such thing as a man owning more than $100,000,000, and no such thing as a child inheriting more than $5,000,000, and no such thing as one man earning more than $1,000,000 exclusive of interest, taxes, and costs in the course of the year's business. And as a result, my friends, of what we propose it would gradually and finally drag the fortunes off the top; it would reduce the swollen fortunes of the few and raise the status of the common, ordinary American citizen from the bottom until he would steadily reach a place in American society, and thereby allow the farmer and laborer to share the benefits and welfare of the American people, rather than creating a condition of serfs and unemployment on the bottom and lords on the top, as has been, due to the system of bloated plutocracy, as we are now experiencing.

And now that I cannot illustrate to you further, having only a few more minutes left me, let me say we are not the enemies of the rich. We are not the enemies of industry. We are not the enemies of the plutocrat. On the contrary, we are their greatest friends. We are undertaking to cause America and its ideals to survive. And we are told the philosophy of Jefferson and Lincoln and Jackson was that unless the fruits and profits of the land are spread among the people, no country can survive. We know what these leading statesmen said is now true.

We have too much corn, cotton, wheat, and oats; and yet our people are starving. Too much to wear and yet we have our people with nothing to wear. So many big houses, the loan companies, and building and loan associations cannot carry them in their portfolios, and the United States Government must market them through other process. Too much to eat and people starving. Too much to wear and people go naked. Too many homes and houses and people going through the lands and highways and byways with no place to lay their heads, because there is nothing they can find as a resting place, simply because the wealth of the land has been concentrated into the hands of the few.

We do not propose to take luxuries away from the rich and wealthy. We do not propose to take away from them one thing they can enjoy, but we ask a law that requires the wealth of the land to be reasonably distributed among all of the people, so in the land of too much to eat there is no such thing as a starving man; so that in the land of too much to wear no one shall go naked; so in the land of too much in the way of houses and homes people do not walk the highways and byways looking for a place whereon to rest their head when nighttime comes. We ask a law scraping the wealth from the top to accommodate the man on the bottom, taking from a man that which he does not need and giving to a man that which gives him life.

We ask for laws that do not permit in the land of plenty starvation, pestilence, consumption, and riot. That will mean that the fruits and profits and fortunes of the land will be shared by the people of all of the land and not concentrated into the hands of the few until there is stagnation at the top and misery wide-spread at the bottom. I thank you.

AN HONEST DOLLAR BY THE USE OF SYMMETALISM

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an address entitled "An Honest Dollar by the Use of Symmetalism", delivered by R. B. Ketchum, dean of the School of Mines and Engineering, University of Utah, before the engineering council at the University of Utah April 17, 1933.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

The new book by Warrum and Pearson, of Cornell University, tells us that in 1888 Marshall proposed to the British gold and silver commission the plan that is called "symmetalism", as follows (p. 161):

"I propose that currency should be exchangeable at the mint or issue department, not for gold but for gold and silver. * * * I would make up gold and silver bars in gram weights so as to be useful in international trade. A gold bar of 100 grams, together with a silver bar, say, 20 times as heavy, would be exchangeable for currency."

The gold standard has failed as a satisfactory money base. Two nations, the United States and France, have cornered gold and it has depreciated in purchasing power to such an extent prices of all commodities have reached unprecedented low levels, and these prices are still skidding to lower levels. The recent deflationary measures used to balance budgets will cause prices to go still lower and the trend of the business curve is still downward on a steep grade. The process of writing off mortgages, voluntary lowering of debts, salaries, budgets, etc., are unable to catch up with declining revenues because of the accelerated velocity of deflationary processes. Prices must be made to rise. More dollars must be awarded to producers of raw materials from the farms, mines, and forests, upon whom all industry depends. That the low prices are due to the appreciation of the cornered gold dollar and not to overproduction is easily shown by facts and figures relative to production. For example, our national income from our greatest industry—agriculture—has fallen from 12 billions to 5 billions. Anything that is done artificially to stimulate industry by the expenditure of a few paltry millions on construction or otherwise has little effect on making up this annual deficit of 7 billions in this one industry. The same thing has happened in all industries, making an enormous annual deficit in our annual income.

I quote from the Business Week, of April 12, 1933:

"We think too highly of the intelligence of President Roosevelt and his advisers to suppose for one moment that the administration believes it has done anything as yet toward reviving business—save perhaps the 3.2 percent of stimulation that beer may give. To be downright frank about it, virtually everything done so far has been deflationary. Some $15,000,000,000 of bank deposits have been frozen; farm mortgages, which are really bank deposits and life-insurance policies, are about to be destroyed in part; some of the city consumer's income is about to be transferred to the farmer; issue of new securities is to be made more difficult; Government employees are losing jobs; spending power has been taken away from pensioners to the amount of a half billion dollars a year.

"Why, then, is the business world so hopeful? Just because we all believe the administration will not stop here; because the country has faith that the steps thus far taken are but the preliminaries toward constructive action.

"Washington has been doing an overhaul job on the automobile. The idea is to get it so it will run, cleaning out the gas line through which money flows from tank to motor, fitting a set of serviceable brakes to the securities markets, greasing the springs which must take the road jolts. All this is important, even necessary. But some day, not too far ahead, it will be necessary to fill the tank with gas, step on the starter, and try to go places. What brand of gas? How much?

"At that moment we shall catch our first glimpse of the real underlying philosophy of the administration or discover whether it has any fundamental program for recovery. There is evidence, both direct and inferential, that it has. Our own advices are that the administration realizes as fully as anyone that the only thing that can help business is the creation of jobs, and that it is concentrating on plans.

"The evidence of circumstances is even stronger. Nothing the administration does is going to make business much worse. 'Don't rock the boat' is a dead slogan. The Democratic Party cannot stay in power by the process of doing nothing to disturb the existing order. It was put into power for the specific purpose of changing things. The mere preliminary indications of vigorous action have aroused the country to enthusiasm. The administration must be perfectly aware of that, and aware, too, that the enthusiasm will die as quickly unless the fundamental problem of business recovery is attacked and prices improved.

"Plans include, it is to be surmised, direct employment by the Government, and perhaps the use of Government funds as bait to stimulate industry to put up funds of its own to undertake new enterprise and thus to employ more people.

"No doubt every effort will be made to avoid direct currency inflation. But the money must be provided somehow. Perhaps there will be great bond-selling campaigns. Cleaning up the banks and rebuilding confidence in the securities market would make sense as the first steps to prepare for such an appeal to the public.

"The program, when it emerges, is certain to shock the conservatives. But there aren't as many conservatives as there were 4 years ago. Most business men nowadays realize that all the old and orthodox policies have been tried and have failed. Not all men realize how greatly the economic world has changed since classic economists taught that depressions cured themselves, but the country senses clearly enough that the times demand new patterns of thought and of behavior. It is prepared for bold experiments. Inaction is the one thing it will not forgive."

Now is the greatest opportunity the West has had in years to exert an influence that will not only help the West but also the whole Nation, and the whole Western Hemisphere. Price levels must stop declining. They must rise. This can be accomplished by symmetalism. What is symmetalism? Simply this: Instead of the present gold base of 23.22 grains of pure gold let us follow the ideas proposed by Marshall and use 11.61 grains of gold and 185.625 grains of pure silver. Instead of gold only we then use gold and silver in the ratio of 16 to 1. Note this is very different from free coinage of silver, and this plan is entirely free from the objections raised against bimetallism as formerly proposed.

I propose symmetalism for the following reasons:

1. The Western Hemisphere produces most of the world's silver. After the war the European nations debased their silver coinage to make it go farther for their uses.

2. The British Empire produces 80 percent of the world's gold. We should debase our gold dollar for our own protection exactly for the same reason as used on silver by European nations.

3. Using silver always with a fixed amount of gold as our money base will protect us against undue inflation.

4. When silver is accompanied by the gold there can be no such thing as the silver driving out the gold as in free coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1.

5. The vast potential market of the Orient may be developed under this system in a way that is impossible with the gold standard.

6. This will help solve the international-debt question by making it easier for Europe to liquidate obligations.

7. This gold-silver dollar will become the unit on the Western Hemisphere.

8. This will give us higher prices by cutting down present purchasing power of the appreciated and cornered gold dollar.

9. This will tend to depreciate gold and appreciate silver.

10. When business increases and more money is needed our money base will be larger and will provide an ample supply of currency.

11. This will help start production in all nonferrous mines.

THE AMERICAN NAVY—ITS STANDING AND NEEDS SURVEYED

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I present an article appearing in the Sunday New York Times, entitled "The American Navy: Its Standing and Needs Surveyed", which I ask may be published in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

[From the New York Times, Apr. 23, 1933]

THE AMERICAN NAVY: ITS STANDING AND NEEDS SURVEYED—COMPARED WITH THE BRITISH AND JAPANESE FLEETS, IT IS MARKEDLY BELOW TREATY STRENGTH IN MODERN SHIPS, WITH DEFICIENCIES IN CARRIERS AND CRUISERS AND IN NEW SUBMARINES AND DESTROYERS

By Hanson W. Baldwin

Today, more than at any time in the last decade, our naval needs are subjects for headlines. With the disarmament conference at Geneva apparently faltering toward a futile conclusion, with Europe an armed camp fearful of the future, with Japanese and Chinese armies on the march, and with guns booming in South America, the question of the strength of our fleet again becomes of paramount interest.

A new Secretary of the Navy now directs the destinies of our naval arms. He is responsible to a President who, having served as Assistant Secretary of the Navy during the World War, has kept in constant touch with naval developments.

What have been those developments? What is the standing of the American Navy today? What are its weaknesses? What remedies for the weaknesses have been suggested?

I. The treaties

The fleet today is restricted and to a large extent defined by the provisions of two naval treaties: the Treaty of Washington, signed in 1922, and the Treaty of London, signed in 1930. The Treaty of Washington, the first in history actually limiting naval armaments, was ratified by the United States, Great Britain, Japan, France, and Italy. The London Treaty met the approval of the three greatest sea powers—Great Britain, the United States, and Japan—but France and Italy refused to subscribe to its terms and hence are not bound by its provisions.

The Washington Treaty is valid until terminated by one of the five contracting nations upon 2 years' notice, but the London Treaty expires on December 31, 1936, unless its provisions are extended or revised by another naval conference before that time. Such a conference is provided for in the terms of the London Treaty, and is scheduled to be held in 1935, unless prior agreements are reached at the disarmament conference at Geneva.

It was at Washington that parity—equality in combatant ships with the world's greatest sea power (then and now Great Britain)—was officially made the American naval policy, and it was at Washington that the now famous 5–5–3 ratio was evolved. That ratio was originally intended to apply to the entire fleet strengths of the United States, Great Britain, and Japan, but since no agreements as to the limitations of cruisers, destroyers, and submarines could be reached it was applied only to capital ships (battleships and battle cruisers) and aircraft carriers.

BATTLESHIP TONNAGES

The treaty fixed the total capital-ship tonnage at 525,000 tons each for the United States and Great Britain, 315,000 tons for Japan, and 175,000 tons each for France and Italy. The total tonnage of aircraft carriers was fixed at 135,000 tons each for the United States and Great Britain, 81,000 tons for Japan, and 60,000 tons each for France and Italy. Thus the ratio for capital ships and carriers of the United States, Great Britain, and Japan was fixed at 5–5–3, or 10–10–6.

Certain experimental vessels in excess of the stipulated tonnages were allowed the various nations, and under this arrangement the United States retained the aircraft carrier Langley. Individual capital ships and aircraft carriers were limited by treaty terms in size and in armament, and the age of capital ships and carriers was fixed at 20 years, after which they could be replaced. Vessels of other types, however, were unlimited, except as to maximum size (10,000 tons) and maximum size of guns (8 inches).

THE LONDON CONFERENCE

The Washington Treaty failed because of its incomplete provisions to halt naval building, and the London conference was called in 1930 to supplement it. At London, Great Britain (that is for treaty purposes the British Empire), Japan, and the United States agreed upon a capital-ship building holiday to last until the end of 1936, thus postponing their rights to replace their over-age battleships and battle cruisers. In addition, the United States scrapped 3 capital ships, Great Britain 5, and Japan 1. Each of these nations was allowed to retain one of these ships, demilitarized, for training purposes. As modified by the terms of the London agreements, the capital-ship quotas now stand as follows:

Great Britain: 12 battleships, 3 battle cruisers; total tonnage, 473,650.

United States: Fifteen battleships; total tonnage, 453,500.

Japan: 6 battleships and 3 battle cruisers; total tonnage, 272,070.

But the principal achievements of the conference at London were the successful efforts to define and to limit the cruiser, destroyer, and submarine categories. Certain vessels which did not come within the definitions of any of these types, or which were termed experimental, were allowed to be retained in excess of set tonnages. In general, however, the limiting tonnages were definitely fixed.

Cruisers were divided into two classes: class A, with guns more than 6.1 inches in caliber, and class B, with guns of 6.1-inch caliber or less. In class A cruisers the United States was limited to a total of 180,000 tons, Great Britain to 146,800, and Japan to 108,400. In class B cruisers the United States was allowed 143,500 tons, Great Britain 192,200 tons, and Japan 100,450 tons.

In the destroyer class Great Britain and the United States were allotted 150,000 tons each, and Japan 105,450. In submarines each of the three nations was allowed 52,700 tons.

The effect of these provisions was to change the Washington ratio in Japan's favor. The new ratio, instead of being 10:10:6, became officially Great Britain 10, United States 9:8 and Japan 6:3, though the United States obtained the right, if it desired, to attain a ratio of 10 by building the same tonnage of A and B cruisers as Britain.

In class A cruisers the United States is permitted under treaty terms to complete 15 cruisers by 1935; but the 3 additional cruisers of this type she is allowed to build must not be completed before 1936, 1937, and 1938, respectively. The treaty permits each of the signatories to construct not more than 25 percent of its total cruiser tonnage as so-called "flying-deck cruisers."

AGE LIMITS FIXED

The age limits of cruisers, destroyers, and submarines, after which replacements were to be permitted, were fixed by the treaty. Cruisers and destroyers laid down before January 1, 1920, were to be replaceable 16 and 12 years, respectively, after completion; but those laid down after that date were not to be replaced until after 20 and 16 years, respectively. Submarines were to become "over-age" and replaceable 13 years after completion.

Keels of destroyers built for replacement purposes must not be laid down more than 2 years before the vessels to be replaced became "over-age"; in the case of other vessels the time was extended to 3 years.

The treaty provided that any vessels in excess of the maximum allowed tonnages must be disposed of by the end of 1936; in other words, the total tonnages for each class at that time must not exceed the limits as itemized above and as collated in table I.

TABLE I.—Tonnage limits under treaties

	United States	Great Britain	Japan
Capital ships	525,000	525,000	315,000
Aircraft carriers	135,000	135,000	81,000
Cruisers A	180,000	146,800	108,400
Cruisers B	143,500	192,200	100,450
Destroyers	150,000	150,000	105,450
Submarines	52,700	52,700	52,700
Total	1,186,200	1,201,700	763,000

II. The navies today

The Washington Treaty undoubtedly was a major milestone in the history of navies, and many believe that the signing of that document was the beginning of what has been recently described as the "decadence" of the United States Fleet.

Prior to the Washington Treaty, by the terms of which the nations scrapped some 1,800,000 tons of fighting ships, built, building, and authorized, the United States Fleet was well on the way to becoming the world's most powerful. By far the greatest and most powerful battleships and battle-cruiser fleet in the world was on the ways in American shipyards in 1921.

SCRAPPING BY AMERICA

In 1924, if the Washington Treaty had not been signed, the capital-ship ratios of the three leading powers (with allowance for age) would have been as follows: United States, 815,467 tons; British Empire, 447,469 tons; Japan, 400,806 tons. The United States, under the terms of the treaty, scrapped 28 battleships and battle cruisers, a larger and stronger Navy than it retained.

Our destroyer fleet, turned out at the rate of one or more a month to meet the menace of the German submarine campaign, was hastily built, but it was modern, and it was far larger than that of any other power. In submarines we were numerically superior to other nations. Only in cruisers and auxiliaries were we inferior, and these were deficiencies which at that time were not so marked as they are today.

Compared with a built fleet tonnage of 1,960,480 for Great Britain in 1921, the American-built tonnage was only 1,289,463, but the United States had 734,926 tons of warships either under construction or authorized, compared with 215,380 for Great Britain. Japan's built tonnage was 523,689, and she had 805,188 tons of warships under construction or authorized. Adding together the tonnage built, building, or authorized would have given the United States a total of 2,024,389 tons, compared with 2,075,860 for Great Britain and 1,333,877 for Japan, with every prospect that the United States would pass Britain in a few years.

The treaty signed in 1922 changed the entire picture. It not only halted our building program but, according to views often expressed by Capt. Dudley W. Knox, United States Navy, retired, and other prominent naval officers, it marked the beginning of the "eclipse of American sea power."

From a position rapidly approaching marked superiority in naval strength, we adopted, by the treaty, the policy of parity. But in the years that followed this was a policy more honored in the breach than in the observance. While other powers built cruisers, destroyers, and submarines, in this country we rested on the laurels of our war activities, our ships grew old without replacements, and our treaty quotas were never filled.

Moreover, since naval strength, like everything else, is relative, and since the strength or weakness of our sea power must be gaged by the fleets of other powers, the change in ratio at London, though slight, was considered by naval officers a still further reduction in the strength of our fleet.

OUR PRESENT STANDING

Since the Treaty of London we have done practically no building except in the class A cruiser category, so that we are today in "under-age" or "modern" ships well below our treaty quotas in practically every type of warship. If "over-age" or "obsolete or obsolescent" vessels are included in the totals, the United States is well above its treaty quotas in destroyers and submarines, but such "over-age" ships as are in excess of treaty tonnage totals must be disposed of before the end of 1936, and since they are of dubious fighting value, they are not generally reckoned in comparing the strengths of the fighting fleets.

Table II gives the figures for 1933 in "under-age" and "over-age" vessels.

TABLE II.—Naval strength of the 3 leading sea powers in 1933

	Under-age vessels						Over-age vessels
	United States		Britain		Japan		United States		Britain		Japan
	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons
Capital ships	14	429,000	15	473,650	9	272,070	1	26,100
Carriers	3	77,500	6	115,350	4	68,870
Cruisers A	10	92,850	19	183,686	12	107,800	1	7,350			2	15,720
Cruisers B	10	70,500	24	114,020	17	81,455			9	36,885	3	11,920
Destroyers	14	16,560	40	52,849	72	93,205	237	250,910	116	123,490	31	28,680
Submarines	51	51,290	34	40,614	69	76,408	31	16,500	20	10,710	2	1,434
Total	102	738,000	138	980,169	183	699,808	270	300,860	145	171,055	38	57,754

A NAVAL OFFICER'S SUMMARY

The late Rear Admiral W. A. Moffett, United States Navy, recently declared:

"We have done almost no building as compared with the other signatories to the Washington Treaty. Since 1922 Japan has laid down or appropriated for 164 vessels, totaling 410,000 tons; Great Britain, 148 ships, totaling 470,000 tons. In the meantime the United States has appropriated for the niggardly total of 40 ships of 197,000 tons. The British and Japanese building programs have comprised practically every class of combatant vessel and have maintained their navies very nearly up to the full treaty strength.

"Moreover, it has been published in the newspapers of Japan that a navy consisting of cruisers, destroyers, and submarines would be built for the State of Manchukuo. Such a navy, of course, would not be subject to treaty limitations. Great Britain has just appropriated $24,000,000 for new vessels, and Japan has increased not only her navy but also her naval air force.

"Where does that put these various navies now, 10 years after the United States had a navy the equal of any in the world? In under-age, modern ships, Great Britain has 82 percent of her allowance, or 138 ships; Japan has 95 percent of her allowance, or 183 ships, and the once proud United States lags behind with only 102 ships, or 61 percent of her allowance."

Since the Treaty of London expires in 1936 and the contracting parties have agreed to meet in 1935 to frame a new treaty to replace it, the navies of all nations have been looking forward to 1935, and admirals and naval secretaries have been endeavoring to secure sufficient appropriations to build up to treaty strength before that time and thus place their own fleets in favorable positions before further negotiations are started.

THE STATUS IN 1936

In a recent communication to Representative HENRY T. RAINEY, of Illinois, Charles Francis Adams, former Secretary of the Navy, compared the numerical ship strengths of the United States, the British Empire, and Japan in 1936, provided all ships now authorized by the Governments of the three countries are completed, but no others. His comparison is based on the assumption that all signatories to the treaty will dispose of all tonnage above treaty quotas by that time and will complete all ships now authorized which may by the terms of the treaty be completed before that time.

By 1936, according to Mr. Adams' table, this country will have to dispose of many of the old destroyers which are now in excess of our treaty allowance, but will have only 12 new ones to replace them. His statistics, compiled in table III, give a picture of the numerical strength of the three principal navies for 1936.

TABLE III—Estimated strength in 1936

	United States			Britain			Japan
	Under-age	Over-age	Total	Under-age	Over-age	Total	Under-age	Over-age	Total
Capital ships	8	7	15	4	11	15	5	4	9
Carriers	3	1	4	6	------	6	4	------	4
Cruisers A	16	------	16	15	------	15	12	------	12
Cruisers B	10	------	10	17	9	26	18	------	13
Destroyers	12	115	127	56	49	105	70	6	76
Submarines	20	33	53	36	7	43	47	------	47
Total	69	156	225	134	76	210	156	10	161

In his letter Mr. Adams emphasized our scarcity of "under-age" ships. "Unless we keep pace with the cosigners of the treaty in providing new ships in advance", he wrote, "American officers and American men must fight in old, less powerful, less reliable, and perhaps even less numerous vessels than their adversaries."

III. The weak spots

The trend of American sea power since 1921 and the relative strength of the fleet today have been told in part by the foregoing statistics and comments. But figures never tell the whole tale and there is much of importance about which the public never hears. It is fairly generally agreed that the Navy has needs, but just what are those needs, and what the defects of the fleet?

Briefly put, the greatest needs of the fleet are new ships to replace our outworn destroyers and submarines and additional carriers and cruisers.

Deterioration has proceeded to such an extent, particularly in the destroyer squadrons, that one third of the fleet's operating time is allotted to material upkeep and overhaul. That is exclusive of the 2 months in every 18 that each ship is scheduled to spend in a navy yard, undergoing docking and major repairs. Seventy million dollars have been spent since 1922 in the modernization of our older battleships, and the annual bills for upkeep and repair of many of our old ships are 1½ to 2 times the annual upkeep cost of modern vessels. The annual repair bill of a new destroyer is about $25,000; for our old ships it is roughly $40,000 to $50,000.

BREAKDOWNS OF MACHINERY

Engineer officers of destroyers have a constant struggle with breakdowns of machinery parts of both minor and major character, and officers and crews have to labor long and hard to keep the ships running. Minor accidents have been caused by failure of worn-out machinery parts, and the frames and plating of many of the destroyers have become dangerously corroded.

One high-ranking officer of the fleet recently declared that our destroyers are so badly outclassed by the more modern ships of other nations that they would be but little better than "man traps" in case of war. Not only are our destroyers outgunned and outspeeded but few of them have sufficient cruising radius to cross the Atlantic without refueling, and none is capable of crossing the Pacific without refueling.

In addition to our deficiency in modern destroyers, our fleet has no destroyer leaders, and the lack of these little flagships is seriously felt, the Navy has declared.

The state of our submarine flotillas is not comparably as serious as that of the destroyers, but many of the older submersibles, which are already "over-age", are obsolescent and are becoming increasingly difficult and expensive to maintain.

The state of the air arm of the United States Fleet is excellent. Our naval air force as a whole is undoubtedly far more advanced in tactics and operations and is far more efficient as a fighting unit than the flying arm of any other fleet. Its mobility and its ability to concentrate a great number of planes at a given point is hampered, however, by our scarcity of carriers. The Saratoga and the Lexington are serviceable, but they are far too large and expensive for efficient operation, and they are not able to handle planes as expeditiously as is desirable. The Langley, an old, experimental ship, with capacity for only 40 planes, is the only other carrier in commission.

THE NEW "RANGER"

The Ranger, the 13,800-ton ship now building at Newport News, is the first American vessel to be built as a carrier from the keel up. She will be much smaller than the Saratoga and Lexington, thus presenting a smaller target to enemy guns, and with 3 elevators from hangar to flying deck, instead of 2, she will be able to handle her planes much more speedily than the larger carriers. Her addition to the fleet will fill a long-felt want, but she only meets part of the flying fleet's requirements. More carriers are still stressed as the greatest need of naval aviation, together with additional planes to man those carriers, planes of longer range and higher speed.

The cruiser problem has to some extent been solved by the recent addition to the fleet of the new 10,000-ton cruisers of the 8-inch-gun type, classed as cruisers A in the tables. These ships, despite their obvious and definite defects of design and construction, are considered highly valuable fighting units. Ten of them are already commissioned; 5 more of the 18 allowed us under the treaty are building; 1 other which cannot be completed according to treaty terms until 1936 has been appropriated for; and 2 others have been authorized and will probably be completed, if appropriations are forthcoming, in 1937 and 1938.

In the cruiser B category, which includes ships with guns of 6.1-inch caliber or less, our deficiency is more evident. Ten of these ships of the Detroit class, which were added to the fleet shortly after the Washington Treaty was ratified, are still in service, but we are still well short of the London Treaty quota for cruisers of this type. We have no flying-deck cruisers, and naval authorities, recognizing the increasing importance of the fleet air arm, wish to build 1 or 2 of these ships as soon as possible.

CAPITAL SHIPS

There is already agitation for battleship planning, although no capital-ship keels can be laid down before 1937. It has been suggested that designs be prepared for new battleships to replace such vessels as the New York and Texas, which, though modernized, are well outranged by the battleships of other powers. There is also demand on the part of many naval officers for higher capital-ship speed; none of our battleships is as fast as many of the foreign capital ships. Even the West Virginia, Colorado, and Maryland, the newest and most powerful battleships in our Navy, were criticized recently in Brassey's Naval Annual for what was described as their slow speed, deficient gun power, and inadequate armor protection.

Certain naval officers believe that some of our allowable capital-ship tonnage should be put into battle cruisers when the time comes for replacement building. This country has no battle cruisers; Great Britain has 3 and Japan 3.

All together, as compared with our treaty allowances, we are, or soon will be, short in "under-age" vessels 3 to 4 aircraft carriers (depending on size), totaling 55,200 tons; 7 cruisers, totaling 73,000 tons; 89 destroyers, totaling 133,500 tons; and about 20 submarines, totaling 25,630 tons. Two of the 8-inch-gun cruisers, though authorized, have not been appropriated for, so that the Navy needs about 121 ships of all types, totaling almost 300,000 tons, if it is to reach treaty strength.

OTHER ASPECTS

The question of readiness for war has more aspects, however, than merely that of up-to-date equipment. Our fleet today is ill prepared for a possible conflict, naval officers say, not only because of its numerical weakness and the obsolescence of many of its units, but because many of the ships are not in full commission, and most of them are undermanned.

We actually operate only 101 of the 251 destroyers we possess, and only 72 of those are in full commission—that is, ready for action immediately; 19 of the 101 are in the "rotating reserve" status devised by Admiral W. V. Pratt, retiring Chief of Naval Operations, and 10 others are in reduced commission; 42 of our 82 submarines are in full-operating commission. All of our aircraft carriers and cruisers are in full commission, but 3 of our 15 battleships are undergoing complete modernization which will require from 6 to 18 months to complete; and another, the Arkansas, is in use as a training ship in reduced commission.

All of the vessels, except submarines, are operating with about 85 percent of the enlisted complement that would be required in time of war.

IV. Proposed remedies

To the end of bringing the Navy up to treaty strength several bills were introduced in the last Congress. One, of which Representative VINSON of Georgia was the author, was primarily a replacement measure—a bill designed to replace our outworn ships and to add new ships in categories in which we are under treaty quotas over a period of years. It called for the construction of 120 ships at a total cost of $616,000,000, to be laid down progressively and gradually over a 10-year period. Its schedule provided about $18,000,000 for construction in 1933, increasing to a peak cost of about $90,000,000 in 1937.

LONG-TERM PROGRAM URGED

This bill would not have brought the fleet to parity by 1936, but the possibility of achieving this has been abandoned as not only chimerical but undesirable, because of the "lump" construction it would necessitate; and a long-term, reasoned, progressive building and replacement program providing for the gradual building up of the fleet and for replacements to keep it modern and up-to-date is favored by naval students in Congress.

The Hale bill, which passed the Senate at the last session, was in the form of a general authorization for the building of the Navy up to treaty strength.

A more recent measure, which has the approval of a number of administration supporters in Congress, including Representative VINSON, has attracted a great deal of comment. It calls for a construction program of 20 destroyers, 5 light cruisers, 4 submarines, and 1 aircraft carrier, at a cost of $230,000,000, to be spread over a 3-year period.

A PART-WAY MEASURE

This program, though a step toward parity, provides for only one third of the number of new ships that will be needed by 1936 to achieve such parity. It is clearly a concession on the part of "big Navy" supporters to the economic conditions of the country, even though the bill bears the ostensible label of unemployment relief. It does, however, represent a partial answer to the Navy's most pressing need—new ships—and, if enacted, it will undoubtedly be followed eventually by other legislation designed to bring the fleet to practical, rather than theoretical, parity.

Naval officers feel that immediate action on a replacement program of some sort is necessary. Vice Admiral W. H. Standley, who is mentioned as the probable Chief of Naval Operations to succeed Admiral Pratt, retiring, summed up the Navy's viewpoint succinctly when he said: "The greatest need of the American Navy today is a replacement program for the ships we have, and I don't mean a building program; I mean a replacement program. As Admiral Hugh Rodman used to say: 'Trying to operate a fleet which we do not keep up to date is about as useless as entering a jackass in the Kentucky Derby.'"

GOVERNMENT FINANCE

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an editorial by Lawrence Sullivan bearing upon the subject of Government finance.

Without objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PAPER SAVINGS

By Lawrence Sullivan

Hasty and quite informal calculations in the Bureau of the Budget have provided material this week for dangerously misleading reports to the effect that something more than $1,000,000,000 has been slashed from the Federal spending program for the fiscal year 1934, which begins next July 1. The figure is alluring in the headlines, but upon analysis the "economies" take place beside that invincible paper Navy which, a few years back, gave the United States undisputed hypothetical supremacy on the high seas.

Among savings tabulated in the $1,000,000,000 economy chart to date is an item of $250,000,000 to be realized in departmental reorganization. Thus far the only reorganization consummated is in the farm-credit agencies. Here the consolidation has been achieved by the President's Executive order. But as yet there has been no actual reduction in administrative expenses. On the contrary, new subordinates have been added to Director Morgenthau's staff. Operating expenses of this branch of the Government today are greater, not less, than 6 weeks ago.

Another item in the Budget Bureau's calculations contemplates combined reductions of $190,000,000 in Army and Navy expenditures next year. In the Navy $45,000,000 of this "economy" is mere bookkeeping, to be realized by transferring outlays for additions to the fleet from the current budget to a new sort of capital investment account. In the Army another $54,000,000 authorized for river and harbor works is "saved" by the same process, to be transferred later to the new public-works budget. After deducting these two items of pea-under-the-thimble bookkeeping, the net Army and Navy economies come to $101,000,000—not one dollar of which has been actually realized by statute or Executive proclamation.

Similarly, the post-office reductions are tabulated at $75,000,000, but only $30,000,000 of this amount has been realized.

Actual reductions in expenditures thus far ordered are about $400,000,000 a year in veteran awards, to begin July 1, and $100,000,000 in Federal salaries.

Against these total savings of $500,000,000, however, there rests the State-aid relief program, which calls for the same amount; the vast administrative machinery called for in the farm-commodity bill, the undeterminable charge against the Budget which is contemplated in the farm-mortgage bill to guarantee interest, and the unknown levy to be fixed against the Budget by the urban mortgage guaranty.

Plans have been launched which may require eventually as much as $8,000,000,000 in new Government credits, or Government-guaranteed securities.

It is impossible, of course, at this phase of the legislative program to calculate the net results for 1934 in anything but approximate round numbers. But even these figures serve well to present the entire picture of the Federal fiscal phantasmagoria today.

The final Budget estimates for 1934, submitted to Congress last December, showed a net deficit of $307,000,000, which, added to the $534,000,000 for statutory debt retirement, produced a red-ink "balance" against the Treasury aggregating $841,000,000 for the year. Last week President Roosevelt said that the December estimates of income taxes must be reduced by 20 percent. This increases the basic deficit for 1934 by approximately $200,000,000. The continued decline in postal revenues will further increase this prospective deficit by something like $50,000,000. Another $60,000,000 must be added to take account of appropriations enacted in the last session of Congress which were over and above the Budget. On this basis the primary deficit for 1934 stands at $1,151,000,000.

This deficit now must be further increased by estimated new charges as follows:

Increased interest	$50,000,000
Relief	200,000,000
Farm bill, if enacted	100,000,000
Total	350,000,000

These additions bring the basic deficit for 1934 to $1,501,000,000.

Partial offsets against this deficiency of revenues are:

Veterans' cuts	$450,000,000
Pay cut	100,000,000
Beer tax	125,000,000
Gasoline tax	137,000,000
Total	812,000,000

After deducting all the economies actually realized to date, and after adding all the new revenues hoped for, the final deficit for 1934 stands as of today at $689,000,000—if no additional expenditures are sought for the railroad program, Muscle Shoals and other extensive projects which are to come up in Congress next week.

As of June 30, 1934, therefore, Uncle Sam's deficit ledger will stand:

1931	$902,716,845
1932	2,885,362,299
1933	1,146,000,000
1934	689,000,000
Total	5,623,079,144

This steadily accumulating and still expanding excess of Federal outlay over Federal revenues explains completely why the United States, the most energetic and resourceful and the most richly blessed Nation on the face of the earth, is writhing today in the first agonies of an inflation orgy.

Obscure methods in accounting and inspired headlines in the newspapers will not hide the ultimate facts about the Federal finances.

No nation in modern history has experienced four successive budgetary deficits without heading for inflation.

No nation in all the history of the world ever has squandered itself out of a depression.

Soon or late the Government's Budget must be balanced.

Then, not before, recovery may begin.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the issue pending before the Senate is embodied in an amendment offered to House bill 3835, a measure proposing to relieve the existing economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power.

This amendment has for its purpose the bringing down or cheapening of the dollar, that being necessary in order to raise agricultural and commodity prices. This amendment having been completed in the main on Saturday, I have offered it to the pending bill, to be known as part 6, and to come at the end of the original bill.

The amendment as now pending before the Senate contains about four specific and definite propositions. The first part of the amendment has to do with conditions precedent to action being taken later. The second part of the amendment, if enacted into law, will provide that the Federal Reserve Board may initiate an open-market policy of buying outstanding Government bonds, paying for such bonds the total sum of $3,000,000,000 in the form of Federal Reserve notes. The second proposition, if enacted into law, will provide, if the first $3,000,000,000 are not sufficient to cheapen the dollar and to increase commodity prices, that then the Treasury shall have the power to issue a second $3,000,000,000 of Treasury notes for the purpose of meeting maturing Federal obligations and purchasing outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the Government, to the end that $3,000,000,000 more may be placed in circulation.

The third proposition provides that, if it is found necessary, the President, after investigation, may proceed to exercise the power conferred by the bill by reducing the gold content of the dollar.

The fourth proposition as now embodied in the amendment provides that the President, within his discretion, may accept the sum of $100,000,000 in silver at a price not exceeding 50 cents per ounce in payment of the interest due or principal owed us by foreign nations.

Mr. President, the amendment, in my judgment, is the most important proposition that has ever come before the American Congress. It is the most important proposition that has ever come before any parliamentary body of any nation of the world. Saving the single issue of the World War, there has been no issue joined in 6,000 years of recorded history as important as this issue pending here today.

Mr. President, it will be my task to show that if the amendment shall prevail it has potentialities as follows: It may transfer from one class to another class in these United States value to the extent of almost $200,000,000,000. This value will be transferred, first, from those who own the bank deposits. Secondly, this value will be transferred from those who own bonds and fixed investments.

I want to make that statement clear. No issue in 6,000 years save the World War begins to compare with the possibilities embraced in the power conferred by this amendment. Two hundred billion dollars now of wealth and buying power rests in the hands of those who own the bank deposits and fixed investments, bonds, and mortgages. That $200,000,000,000 these owners did not earn, they did not buy it, but they have it, and because they have it the masses of the people of this Republic are on the verge of starvation—17,000,000 on charity, in the bread lines.

If the amendment carries and the powers are exercised in a reasonable degree, it must transfer that $200,000,000,000 in the hands of persons who now have it, who did not buy it, who did not earn it, who do not deserve it, who must not retain it, back to the other side—the debtor class of the Republic, the people who owe the mass debts of the Nation.

Mr. President, why is it necessary to consider here on this April day a proposal of so vast importance to the people of the Nation? It is not only national today, it is international, it is world-wide, and the remedy that is proposed in this amendment today is becoming the basis of relief for some of the other nations of the world.

Mr. President, for 12 or 13 years a policy of deflation, placed in force in 1920–21, has been pursued and through that policy of deflation we have seen liquidation, we have seen bank failures, we have seen hoarding of money, both credits, bank deposits, and actual money, until today there is not enough money in circulation of all kinds and character, credits and bank deposits and actual currency, with which to transact the business of the Republic. That is the proposition upon which I stand today on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DICKINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. During the progress of my discussion I shall be glad to yield for any question or suggestion. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. I wondered if I had heard accurately the Senator's statement that no bank deposits were earned.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I did not intend to go that far.

Mr. ADAMS. I understood the Senator to say there is $200,000,000,000 that would be involved, and among the items affected are bank deposits which were not earned.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall come to that in a moment. When I come to it the Senator will see the bank deposits on the one side neutralize the debts due the bank on the other, so they go out of the equation. I will come to that later in my discussion. I shall be glad to answer any questions if I can, and to have any Senator make suggestions if anyone so desires.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. REED. Do I understand the Senator correctly when I heard him say that the purpose of his amendment is to transfer $200,000,000,000 of wealth from the creditor class in America to the debtor class? Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Unless that is done, the debtor class will not have done to them substantial justice, as I shall show before I conclude.

Mr. REED. And that is the motive and purpose of the Senator's amendment?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; I beg the pardon of the Senator from Pennsylvania. My purpose is to add another plan to raise the commodity prices of the farmers of America and of the producers of raw material so they can live.

Mr. REED. I understood the Senator to say the purpose of his amendment is to transfer $200,000,000,000 of wealth, which had not been earned by its owners, to the debtor class in America, and therefore it is the most important matter that had come up in 6,000 years. Did I hear the Senator incorrectly?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I made the statement that it might have that possibility; but if that is done, it will not then have done fair and equal justice to the people of these United States. If the Senator will remain and listen to me, I shall be able to show him. This appeal is directed largely to the Senator from the State of Pennsylvania. He stands in this body unique, not all that is left of a regime that is now history but the outstanding spokesman of that regime. He is the leader here today, Mr. President, the full general in behalf of that battled army, vanquished last November and disbanded on the 4th of March.

Mr. President, I come now to the details. In 1930 we had about $100,000 less than $60,000,000,000 in the banks of the United States. I welcome challenges to any statement I make. I have the data. When the depression started, the banks of America—28,000 of them then—had on deposit a little less than $60,000,000,000. How much have they today? Twenty-eight thousand banks have dwindled to a bare 15,000 banks. Sixty billion dollars of deposits have dwindled to scarcely $30,000,000,000 of deposits. What has become of that $30,000,000,000 in the banks of the Nation less than 3 years ago? I pause for reply.

Mr. President, the money is gone. It does not today exist. Thirty billions of money that we had only 3 years ago has ceased today to exist. It has evaporated. It has vanished.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. How much money does the Senator estimate is tied up in the banks in the form of frozen deposits?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is practically all tied up in the way of frozen deposits. I will come to that later. We now have about $14,000,000,000 of deposits in the remaining open banks of the United States which are free, which can be checked upon at this moment. There is about $18,000,000,000 in banks in time deposits which can be had very readily, but not immediately. So, from $60,000,000,000 of money in the banks 3 years ago, we have today scarcely 30 billions of money in the banks. Yet we are told there is plenty of money; that the trouble in the country today is not because we have not the money but because the money is not circulated.

Mr. President, during the past 3 years, because of the scarcity of money and because of deflation, a policy of liquidation has been pursued. Borrowers in the banks were called upon to pay their loans. They had to pay if they could, and when they paid their loans oftentimes that much credit was destroyed. The books are balanced, and the items are wiped from the deposit list. That is the first way the deposits went down.

The second way the deposits went down in the past 3 years is as follows: We have had about 10,000 bank failures, liquidations, and consolidations. When a bank fails, oftentimes the loss is severe, so that through liquidation, the payment of loans to banks, and the cancelation of credits through failed banks and the loss of the money, we have lost that gigantic sum.

Here is the result. I quote from the annual report of the Comptroller of the Currency of date December 5, 1932. If anyone challenges my statement that we had approximately sixty billions of money on deposit in the banks less than 3 years ago, I have the report here. Here is the report of what it was the 1st day of last June. The total money on deposit on the 30th day of last June was $45,390,209,000.

Mr. President, there is a loss of $15,000,000,000 in bank deposits since 1929 and 1930. Where has that money gone? It is not in the banks. It could not be hoarded, because 2 or 3 years ago there was only $4,000,000,000 of money in circulation, real money—gold, silver, and paper. This money never existed except in confidence and credit. It was the kind of money that was created when an old farmer would go down to his bank and say, "Mr. Banker, I need a thousand dollars." In former times the banker would say, "Yes, Mr. A; glad to accommodate you", and hand him out a note, which the farmer would sign, for $1,000, due in 30, 60, or 90 days. The banker took the farmer's note, entered on the passbook the date and the amount, and the transaction was complete. Under the law the farmer has the right, along with others, to convert his property, his collateral, his good name into deposit money; and when that transaction was completed on that day in that bank, $1,000 of credit money, deposit money, was placed in the bank where the transaction was had; and when night came, and the books were balanced, the bank showed a thousand dollars more in deposits than it had that morning.

Did the farmer put a single dollar in that bank—a single copper penny? No; but the bank's books showed a thousand dollars more of deposits in that bank that night than they showed that morning when the books were opened.

Mr. President, until the 30th day of last June, according to this report, the bank deposits decreased from 60 billions to 45 billions; but that is not all the decrease. From last June until the bank holiday they decreased still further; and we have the information—not official—that when the bank holiday came on the 4th day of March, or thereabouts, the bank deposits had fallen from 45 billions down to 40 billions. In 6 months' time we lost $5,000,000,000 more of money through liquidation and through the failure of banks.

But that is not all. When the bank holiday came and was over, 5,000 banks failed to open, and those 5,000 banks, it is estimated, had $5,000,000,000 more of its credit money, deposit money, on their books. When those banks failed to open $5,000,000,000 more of the money of the country was, for the time being at least, destroyed and canceled.

Take the $5,000,000,000 of losses from the 30th day of June until the banking holiday from $45,000,000,000, and that leaves $40,000,000,000. Substract from the $40,000,000,000 the $5,000,000,000 that is in the closed banks today, in the hands of conservators or in banks not open, and that brings you down to $35,000,000,000 on deposit in the banks.

But perhaps that is not all. Much of this money is in hoarding. We have a very large sum of money in circulation; that is true; but there has not been a day in the past 10 or 12 years, until this emergency came, when all the banks of the Nation had in their vaults at one time the sum of $1,000,000,000 of real money—of gold, of gold certificates, of silver, of silver certificates, of Federal Reserve notes, of Federal Reserve bank notes, of Treasury notes, of Treasury notes of 1900, any kind of money. There was not a single night in 10 or 12 years, even when we had 31,000 banks open, when the banks all together on any one night had in their vaults the sum of a single billion dollars, even though they had on their books in deposits the sum of $60,000,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wonder if the Senator has contemplated what would happen if the situation I present were to come to pass: Suppose we pass the inflation measure and put it into effect. Suppose, as a consequence, stock, bond, and commodity prices advance. Now, suppose at the world conference we agree with France and England and other nations to stabilize the dollar. In the meantime we have driven up commodity and stock and bond prices to a point higher than their present level.

When we agree with France and with England to stabilize our money, if we do, then the reverse process will occur. In other words, the dollar then will decrease in value, and commodities will decrease, and we will have to a lesser extent, perhaps, gone back over the history from 1918 to 1929, namely, of driving values up higher than where they deserved to be, and then deflating. Now we are driving them up again; and if we effect these treaties stabilizing international currencies, then we will deflate again and will have the patient perhaps in the position of one who has had pneumonia and gotten up too quickly and had a relapse and gone back to bed again.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Would not that depend upon the basis upon which we stabilized the currency?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; to some extent it would; but I assume that the Senator from Oklahoma is predicating his remarks on the theory that our currency will be greatly inflated. If it is a small inflation, then the amount of good will not be as great as he pictures. If it is a large inflation, then the amount of deflation must correspondingly be large when monetary stocks are revalued.

If the Senator will permit me just a minute more—because he probably will take up this subject in his discussion, and I am asking simply for information—there is some talk in the press this morning of France's further devaluating her money stocks. She has about three and a half billion dollars' worth of gold. Her franc is now stabilized at about 4 cents instead of 20. England is also contemplating, so we learn, a further debasement of the pound. If that is the case, then, if we do inflate, must we inflate still more as each one of these other monetary stocks starts the spiral? And, if so, where is the end?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I shall not be drawn into a discussion of what France may do, or even what Great Britain may do. Neither will I speculate upon the farmers of the country getting too much for their wheat or their corn or their cotton. Until they approximate the cost of production, I shall not in any sense become alarmed; but as I proceed the Senator may gather an answer, in a general way, from my remarks.

I have just stated that we now have on deposit around $30,000,000,000 in the remaining open banks of this Nation. Those $30,000,000,000 of deposits are divided into two classes: First, into demand deposits, and, second, into time deposits; demand deposits being those against which the owner can write his check from day to day; time deposits being those placed in the bank upon contract to remain for a specified time, but to be withdrawn upon a certain amount of notice.

On the last day of June 1932 the 45 billions then on deposit were divided as follows: There were $16,000,000,000 in demand deposits, and there were $24,000,000,000 in time deposits; but from the 30th of June until the banking holiday we lost 5 billions. If the amount of demand deposits went down in the same proportion as the amount of time deposits, then at the end of the bank holiday we had some $13,000,000,000 in demand deposits and $21,000,000,000 in time deposits. But when the bank holiday was over, 5,000 banks did not open, so there were approximately $5,000,000,0000 more of money that was not available. Take the same proportion and take $2,000,000,000 more from 13 billions, and it leaves $11,000,000,000 of demand deposits in the country today to transact the business of the Nation. It leaves, if we take the same proportion from time deposits, 18 billions of time deposits that the people could get if they wanted the money—and perhaps they will—but it is not subject to check. Add the 18 and 11, and it gives us $29,000,000,000 as the total amount of money in all the open banks of the Nation today with which to transact the business of the Nation, one half of the money we had only 3 years ago.

If we did not have too much money then, we certainly have too little money now, because the supply and the quantity and the amount we had 3 years ago are lessened today by approximately one half. That is the reason, Mr. President, why I have occupied so much of the time of the Senate in trying to call these facts to the attention of the Senate, and thereby to the attention of the country.

Now, Mr. President, let me come to the phase of this discussion suggested by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED].

I made the statement a while ago that this amendment can take 200 billions of wealth from those who did not earn it and did not buy it and transfer it to the other side of the ledger—to the farmers who have lost it, to the real-estate owners who have lost it, to the unemployed, the city dwellers who have lost it—and yet substantial justice will not have been done to that debtor class.

I exhibit before you statistics prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, and I exhibit a sheet entitled "Purchasing Power of the Dollar Expressed in Terms of Wholesale Prices."

In 1926 this table of wholesale prices gave the dollar the value of 100 cents; and I start from that base.

Today the dollar has risen in buying power until it not only has buying power to the extent of 100 cents, but of 200 cents; but that is not all. In February of this year the dollar, measured by farm commodities, was worth $2.44½. In other words, Mr. President, the farmer in Oklahoma, the farmer in South Carolina, the farmer in Nebraska, the farmer in Vermont or Connecticut, the farmer anywhere in America, today must produce and sell upon the market $2.44½ worth of his labor, his time, his sweat, his products, to get a dollar. So far as the farmer is concerned, every dollar that he has is worth $2.44½.

My statement made a moment ago, that if we should transfer 200 billions of wealth from the class who hold fixed investments to the farmer class, to the unemployed class, to the real-estate class, to the debtor class, we still would not do substantial and exact justice, is accurate because my figures were based upon halving the dollar in buying power today. Cut the dollar in two; take from the dollar $1.22¼, and you leave in the dollar $1.22¼, and still the farmer of America would have to toil and sweat and produce value to the extent of $1.22¼ to get every dollar that he must have to pay his taxes, and to pay his interest, and to pay his debts, and to keep the sheriff from his door.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator has there a list of the farm commodities upon which these figures are based, I think it would be enlightening if he would put them in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. This exhibit states that these data were prepared from a series of products embracing 784 commodities. Those are not all farm commodities. The farm commodities were taken as generally as the Department could gather them, and the general average was taken and the farm values based upon that wide selection of farm commodities selected and the average taken.

In order to go through the list and to be fair, I want to place this in the RECORD:

The dollar hangs most heavily upon the farming class, because the farmer has to work and produce goods to sell for $2.44½ in order to get a dollar. Those who produce food, and food alone, must produce value to the extent of $1.86 $^{2}/_{10}$ in order to get a dollar. Those who produce hides and leather products must produce $1.47 worth of commodities to get a dollar.

Textile products: Those who are engaged in the production of those commodities must produce value to the extent of $1.95 plus in order to get a dollar.

Fuel and lighting: Those who are engaged in that industry must produce $1.57 plus in order to get a dollar.

Metals and metal products: Those who are engaged in mining must produce value to the extent of $1.29 plus in order to get a dollar.

Building material: Those who are engaged in the growing of lumber, the processing of lumber, and the handling of lumber must produce wealth to the extent of $1.43 in order to get a dollar.

Chemicals and drugs: Those who are engaged in that industry must produce value to the extent of $1.40 plus in order to get a dollar.

House-furnishing goods: Those who are engaged in that industry must produce value to the extent of $1.38 in order to get a dollar.

Miscellaneous: Those who are engaged in the production of general miscellaneous articles must produce value to the extent of $1.68 plus in order to get a dollar.

Taking all the industries of the United States, including farm products, based on 784 commodities, the dollar, on an average, is worth $1.67 plus. In other words, there is a favored class, consisting of those who hold fixed investments in the form of bonds, in the form of notes, any class of fixed investment, even though it be a salary—although we have learned recently that salaries are not fixed investments, and that wages are not fixed investments, and if this process keeps on, as it has been going, accentuated in the last 3 years, and further accentuated in the last 2 months, wages will have been depleted and there will be nothing left; salaries will have been depleted and there will be nothing left. Members of Congress will be lucky in the next 12 months to receive salaries of $5,000 per annum.

Mr. President, my statement a moment ago, based upon the present value of the dollar, was only taking one half of the dollar, taking $1.22¼ from the dollar, leaving the dollar worth $1.22¼, and the farmers still have to pay that much to get a dollar. But based upon that analysis, this amendment, if it only goes to that extent, will have the potentiality of transferring wealth now in the hands of one class, which did not earn it, did not buy it, does not deserve it, to the class which lost it, and which must have it back if this Nation is to survive.

While the purpose of the amendment is to raise commodity prices, let me state what will happen under it. I do not say to what extent; I will not be administrator of the power conferred by the amendment. It is possible that nothing might be done under the amendment, but I have a conviction and confidence that something will happen under it.

The dollar will be cheapened, its buying power will be reduced, and, to the extent that the dollar is brought down in buying power, to the extent that its value is taken out, to that same extent will commodity prices rise. Wheat will go up in value, corn will go up in value, cotton will go up in value, every commodity of the field and the farm and the ranch and the lumberyard and the mine will share in the general prosperity. Yet the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, leading the remnants of a vanquished army upon this floor, protests against the cheapening of the dollar a single penny.

Mr. President, in the past 2 or 3 years the demand deposits in the banks have decreased almost $10,000,000,000. In the past 3 years wages of the laboring people of the country have decreased approximately $10,000,000,000 more. In the past 3 years the national income has fallen from $90,000,000,000 down to thirty-odd billion. Fifty billions of wealth created during a 3-year period in former times has been lost; during the past 3 years that much has been lost each year. Yet the Senator from Pennsylvania wants to continue the downward trend, apparently, to keep this loss a loss upon the people of the United States, to keep this loss to the wage earners of the Nation, to keep these deposits down, and not revive the deposits either in currency or in the credit of the Nation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator says that 50 billion of wealth was lost. Is he not inaccurate in that? Is it not true that there is just as much wealth in the United States as there ever was, but that, through the enhancement of the value of the dollar, that wealth has been transferred to other people, liquidated, squeezed out, handed over to other people?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator is exactly right, but his statement covers two propositions. The Senator is exactly right in his statement, but I made the statement that in the past year we have lost $50,000,000,000 of buying power through the loss of national income. That buying power is America's real wealth. The Nation and its people have lost $50,000,000,000. Because they have not made as much money, have not collected as much money this year as they did last, they have lost $50,000,000,000 in buying power, whether or not we call it wealth. It might not have been wealth, but at least it serves the purpose of securing the thing which wealth sometimes secures.

Mr. President, the record shows that there are today about $12,000,000,000 on deposit in the open banks of the Nation, and only about $12,000,000,000. Even those $12,000,000,000 are based upon assets which are not liquid. Banks cannot collect the notes which are due the banks. Every time there is a dollar in a bank on deposit there are two debts involved. There is the debt, first, which the bank owes the owner of the deposit. That is debt no. 1. Then there is debt no. 2. Someone owes the bank that dollar which the bank must have to pay its depositor. So these twelve billions of bank deposits are based upon a compound debt—first, debts the banks owe the depositors, and which the banks cannot pay. Less than 2 months ago that statement was justified. Last winter, only a few months ago, I heard the statement on this floor that the banks were full of money, and that what we needed was not to have more money in the banks but to have something else. Let me ask those who say that the banks were full of money, why every bank in the Nation closed less than 2 short months ago?

Mr. President, the total bank deposits have diminished from $60,000,000,000 to possibly $30,000,000,000. The demand deposits have decreased from $24,000,000,000 to approximately $12,000,000,000. I claim now that that is not enough money with which to transact the business of the greatest, the richest, the strongest, and the most influential nation of the earth.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LONG. At that point, has the Senator the figures as to what the bank checks were along about 1928, as compared with today? Have they not fallen something like 65 or 70 percent?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They have fallen approximately 60 percent. I have the statement of those who should know to the effect that at the peak of prosperity, in 1928 and 1929, the total circulation of bank-deposit money annually amounted to about twelve hundred billion dollars. Now it is down to about $500,000,000,000. In other words, the people of the Nation, because of frozen assets, because of a decreased amount of money in circulation, because of a diminishing amount of money in the bank, have lost in 3 years in the circulation of bank checks the difference between $500,000,000,000 and $1,200,000,000,000. Yet some wonder why we are having trouble in the United States and say that if we could only have a return of confidence things would be lovely.

Mr. President, I have tried to state upon this floor hour after hour that we could not make any progress with any matter satisfactorily until we took up and adjusted the money question. That opinion seems to prevail very largely today not only in the United States but throughout the world.

I made the statement a moment ago that this deflation, started in 1920 and 1921, has been going on all these years. It hit the farmer first, it hit the stockman second, it hit the small merchant third, it hit the little bank, and then the wholesale houses, and then it hit the factories, then the railroads, and at last it struck the Nation.

Mr. President, it has been stated upon this floor time and time again that this catastrophe did not have to happen. Who brought about this terrific cyclone and tornado and hurricane? There is one branch of our Government specially charged with the duty of handling money, created for that purpose. I refer to the Federal Reserve Board. Perhaps Senators might be startled if I were to tell them that since the 9th day of March, a little more than 30 days ago, the Federal Reserve Board, acting for a Nation that is ill, has canceled credits in the banks to the extent of $1,154,000,000. Since the 9th day of March, scarcely a month ago, the Federal Reserve Board, presuming to act for the people of the United States, has taken from circulation and canceled money to the amount of $1,470,000,000.

Think of it, Mr. President; with only $12,000,000,000 in the banks subject to check; much of the actual money being in hoarding, not subject to use, the Board which handles the finances of the United States and the money of the United States in the past month has withdrawn from circulation a billion and a half dollars, and for the time being has canceled that money.

I hold in my hand a tabulation of the Federal Reserve Board itself showing the progressive deflation from week to week, and in order that the record may be clear, I will place these figures in the RECORD.

On March 9, 1933, the total Reserve bank credits amounted to the sum of $3,644,000,000. There was money in circulation, partly in the banks, partly in hoarding, partly in the tills of the country, partly in the safe-deposit boxes, partly in the packets of the people, partly in foreign lands, in the total sum on March 9 of $7,538,000,000.

What happened? Within the next 7 days following the 9th of March 1933, this is what the agent of the Congress did, and I so describe it because section 8 of article I of the Constitution provides that the Congress shall coin money and regulate its value, and its value can only be regulated through keeping money in circulation, or raising or decreasing the gold content of the dollar. What did our agent do in the next 7 days following the 9th of March? It canceled $119,000,000 worth of bank credit. It took from circulation the sum of $269,000,000.

In the next 7 days our agent canceled bank credits to the extent of $638,000,000 and took from circulation the sum of $661,000,000.

In the next 7 days our agent canceled bank credits to the extent of $199,000,000, and during the same 7 days, ending on March 30, it took from circulation the sum of $255,000,000.

In the next 7 days your agents, Mr. President, and my agents canceled bank credits in the sum of $114,000,000 and took from circulation the sum of $92,000,000. In the next 7 days the Federal Reserve Board canceled bank credits in the sum of $46,000,000 and took from circulation the sum of $114,000,000. And on last Thursday, at 4 o'clock, when the last statement was issued for the preceding 7 days—that is the last report I have—your agents, Mr. President, and the agents of the Congress took from circulation the sum of $79,000,000 and canceled bank credits to the extent of $38,000,000. These sums, when added, make a cancelation of bank credits aggregating $1,154,000,000 and a cancelation of money in circulation in the total sum of $1,470,000,000. Yet the Senator from Pennsylvania is apparently satisfied with this very accentuated policy of deflation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it would enlighten the Senate and add to the value of the discussion if the Senator would tell the Senate just how the Federal Reserve banks did what he has described.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. During the past year the Federal Reserve banks went into the open market and bought almost $2,000,000,000 worth of Government bonds and paid for those bonds with Federal Reserve notes. From time to time the Federal Reserve Board, acting through the Federal Reserve banks, goes on the open market; it comes to Washington and takes up Treasury bills offered for sale by the Treasury from week to week and month to month, so that the Federal Reserve banks have this vast amount of bonds, almost $2,000,000,000 worth, and in addition all this vast sum of Treasury bills, short-term obligations.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, my attention was distracted, and I did not hear the concluding figures on the date the Senator mentioned as to the amount of currency outstanding. Will he repeat the figures for my benefit?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. On the 20th day of April, last Thursday, at 4 o'clock, the amount of money in circulation was $6,068,000,000.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Answering the Senator from Nebraska, the Federal Reserve Board has this vast sum in bonds on hand, for which it paid Federal Reserve notes of the Federal Reserve System, and through the Federal Reserve banks it has a vast sum of short-term obligations on hand, for which it paid either credit or in effect money.

Now, here is what happened: According to the statment of March 16, the Federal Reserve Board sold $182,000,000 worth of its bills. That money was in circulation, but the Federal Reserve Board did not want it to remain in circulation. So they put out a sponge and absorbed the money, drew it back, by selling their bills and requiring the purchaser to pay for them in the coin of the realm; and when they sold bills to the amount of a million dollars they withdrew and extracted from circulation the sum of $1,000,000 in currency.

They sold again in that same week $14,000,000 worth of such bills. That week they sold only $1,000,000 worth of their bonds. That was a start. The next week the Federal Reserve System put out this sponge again and sold bills, requiring the purchasers to pay currency, gold or silver or what not—actual money. That week they sold $561,000,000 of their holdings. They must have had a big sponge that week or they must have placed their sponge all over the United States, because in 1 week's time they disposed of their holdings of bills held in the sum of over half a billion dollars, and at one fell swoop they withdrew from circulation $561,000,000. That same week they withdrew $51,000,000 more; for that same week they sold $16,000,000 of Government bonds. They bought all the bills they could; and then they began to sell their bonds, because they could not get the currency in quite fast enough by selling just the bills alone.

The next week the Federal Reserve Board sold $126,000,000 worth of bills, and again $42,000,000 of bills; and in that week they also sold $26,000,000 of Government bonds which they had bought last year. When they sell these issues they take that much money from circulation. During the next week the Federal Reserve Board sold $109,000,000 worth of their bills and $24,000,000 more of their bills, but that week they only sold one million of their holdings of United States bonds. The next week, the week ending April 15, the Federal Reserve banks only sold $8,000,000 of their bills of one issue. Then they sold $39,000,000 more, but that week they did not sell any securities. I would not be surprised, however, if along about that time a most responsible member of the Federal Reserve Board who had been pursuing this policy got information from some source that his policy was not in harmony with the intent and purpose of the present administration. About that time I heard that he was considering resigning. Whether or not he has resigned, I do not know; but evidently the Board has been checked in its ruthless policy of taking money from circulation.

Last week—that is, for the week ending April 20—the Board sold $14,000,000 worth of bills, and again $39,000,000 worth of bills; but they sold no Government obligations that week. That explains the method by which the Federal Reserve Board, acting through the several Federal Reserve banks, can take money from circulation.

They can put money in circulation, as they did last year, by buying Government bonds and bills and paying for those bonds and bills with Federal Reserve notes. They did that last year to the extent of about a hundred million dollars per week; they bought about $1,200,000,000 worth of Government bonds. But the banks, or those who owned the banks, held these bonds, and as soon as the Federal Reserve System bought the bonds and paid money to the banks, or to those who owned the banks, the banks owing the Federal Reserve System, not being able to loan money—because there are no securities which are making money—the banks, to save interest to the Federal Reserve System, sent the money back and paid their obligations. To that policy I agree, for there has been no property in the past 12 months until recently on which a bank dared to loan money. They will loan on Government bonds, but those who own Government bonds do not have to borrow; there is always a market for Government bonds, and they have been above par a good part of the time. So that those who own the bonds are not borrowers, in the main. There is now no property save one single class on which the banks of the Nation dare to loan the money of their depositors. There is one class of property today that is making money. Those who own breweries can get loans today. The breweries are making money. Those who own glass factories and glass-bottle works can get money today at the banks. The banks are making loans to them because those industries are making money. The makers of bottles, proceeding along with the beer traffic, are prosperous. Then, we have the hop industry, and those who own hop farms today have buying power and can secure loans.

If they need money they can get it; but, save the interests represented by the brewing establishments and allied institutions, there is no class of industry today of which I know that is making money sufficiently to enable a bank's officers to make a loan to it. Banks do not loan their own money; in the main they loan the money of their depositors. Of that money the banks are only the guardians and the trustees, and they do not dare to take a chance loaning the money of their depositors of which they are the trustees and guardians to any person upon any industry unless the bank is sure as nearly as may be that not only the principal will be paid but likewise the interest. That is the reason why the banks are not loaning money; that is the reason why the banks cannot loan money; and until this money question is settled and adjusted the banks cannot loan money. I do not care how much money they may have in their vaults, they do not dare to take that chance.

Mr. President, what is the condition today? I will not dwell on it at any length. I just want to call attention to one or two facts. A few days ago Mr. Green, of the American Federation of Labor, made the statement that we have today 13,000,000 unemployed people in these United States. I hope that is not true, but I am afraid it is. Times have gotten so bad, Mr. President, through unemployment, through the scarcity of money, through the lack of credit, business being at a standstill, that the people cannot get money with which to pay their taxes. Taxes are not being paid because taxes cannot be paid. States, towns, villages, counties, and the Nation itself are having difficulty in getting money to keep themselves going concerns.

I have here a statement—it is the result of a debate that was held recently—of which the headlines are as follows:

Many cities' plans to reorganize told. Hall and Kiplinger in joint discussion over radio.

I quote the first paragraph of the body of the article:

Thousands of big and little cities, villages, counties, townships, and other local districts are planning wide-spread reorganization of their government, Arnold Bennett Hall, director of the Institute for Government Research of the Brookings Institution, declared last night.

Mr. President, what does that mean? It means that the cities of the country, the counties, the States cannot secure payment of their taxes, and, realizing that they cannot secure payment of their taxes, these cities, these municipalities, are preparing to go through what might be termed "bankruptcy" to rid themselves of the obligations now hanging over them upon which they cannot even pay the interest. That is what faces America. There is no chance for these cities to collect taxes on the basis of a 2.44 dollar; there is no chance for the counties to collect taxes on the basis of a 2.44 dollar; there is no chance for the States to collect taxes on the basis of a 2.44 dollar to pay their expenses. The people have not paid their taxes; they are not paying their taxes, and they cannot pay them; and what are we going to do about it?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUFFY in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I just want to interject that the 2.44 dollar does not tell the whole story. Many of these municipal obligations were incurred during the period of 1920 to 1921, when the dollar was worth about 60 cents. So, instead of being on a 2.44-to-1 basis, many of them are having to discharge debts that they really contracted on a 60-cent basis, so that it is really a 4-to-1 basis for many of them.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I thank the Senator for his contribution.

Mr. President, I will quote from the public press some news items. I will not mention the city, but there is no one in this presence but who knows what city is referred to. Omitting the name of the city:

——— march to help teachers. Twenty thousand in mile-long parade demand payment of salaries overdue 8 months.

Another news item:

Teachers riot in ———.

I read again:

Twenty-five thousand in —— city teachers' parade.

What does that mean, Mr. President? The teachers perhaps could not put on much of a revolution. Were they properly aroused, even those teachers no doubt could put up a fight.

I now call attention to a report which appeared in the public press yesterday. I hold in my hands a copy of the New York Times of date Sunday, April 23. I will omit the name of the State:

Crisis threatens ——— State schools. Shortage of funds has closed 85 percent, with remainder on part time. Situation growing worse. Apart from national slump, the State's finances are at the lowest ebb since 1865. Teachers suffering. Some live in school houses and exist on donated vegetables. Merchants refuse scrip.

That is only a sample. What has happened and is happening in that Southern State is happening in the Western States, the Northern States, and the Eastern States. I do not need to dwell upon conditions as they exist today.

I said a moment ago that the deflation initiated in 1920–21 has been going on for these 12 or 13 years. It first hit the farmers, second the livestock men, and then others, until today no one is escaping except those holding tax-exempt gold bonds, and if they only knew it they are hurt, and badly hurt. They have waited too long. There was a time when they could have saved themselves by yielding a portion of their unearned increment. That time has passed. The deflation did not stop on the 4th of March, much to my regret. It has gone on. It could not have been avoided, and I will tell why.

The banks were closed when the present administration came into power. This administration found every bank in the United States closed. Then, as soon as the administration was installed, the first problem was to try to get the banks reopened. Fortunately, in a week or 10 days' time most of the banks were opened. Five thousand were not opened, and those 5,000 banks had on their books a total sum of approximately $5,000,000,000. That $5,000,000,000 in the closed banks, for the time being, had just as well have been in the center of the Atlantic Ocean. It is not in circulation. It is not of service. It cannot be had. I hope it comes to life, and very shortly, but today that money is dead. That was a further deflationary act.

Then when the banks reopened all gold was kept from circulation and all gold certificates were withdrawn, and all gold and gold certificates in circulation were ordered withdrawn, taking that much additional money from circulation—another deflationary act.

Then the Federal Reserve Board, as I have already shown, began to contract bank credits and circulation, taking out of the banks and removing from circulation almost one half of the real money of the Nation. That was a further act of deflation.

We cannot escape the conclusion that the economy bill was a further act of deflation, because when we sever persons from the public pay roll or the private pay roll they have lost that much buying power, and to the extent that those persons throughout the country have been discharged, not only from Government but private employment, just to that extent deflation was accentuated. The bill we passed had a further deflationary effect by cutting down the salaries of those who remained upon the public pay roll. Private industry took advantage of that to slash again. A few nights ago I had the privilege of attending a banquet presided over by one of the great industrialists of the United States. He had on either side of him other industrialists of the United States. These industrial heads told that assembled gathering that for months they had had but two duties to perform because of no business—first, cutting off heads; and, second, cutting down salaries. So the economy bill, whatever we may think about it, was another act of deflation.

The reduced appropriations which have been and are being cut off for all sorts of public purposes, not only by the National Government but by the States, are likewise a deflationary move. If we are to continue in this line, let me make this prophecy. Germany is held up to the American people as a ghost of inflation. If deflation is carried on to its ultimate end, deflation will result exactly in America as inflation resulted in Germany. The people will lose their property, those who hold fixed investment, such as United States bonds, State bonds, corporation bonds, notes, and mortgages, will see them defaulted, repudiated, and their paper will be worthless.

Mr. President, my State is a great agricultural State. In the southern part of my State we produce not much else but cotton. Thirty-five counties in Oklahoma are cotton-producing counties. All landowners and tenants and wage earners in the cities in that section live upon cotton. In the northern half of my State we have a wheat-growing section. The farmers, the tenants, the laborers in the cities, live upon wheat. Interspersed in the south and north halves of my State we grow corn. We grow almost everything produced in the North and likewise in the South, so Oklahoma is a great farming state, primarily a farming State. It is true we have oil, we have coal, we have lead and zinc, we have lumber, but in the end those will disappear and the lands alone will remain for future years. When the lead and zinc and coal and oil are gone we will still have our farms, we will still be inhabited by the farmers and by the tenants.

Let me place in the RECORD at this point what we have been forced to sell our products for in Oklahoma during the past 12 months. Wheat has sold by the farmer in Oklahoma in a range of 15 to 30 cents per bushel. Corn has sold by the farmer in a range of 8 to 15 cents a bushel. Oats have sold in Oklahoma in a range between 7 and 10 cents a bushel. Cotton sold during the past fall in a range from 5 to 6½ cents a pound. Hogs have sold around $2.75 per hundred, and cattle around $3 per hundred.

Mr. President, in Oklahoma, as in all wheat-growing States, wheat in the past 12 months has been the lowest in recorded history. Four hundred years of the record of wheat prices has not seen wheat so low as it has seen wheat in the past 12 months. Yet the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] wants my farmers to keep on raising wheat at a lower price than it has been in 400 years, in order that the holders of tax-exempt bonds may draw dollars at the rate of $2.44 per dollar. That is not now being done on behalf of one Senator. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that it will not again be done.

Mr. President, at this point I want to show the Senate what the farmers of my State have to produce in order to get money. I have here a pound of cotton which I exhibit to the Senate. The farmer in Oklahoma, the farmer in the South, must get land and plough it, plant cotton, and he and his children and his wife must top that cotton and cultivate it. In the fall they must pick it, take it to a gin and have it processed by being run through a gin, have it baled, and then take the cotton to the market. This is the size of bundle, tightly compressed, that he must produce in order to get 5 cents in money. The Senator from Pennsylvania wants the farmers in the South to produce that much cotton indefinitely to pay the interest on the bonds held in Pennsylvania at the rate of $2.44 value per dollar. It is not being done, Mr. President. It will no longer be done.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Gladly.

Mr. REED. I gather from what the Senator said that he expects the farmers who grew that cotton will now cease to produce the surplus that weighs upon the market and depresses the price. That is all we want them to do—not to keep on producing, but to slow up producing.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I deny that we have any surplus of cotton in either the United States or the world. The Senator from Pennsylvania only last week made the statement that we have 17,000,000 people in these United States upon charity. They are barefooted. They have no socks. They have perhaps no underwear, perhaps they have no shirts—just rags—17,000,000 upon charity. If those 17,000,000 could be outfitted in cotton, we would wipe out the surplus in America.

Mr. President, I exhibit to the Senate a half-gallon jar. This contains a very poor quality of yellow corn—shelled, I will say for the benefit of those who may read what I have to say and not see what I am displaying. Farmers in Oklahoma and in the South and East and the West must produce a half-gallon fruit jar three quarters full of corn shelled in order to get one-half cent. That is what the farmers face today. That is what they have faced in the last 3 years. Yet the Senator from Pennsylvania wants the farmers of Iowa and Nebraska and the Nation to produce a half-gallon jar of shelled corn to get half a cent to pay his holders of tax-exempt gold bonds at the rate of $2.455 per dollar. Mr. President, it is not being done. It cannot be done. That is the issue that the pending amendment and this bill brings before the people of America at this particular time.

I next exhibit to the Senate another half-gallon jar filled with oats. This half-gallon jar will not hold one half cent's worth of oats. The farmers of Oklahoma and the other oat-growing States must produce more than half a gallon of oats; they must plow the land, they must sow the oats, they must cut the oats, they must thresh the oats, they must take them to the market, more than half a gallon of them, to get one-half cent.

Mr. President, it is a physical impossibility. It is not being done, not because the farmers do not want to, but because it is a physical impossibility.

I next show to the Senate another half-gallon jar of wheat. This is the standard farm commodity of America, grown in my State, grown in the South, grown in the North, grown in the East, grown in the West, grown everywhere. Here is a half-gallon jar of wheat. It is a little more than half full. It contains 2 pounds. The farmers of America must raise 2 pounds of wheat, plant it, cut it, thresh it, sack it, haul it to the elevator, to get 1 cent of money.

Mr. President, here is the visible evidence of the issue that I am trying to raise before the Senate:

This one-half cent's worth of corn represents 2 pounds of shelled corn. The farmers must raise and sell 2 pounds of shelled corn to get one-half cent. They must raise and sell 2 pounds of wheat at the rate of 30 cents a bushel—more than it has been sold for in months in my State until recently—to get 1 cent of value. They must raise, process, and sell 1½ pounds of oats to get one-half cent in value. And that is the reason, Mr. President, knowing as I did of the conditions under which the farmers had to live, that I have done the best I could to get some relief.

Mr. President, since I took the floor there has been sent to me a note; and along with this note I have, and exhibit to the Senate, a piece of paper of approximately the exact size of a $2 bill. The paper feels to be about as good as real paper money. It is printed to look very much like paper money. It is brown on one side, with the words "City of Detroit, Mich.", with the State seal. On the other side I find, in large figures, "2", which means $2; "City of Detroit, Mich." That is scrip. That evidently circulates in Detroit, Mich.

Mr. President, if we have in the country enough money with which to transact the business of America, why cannot the great city of Detroit secure enough of the real money of the Nation, authorized by Congress, with which to transact business, without having to resort to scrip of the kind that I exhibit to the Senate?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. While the Senator's observation might apply to other cities, I understand that in Wayne County, a large part of which is the site of the city of Detroit, money has been so lavishly expended in the past that it requires 54 cents out of every tax dollar to pay the interest and sinking-fund requirements of the municipal debt.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I thank the Senator for his contribution at this point in connection with this discussion.

Mr. President, the issue joined before the Senate is this: Shall the American Government continue the policy of deflation that has brought us where we are, or shall we make a heroic effort to stop the deflation and start back on the upward trend through what might be termed "expansion" or "reflation"?

At this point I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the statement of an eminent economist. I refer to Dr. G. F. Warren, of Cornell University. He defines the issue, and defines it better than could I. For that reason I read his statement. The headline is:

DEFLATION OR REFLATION?

The price level must be raised to the debt level, or the debt level must be lowered to the price level. This is a matter of grim reality that cannot be cured by psychology, confidence, or Government lending.

We must choose between deflation and reflation. * * *

If we wish to go through with deflation, we may as well proceed with the bankruptcies, foreclosures, and public defaults and get them over with.

DEFLATION

If deflation is completed, the following are some of the innumerable adjustments yet to be made.

Mr. President, if the policy of deflation advocated by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania is to be continued, here is what Dr. Warren says must come. I read:

At the new price levels, public and private debts are nearly equal to the national wealth.

If Dr. Warren's statement is true, today there is scarcely enough wealth in America to pay the debts of America.

These debts will have to be reduced. The only plan thus far proposed for reducing them is bankruptcy and private adjustment. This will probably require 3 or 4 years for the major adjustment and a generation to complete the process. While the more serious part of this is taking place, bankrupt homes, farms, and other properties will always be for sale at less than new costs of construction, regardless of how long these costs may fall. Therefore little building of any kind is to be expected. Consequently most of the basic industries will operate at low capacity and severe unemployment will be continuous.

That is the policy which the Senator from Pennsylvania and those who see as he does think should be followed from here on out. I am not willing to follow that leadership, Mr. President; and I shudder when I think of what will happen—and that, I fear, too shortly—unless the reverse policy is inaugurated and pursued.

Mr. President, in this emergency the States are powerless. Not only are the States powerless, but the cities and the counties are powerless. They can do nothing save issue scrip, and that is being done throughout the length and breadth of the Nation; but the States are protecting their citizens. They cannot get them more money; they cannot cheapen the dollar; they cannot raise the price of corn, wheat, cotton, and livestock; but the States almost without exception have passed laws protecting their citizens. They are protecting those citizens through denying the processes of the courts to those who seek to foreclose the mortgages existing against the farms and the property of those States.

There is what we face. The States themselves are in rebellion against this policy of deflation; and that act of rebellion is seen in the passage of innumerable laws throughout the Nation postponing the possibility of foreclosures, repealing laws under which Eastern investors having mortgages on Western properties can secure the process of the courts to enforce those mortgages.

If that is not rebellion, Mr. President, what is rebellion? The people cannot pay their present indebtedness at these prices. The cities cannot pay. They cannot pay their indebtedness. They cannot pay their interest. They cannot pay their operating expenses. The counties cannot pay. Even the States cannot pay, and the Federal Government itself cannot pay. In the past 3 years the Nation of which we are the policy-making branch has run behind more than $5,000,000,000. We are not collecting enough money, under our existing tax rates, to keep the United States a going concern.

We raised the tax rate last year, and the higher we raised the rate the larger the deficit. It does not do any good to raise the rates. What good would it do to raise the income-tax rate when the people have no incomes? What good would it do to raise the corporation-tax rate when the corporations have no net incomes? No good whatever would come from that process. This trouble cannot be solved through that method.

Let me quote at this point the words of one of America's most distinguished publicists; and, by the way, when this issue was first sought to be joined, this particular publicist was vicious in his writings againt the proposal of expansion, against the proposal of reflation, or against the proposal in the popular mind now called "inflation." But this particular publicist has changed his mind. In that particular he is a wise man, Mr. President, and those who have not already changed their minds have yet to make that decision and perform that act, because there is only one thing that will save the Nation—to reverse the process of deflation, and enter upon a process of reflation or expansion of the currency.

I quote from a recent article by Mr. Walter Lippman. If you have confidence in his judgment, listen to what he says:

For at present price levels—

Says Mr. Lippman—

and with the continuing impact of the world deflation, there is no such thing as keeping the Budget in balance, or providing enough relief, or readjusting fixed charges to earnings and income. As Mr. Keynes has put it, when deflation continues the only way to bring budgets, public, corporate, or individual, into balance is at zero on both sides of the account.

Hence Mr. Lippman supports the statement made by myself a moment ago that deflation carried to its ultimate end means the same thing as inflation carried to its ultimate end—chaos. We are not very far from that point now, Mr. President. Some do not seem to know it yet.

Again says Mr. Lippman:

Instead of allowing the dollar to find its own level in relation to sterling and the franc and of expanding credit to offset deflation, as Britain and France did when they were driven off gold, the United States has been letting Britain, and even helping her, to manage the dollar. We are thus in the rather absurd position of allowing the value of the dollar to be fixed in London in the interest of Britain and of the other nations on the sterling standard.

Again says Mr. Lippman:

The time is at hand, therefore, when the United States should assume control of its own monetary policy so that when the moment comes to stabilize currencies internationally we shall not make the mistake that Great Britain made in 1925 of stabilizing the dollar at a point so high that we are doomed to a long period of deflation and depression.

Thus said Mr. Lippman.

Mr. President, I said a moment ago that this issue of money, its adjustment and regulation, has assumed not only congressional importance; it has assumed national importance—not only national, but likewise international.

I exhibit to the Senate a section of the New York Times of yesterday. In black letters and words across two columns we read these words:

The monetary problem holds world attention. Need for currency adjustments and stabilization prime issue before Roosevelt and MacDonald.

I call the attention of the Senate to another page of the New York Times. There are on this page headlines covering four columns, as follows:

Roosevelt and MacDonald favor world action on money and trade.

Again, on the front page of one of the leading papers published in this city, a paper heretofore almost daily denouncing those who even assumed to talk upon the money question as radicals and as "reds", and other names too numerous to mention, on yesterday, in the Washington Post, we find a 4-column headline, as follows:

World-wide inflation aim.

By the Associated Press, underneath that headline, we find the following words:

Toward a bold attack upon the depression by a world-wide inflation of currency, President Roosevelt and Ramsay MacDonald turned their thoughts last night as the British Prime Minister called for the united action of governments against a common foe.

To check the sharp fall of commodity prices and break the vicious circle which is keeping millions from their daily bread, the chiefs of the English-speaking Governments pondered the potentialities of international action to cut the purchasing power of currency by decreasing the gold "cover" behind each unit of money.

The inflation policy upon which the administration already has embarked on a national basis would show the way in this direction.

Mr. President, while this amendment was not introduced until late Saturday, already it is receiving the almost unanimous consideration of the people of the United States. Some of our leading economists have passed judgment on the proposal.

I now call attention to a news item appearing in the public press of April 22, an article signed by Roger W. Babson. It is from Babson Park, Mass., with a headline as follows:

United States money stand praised by Babson. Financial expert calls move Roosevelt's master stroke; recovery seen.

I will read one or two paragraphs from the statement:

The decisive action of President Roosevelt in declaring a gold embargo and embarking on a policy of controlled inflation is the master stroke which should turn the tide from depression toward recovery. I am highly optimistic for three reasons:

First, this action reverses the vicious trend of deflation, replacing it with a trend of rising values.

Second, it starts a buying movement which sets into motion an upward spiral of business instead of the disastrous downward spiral from which we have been suffering for the past 3 years.

Further along in the article I read as follows:

That the President's policy of controlled inflation is already working is clearly shown by the sharp rise in stock and commodity prices. Billions of dollars have been added to the stock valuations since the gold embargo, and other billions to the valuation of basic commodities.

Roger W. Babson is not the only one. I now call the Senate's attention to a statement signed by Mr. Irving Fisher, not only a nationally known but an internationally known economist of Yale University. Dr. Fisher's statement was given to the Associated Press and was published by the Associated Press under date line of New Haven, Conn., April 22, with a headline as follows:

"Reflation" plan backed by Fisher.

Price rise is the only way to escape imminent danger, says Yale economist.

Republican criticism hit.

It is in line with worn-out traditions, he asserts, holding this no time to cavil at methods.

I read a portion of the statement, as follows:

Few realize the gravity of our present situation. Our very national existence is at stake, even more than it was in the World War.

Half-way, traditional, and timid measures will no longer do. If the price level is not speedily raised so that business, industry, and agriculture can be run again at enough of a profit to make sure that they are run at all and reabsorb the unemployed, and if that level is not raised enough to enable debtors to pay their debts and creditors to get their pay, this country will soon be over the precipice with bloodshed and revolution.

Mr. President, that does not come from an unemployed man, that does not come from a former farmer who has lost his farm and is now adrift in the world, that does not come from a western or southern farmer, but it comes from a world-renowned economist, with one of the great universities, not only of this Nation but of the World:

BEST METHOD IS THE QUICKEST

There is, if my analysis of this depression is right, absolutely no escape from our present imminent danger except through reflation.

Nor can we stop to cavil about methods. The situation is too desperate and imperative. The best method is whatever is the quickest.

I, too, dislike to load on the President so much responsibility and power, but the alternative is a debate which will delay action, when there is no time to lose.

We are at war and must intrust to our Commander in Chief the war-time powers necessary to win this sort of war.

The open-market operations, which alone the objectors grudgingly admit might well be used, cannot be intrusted wholly to the Federal Reserve System. They had their opportunity a year ago, and made insufficient use of it.

OTHER NATIONS HAVE DEVALUATED

The paper money which the objectors fear is no more "flat" than what we have, nor as much. Our dollar silver certificates are redeemable in only 25 cents' worth of silver.

The objectors fear if the medicine doesn't work, more will be tried. It certainly should be used until it works enough and then stopped. It can be stopped, for we shall be stronger, not weaker. We can then balance the Budget. We cannot now.

In that opinion Dr. Fisher supports the opinion of Publicist Lippman. We cannot balance a Budget upon a falling market. We cannot balance a Budget with deflation continued. Only by and through reflation, says Mr. Lippman, says Dr. Fisher, and say millions upon millions of others, can we ever be able to balance the Budget.

The Budget cannot be balanced until the people commence earning money so that they can pay income taxes. The Budget cannot be balanced until corporations again commence earning money, making net earnings, upon which they may be enabled to pay corporate income taxes. They are not doing that now. If deflation persists, the less able will people be to pay the taxes necessary to keep the Government going even upon a reduced annual appropriation Budget.

I quote further from Dr. Fisher:

When we reach the price level which does the greatest good to the greatest number—not far from the 1926 level as calculated—we should stabilize as Sweden has.

Almost all other nations have devaluated their gold coins. No one should care what the dollar weighs, if what it buys is properly safeguarded. It now is not 100 cents but 180 cents in terms of 1926 dollars. Debtors cannot pay 180 cents on the dollar nor interest.

Dr. Fisher says that the dollar today is worth 180 cents. I stated a moment ago from figures which I had that, based upon farm commodities, the dollar is worth 244¼ cents; that based upon all commodities in the United States, 700 of them, wholesale and retail and farm commodities, according to this index, the dollar is worth 170 cents. Dr. Fisher has his own index; he makes his own estimates; and, according to his chart, the dollar today is worth $1.80 not only of the farmer's commodities, the miner's commodities, the livestockman's commodities, the lumberman's commodities, and the fisherman's commodities, but of every commodity produced in the United States.

I want to read that last sentence from Dr. Fisher again. He is speaking about the dollar:

It now is not 100 cents, but 180 cents in terms of 1926 dollars. Debtors cannot pay 180 cents on the dollar, nor interest.

Mr. President, that is the issue. Shall the United States, acting through its Congress, the policy-making branch of the Government, continue the policy of deflation? The distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania says the dollar must not be debased, that not a single penny shall be taken from its value, that not a single mill shall be taken from that dollar, which, measured in the farmer's dollar, buys 244 cents' worth; that not a single penny of the dollar which, measured by all commodities, is now worth 170 or 180 cents, shall be taken from that dollar; that in the future, as long as the people shall live, they shall be compelled to work and sweat and produce and sell their products to raise money at the basis of 150 or 180 or 200 cents on the dollar in order to get the money with which to pay their taxes and to pay their interest and to pay their debts.

Mr. President, it is not being done any more; it will not be done any more; not perhaps because the people would not like to, but because they cannot.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I did not hear the Senator develop the thought, although perhaps he did while I was out of the Chamber; but have not most of the efforts we have made to relieve the present situation, so far as balancing the Budget is concerned, and so far as economy measures are concerned, which seemed to be necessary in view of the terrible conditions in which the country has found itself, been in themselves deflationary?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Without exception, they have been in their administration, not in their potentialities. No law has been passed by the Congress since the crisis came on in 1929 which has not in its administration been a deflationary measure. Some of them were intended to be reflationary; but it makes no difference what kind of laws Congress may pass unless those laws are administered to carry out the intent of the Congress. The administrator may fail to carry out the intent of Congress and go in the reverse direction.

Throughout the Nation each fall in the campaigns in all of our respective counties we elect our sheriffs. Why are sheriffs elected? The power of enforcing the law is given into their hands. Having the power to enforce the law, having that responsibility on their shoulders, they can misconstrue and misinterpret their power and responsibility, and, instead of using their offices to enforce the law, they may use them to protect the law violators. That is what has happened in the United States too often in the past 3 years.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Is it not true of the amendment which the Senator has offered that that also would depend almost wholly, if not exclusively, upon administration, that there is no mandatory feature to it?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Exactly so. The Senator is correct in his interpretation, and that is true for a good and sufficient reason. If we should place in this amendment one affirmative mandatory provision, it would lead to unending debate.

I have been in the Congress for 10 years, in the Senate for more than 6, and I know that we cannot agree upon the silver question. We could not agree upon reducing the gold content of the dollar; we cannot agree upon the exact extent of the expansion of the currency through the buying of bonds. Perhaps we have not the information; perhaps there is some other reason; but it has not been done, and I doubt if it could be done. So the only alternative, if something is be to done, is to confer this power on someone. That someone should be the one who has the confidence of the people of America, someone who is responsible to the people of America, someone who has it in his grasp and power to get the best information, the best expert advice that the Nation and the world afford. This amendment confers that power upon the President, elected by the people by the largest majority ever given a President of this Republic. He has the confidence of the public; he has a record that justifies the bestowal of this confidence; he has the facilities at his command to obtain the best information—in fact, all the information—and the best advice, the best brains not only of America but of the world. Because of those facts the amendment confers upon the President a power which we had but which we failed to exercise, and I fear we shall continue to fail to exercise it if this amendment or some similar amendment shall not be enacted.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to say that the Senator is making it very obvious that there is at least one Member of the Senate who is very well advised as to these questions, and that we do not have to leave the Senate Chamber in order to get the data.

May I suggest one further thought? When we handled the economy bill, we gave directions as to what was to be done and laid down the scale upon which it was to be done. We did not hesitate to cut salaries and to cut benefits in a direct way and to issue directions that it should be done.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I thank the distinguished Senator from Colorado for his compliment; and likewise I appreciate the suggestion he has made; but as to the economy bill, I will say to the Senator from Colorado, when that measure was pending, a motion was made to limit the powers of the President to cutting any existing compensation or award to a sum not exceeding 25 percent. I voted for that limitation, but I and those who voted with me were voted down, and the President was given full power to deprive every pensioner, every widow, every soldier of all the wars of the past of every dollar, of every benefit, they are now receiving under solemn laws enacted by the Congress and approved by prior Presidents.

Mr. President, a few days ago a very significant decision was made. That decision was made by the President; that decision took America off the gold basis. No longer is it possible for citizens, either of this country or of foreign nations, to get gold legally from the Government of the United States. A little gold was released a few days ago, but the outflow has now been stopped, and gold is not being sent from the United States. Those who have deposits are unable to get gold upon their checks. One cannot even get gold upon greenbacks, upon paper money. One cannot get gold today upon gold certificates, because even to have a gold certificate in one's possession is contrary to the policy of the Nation. Under the decision which has been entered and which is now in force, America is off the gold base, and, in my judgment, we will not return to the gold base so long as there is a single one of the competing trade countries of the world that refuses to go back upon the gold base at the same moment that we return to the gold base.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the Senator if, in his opinion, the result of the suspension of gold payments or the embargo on gold exports was not in effect a further increasing of the value of the dollar because it kept our gold at home? As a matter of fact, if gold had gone abroad in large quantities, we would have had a less strong dollar, would we not?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I do not take that interpretation to be the correct one. When we went off the gold base, we released $4,400,000,000 of gold we have in this country from any demand being made upon it. No one today has any demand for gold. Foreign nations cannot get it; Americans cannot get it. We are getting along without the gold. That gold—$3,000,000,000 worth of it, as I understand, or thereabouts—is 80 feet deep in a vault beneath the Federal Reserve bank in New York City. I am advised—I never saw the vault, although I should like to see it—that the vault is 80 feet deep in the solid rock, and in that vault underneath that bank there are $3,000,000,000 of gold, and above the vault there are 50 feet of water as a protection for the gold. So far as the world is concerned, that gold might just as well remain there. We can get along without it; we are getting along without it. I do not see anything sacred about the gold standard. We are not today on the gold standard; Great Britain is not on the gold standard, and approximately 35 other nations of the world are not on the gold standard, and they are getting along fine. I am not arguing against the gold standard; I am simply stating the fact that we are off the gold base, and we will not go back on the gold base, in my judgment, so long as a single world-wide competing trade nation refuses to go back on the gold base with us. We do not dare to do it, because if we did go back on the gold base, even in conjunction with Great Britain and France, supposing Germany, which is now theoretically on the gold base, went off the gold base; she could enter the markets of the world with cheaper currency and take America's trade because of having a cheaper currency; she could produce goods at a smaller figure, at a cheaper price, and sell them in competition with America cheaper than we could produce them and sell them and thus get our business. That is very largely the trouble with America's foreign trade today.

Mr. President, I read awhile ago from some newspaper releases by famous economists giving approval to the policy enunciated by this amendment and announced by the President. I now desire to call attention of the Senate to just one statement by a newspaper of wide circulation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the Senator takes that up, will he yield to me for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask if those who had to do with the framing of this amendment sought legal advice as to the power of Congress to authorize the President to change the gold content of the dollar?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In reply to the inquiry, I will say that the best legal advice available was consulted when the amendment was prepared; and let me say further, in reply to the Senator's question, that at this time the Attorney General and his associates are considering that question, and in the event the Attorney General finds that there should be some clarifying language or some restrictive language or any kind of language necessary to make this amendment comply with the Constitution, the suggestion will come to the Senate before we conclude our consideration of the amendment or will be submitted to the other branch for its consideration and for attachment as an amendment to our amendment to their bill. So the matter is not foreclosed.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me that a formula could be drawn which might be constitutional, but it does not seem to me that we can confer unlimited discretion upon the President to do as he pleases with the gold dollar. In other words, we cannot delegate legislative power to the President. We may pass a law and make its operation depend upon the act of an agent, but we must ourselves complete the law.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, any act we may pass presumes that the President is a rational, reasonable, sane being, and that he will act with discretion for the best interests of the people of America; and that presumption would carry us to the conclusion that if he shall do anything under this amendment, it will be what is necessary and best for the people of the Nation.

Mr. BORAH. I am not now questioning the integrity or ability of the President or his desire to serve the people; that is not in my mind at all; but the Constitution provides that Congress shall have power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof. The question upon which I desire to have the Senator's opinion whether or not the Congress may delegate that power to the President of the United States, conceding that the President, whatever power he might be given, would use it, in his judgment, for the best interests of the people. It is purely a constitutional question, and in no sense a question of the President's ability or high purpose.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The amendment as prepared by myself and originally introduced gave the President unlimited power. It was hurriedly drawn, and it was withdrawn later and submitted to those who were interested in the proposition and the best advice was had that was available. A limitation was placed in the amendment giving the President the power to devalue the dollar only to the extent of 50 percent.

Now, let me announce to the Senator an interpretation of the law which I think is good, although perhaps he will not agree with me. Under section 8 of article I of the Constitution the Congress has power to coin money and regulate the value thereof. That is a positive, express grant of power to the Congress. I assert this proposition, that when the Congress has a power of that kind and exercises it and selects machinery for carrying into effect the power conferred upon it further than the Congress itself wants to go, the courts, then, will not disturb the operation of that special machinery.

Mr. BORAH. I am inclined to agree with the Senator that if Congress will announce the formula or the rule which is to govern its agent, to wit, the President, it can confer upon its agent, the President, the powers proposed; but the Supreme Court has said that we cannot delegate legislative powers, though we may lay down a formula and select an agent to carry it into effect. If the Senator has done that in his amendment, I think it would be constitutional; but it does not seem to me that the language is sufficient. That is the way it impresses me at this time.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me say to the Senator from Idaho that the amendment was so drawn in conference as to comply exactly with the formula prescribed by the Senator from Idaho, in that certain conditions must exist and they must upon investigation be found to exist before the President can take any action. Then, having found that certain conditions exist which are detrimental to the welfare of America, and that in order to correct that detrimental tendency or condition something must be done, the President, within his discretion, can exercise the power conferred by this amendment and devalue the dollar to the extent of 50 percent.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, at that point will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. REED. On reading the Senator's amendment I find that this delegated power is to be exercised in either one of two contingencies: First, if the President from his investigation finds it necessary to protect the foreign commerce of the United States against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, the power is delegated to him to reduce the gold content of the dollar in case his investigation shows such facts to exist; and, second, in case the Government of the United States enters into an agreement with any government or governments under the terms of which the ratio between the value of gold and other currency issued by the United States and by any such government or governments is established. That is to say we delegate the legislative power which the Constitution gives us to the President in case he makes any agreement with a foreign government with regard to the exchange value of its currency and ours. In other words, no rule is laid down; Congress is not legislating in the event a particular thing shall happen or a particular set of facts shall occur, but is leaving the door wide open; and we might just as well give the President the power to declare war in case he should make an agreement with a foreign government or governments, and then say that that was a proper delegation of legislative authority.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I understood the Senator to say that the Attorney General is now investigating the legal aspects of the question.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator understood me correctly. I may state that I am expecting an amendment to be submitted at any moment, if one is thought to be necessary. It may not come if it is not thought necessary; but if it should be considered necessary after we conclude our deliberations, such an amendment may go to the House, and, under the parliamentary procedure, the House may agree to our amendment with an amendment which might be necessary to meet the point raised by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, there is no doubt that Congress can designate that, upon the happening of a certain state of facts, a certain law shall go into effect, and I presume the Attorney General when he tenders his opinion will deal with that feature of it.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. I think the Senator will agree that insofar as the first declaration of the standard contained in section 34 is concerned, it is in the exact language of the Tariff Act which was construed by the Supreme Court in the Field case or the Hampton case. Certainly, the language follows the exact language of the act in which the Congress gave to the President the power, whenever the President determined that a foreign government was discriminating against this Government in levying tariff duties, upon his findings as a result of that investigation, either to raise or lower the tariff duties. The Court held that it is within the power of the Congress and that the President was merely the agent of the Congress to carry out the will of the Congress within the limitations set out in the act.

Mr. BORAH. I am not sure that the amendment comes within the case of Field against Clark or the flexible tariff case. So far as the flexible tariff is concerned, I opposed it to the extent of my limited ability, because I thought it was unconstitutional. I am aware the Supreme Court has decided otherwise, but with great respect to that tribunal, it has not conviced me. I think under the decision announced by the Supreme Court in the flexible tariff case the Congress could delegate away practically all its legislative power. It is in my judgment a most dangerous rule there announced. It occurs to me that regardless of the decision of the Supreme Court in that particular case, the Congress should adhere as strictly as it can to the rule that if it undertakes to delegate power, it must do it under a specified formula so the agent will do nothing more than find the facts, and upon the finding thereof the law will go into effect. I think an amendment could be drawn perhaps along that line, but I do not think this amendment comes within the rule. At a later time I may say something further upon the subject. This is a most important measure, and we should bring it within the Constitution, for rest assured it will be tested in the courts, and the courts may conclude that after all, there is a limit to this granting of legislative power.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I appreciate the suggestions made by the Senator from Idaho, the Senator from Pennsylvania, and the Senator from South Carolina. I am sure that before the debate is concluded this matter will have every attention that those interested in it can give it, and we will welcome suggestions to make the amendment comply with the Constitution and the best interests of the people of the country.

Mr. President, for 3 years the Congress has been trying to bring about some relief for the people of the country. We have not succeeded very well. Even though the proposal is not yet enacted into law, but is only being discussed, I now desire to call the attention of the Congress and of the Senate to what it has already done. Before I do that, I want to have the attention of those who are sponsoring and supporting the proposal. I have just read support from Dr. Fisher, Roger W. Babson, and Mr. Lippman. I have here the financial section of one of the leading papers of the country. In the first column I find headlines as follows:

Trade increase seen resulting from inflation. Economic deadlock will be broken by cheaper money.

The next column I find this:

Retail trade climbing. Car loadings show 6,919 increase in week. Steel up. Wheat active. Automobiles improving.

In the next column I find this headline:

United States has quit being boob in world deals.

That is at the top of an article by Mr. B. C. Forbes, financial writer of note.

Then in the next column I find these headlines:

Stock market buoyant as week closes. Industrial shares are leaders in spectacular advance caused by inflation news.

Are these headlines displeasing to the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania, hailing as he does from the great industrial State? I pause for a reply.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will indulge me for a moment or two I shall be glad to give him a reply.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall be glad to have the Senator from Pennsylvania interrupt me at any time he sees proper.

I now call attention of the Senate to another page from a great publication, perhaps the greatest in America, and that means the greatest in the world. I refer to the New York Times of Sunday, April 23, 1933, a rather recent publication. I want to show the effect the talk about this proposal, even the serious consideration of a proposal which has for its purpose the checking of deflation, has had upon business throughout the country. Then I want the opinion of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, who stands in the Senate speaking in and out of season for industry, industrial life, those engaged in industry, both the employer and the employee. I shall read only the headlines:

Business buoyed by action on gold.

There is little doubt but that this step, following closely on increased inflationary force in Congress, was confusing to the average business man, who in many cases found his stocks of raw material suddenly increased in value, but with the cost of necessary new stocks equally higher.

Under that I find another story:

Local trade strong. Stores report gains in sales over year ago.

That is in New York City, the barometer of the business life of America. Again:

Philadelphia more active. Building and industrial progress noted in the district.

That is from Philadelphia, April 21. If anyone knows where Philadelphia is, if anyone who knows who represents that great city in this body, he may wonder what that distinguished representative thinks of such headlines when he is protesting against the action being taken with those headlines in black print in Sunday's papers.

Again I read:

Chicago turns to selling. Inflation prospect ends buyers' market. Business is brisk.

From the second column I read:

CHICAGO, April 22.—Rise in grain prices prompts order for 700 freight cars.

I wonder if the railroads are offended by the decision of the President to give them an increased business which justifies an order for 700 additional freight cars to handle wheat alone?

I read further:

Many lines increase activity beyond seasonal levels.

That is from Cleveland, April 20. Underneath that is the following:

Northwest is cheered. Grain prices are rising, and retail trade is good.

That is from Minneapolis, April 22. Here is one from the Southwest—St. Louis:

Eighth district quickened. Commodity price rise spurs mining, farming, and trade.

We have not had such news in 13 long years. Three years the Congress has been in session, daytime and nighttime, passing bill after bill, and never has the New York Times covered one of its important pages with notice after notice from all over the Nation, North and South, East and West, that even the proposal of a plan is bringing an upturn in trade prospect and confidence.

From Kansas City:

Trade rises. New year's highest levels. Grain trend encouraging.

That is from Kansas City, April 21.

Again, from nearer Washington:

Southeast shows gain. Coal production rises. Retail trade firm. Optimism increases.

Whence does that headline come? It comes from the Old Dominion State. It is from Richmond, Va., April 21. Who represents that State in this body?

For 3 years we have been enacting legislation, passing financial bill after financial bill, but it produced nothing like this.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am glad to yield.

Mr. REED. If the Senator regards the increase of prices in debased money as an evidence of prosperity, he ought to regard it, I suppose, as an evidence of great prosperity in Germany that in 1924 it took 1,000,000 times 1,000,000 marks to buy an orange. That was a rise in commodity prices. Does the Senator think that is prosperity?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I expect the Senator from Pennsylvania to go to the German situation. He cannot argue from the standpoint of America. There is no comparison between the German situation and the American situation. When the German mark began to advance Germany was a defeated nation. We are almost defeated. In a few months more we will be in the same condition as was Germany if this trend is not changed. When the war was over the mark was only two and a half times less than its normal value. The inflation in Germany took place after the war closed. They had only 28,000,000,000 marks in circulation when the war was closed. Germany did not need to go to the extent of inflating her mark the way she did. In my judgment it was done for a purpose. The Senator and I will not discuss that. But Germany after the war had no gold. The United States has almost five elevenths of the monetary gold of the world. Four billion four hundred million dollars of gold rest securely in the bank vaults of America. Then the Senator from Pennsylvania, with all his knowledge and ability to analyze, continues to make statements upon this floor comparing America to Germany.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator know of anybody who is advocating inflation that would go to the extreme to which Germany went?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The man in America who would advocate going to that extreme or would seriously state upon this floor that America will perchance go to that extreme would be or should be confined before night in a padded cell in St. Elizabeths.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am glad to yield.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator know whether there is a vacant cell in St. Elizabeths? [Laughter.] I should like to invite his attention to the fact that the present Speaker of the House of Representatives, the distinguished Mr. RAINEY, leader of the Democratic Party in the House, said last May in opposing one of the particular unsound money measures in Congress:

> A government once embarked on the practice of issuing fiat money finds it difficult always to stop.

Then, apparently qualifying for St. Elizabeths, he said:

> In the recent past we have seen European governments resort to fiat money, until it took in Germany millions of marks to buy a small loaf of bread. Finally the German issue of fiat money based on the promise of the German Government to pay was stabilized on the basis of 1,000,000,000,000 marks, based on the promise of the Government to pay for 1 gold mark.

If using the German situation as a parallel and a warning of the danger that inflation always gets out of control is qualification for St. Elizabeths, I nominate the distinguished leader of the Senator's party in the House of Representatives for cell no. 1 and I should like to go to cell no. 2. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I suggest that the Senator from Pennsylvania confer with the distinguished Speaker of the House and arrange that trip so that they can both go together, because if the Speaker of the House was correct in his statement that it would lead to chaos, the statement made by the Senator from Pennsylvania favoring deflation, if carried to its last analysis, leads to chaos exactly similar to uncontrolled inflation.

Mr. President, we had inflation in the sixties. Did that go to an unnatural, abnormal extent? Let me ask the Senator from Pennsylvania what would have happened to Pennsylvania if the Northern States had not passed the act of 1862 and authorized first $300,000,000 of greenbacks, later increased to $400,000,000 of greenbacks, to pay the expenses of protecting his State and his citizens and his cities in Pennsylvania? The North had no money. The North had no gold. They had no credit. They were stopped. I pause for a reply. What would have happened to the North if the Congress at that time had not passed those acts, and given Mr. Lincoln these so-called now-hated "greenbacks" with which to carry on that now-historic conflict?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it was a desperate expedient resorted to in a desperate time, I grant you. If the war had not ended, it probably would have resulted in the total disappearance of the American dollar from having any value at all. As it was, it took nearly two decades of toil and distress on the part of all the American people to bring their money back to a sound basis; and now the Senator wants to throw us off it in time of peace, when we have half the gold in the world!

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Why, Mr. President, take the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Turn to the speech made by the distinguished Senator only 3 days ago, and read there that 17,000,000 American citizens today are living on charity. Read his speech. We saw no times like those during the historic days of the recent world-wide war. That war, Mr. President, was not a circumstance in the point of effect to the cost and misery already and now being sustained and experienced by the people of this Nation.

War? The Senator from Pennsylvania is the only man I know of in America who does not agree that today we are in a worse war than we ever were in during the years 1916, 1917, and 1918.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. REED. I have already made it plain, in what I have said about this subject, that I am just as fully conscious of the amount of distress in America as is the Senator from Oklahoma; and because there is more distress in Pennsylvania than there is in Oklahoma, I venture to think I am at least as anxious to relieve it. That, however, is no reason why we should adopt schemes which have been proven by the universal experience of mankind to cause more distress than they relieve. I do not want to take poison because the Nation is ill; and the Senator is offering financial poison to the people of America.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I will come to that in just a moment. I want to complete the record that I am trying to make.

I last referred to the change in the trend of the times, and I quoted from Richmond, Va., that even the section here south of the Potomac is responding to the changed psychology and the changed hope that finds lodgment in the breasts and minds of the people of the Nation.

I read further:

> Sixth district trade brisk.
> Atlanta also reports gains in employment and wage rises.

That is from Atlanta, Ga., of date April 21.

The next news story:

> Prices spur on coast.

That is away out yonder on the Pacific.

Reading further:

> Numerous lines of business quickened. Gold search increases.

That is from San Francisco, Mr. President.

Then we find in the next headline:

> Wheat is jumped by inflation talk.

In the next headline:

> Cotton up again on heavy buying.

Is it possible that these news stories are unpleasant reading to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania? Is that possible?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. Since the Senator referred to the matter in the last few minutes I took the trouble to telephone, and I find that cotton and wheat have retained their spurt, and cotton is up a few points from the closing on Saturday.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, here is an important, interesting news item—and I want to assure the Senator from Pennsylvania that there could be nothing personal in my referring to him in the second person. I have stated frequently upon this floor that no Member of the Senate has more courage, is more able, more energetic, more efficient than is the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania. I only regret that he is at the head of the army of which he finds himself the general. He is now a full general in this army. It is a rather disorganized army, although it is not a ragged army. It is well uniformed. The army that the Senator leads as a general has money with which to send telegrams to him. The folks that I am privileged to represent do not have that money. They cannot send me telegrams. They cannot even send letters by air mail. Three cents is almost too much for them. The wires that I get are mostly sent collect. Many of them I have to pay for myself.

There is the difference, Mr. President.

On January 28 the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania made a speech in Philadelphia. This is a special article from Philadelphia to the New York Times, and I take it to be correctly reporting what happened in Philadelphia. I read the first few lines:

> Philadelphia, Pa., January 29.—

This is just this year, 1933—

Terming the inflation of currency "the road to ruin for America", Senator DAVID A. REED, in an address before the Northeast Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce last night, said that the "vast body of common sense" in Washington would resist the importunities to take that "foolish" step.

Then the article goes on, but that gives the gist of the article.

Reflation, expansion of money, putting back, where people get them, some of these dollars that now are ancient history to many of them—that is inflation? That is a "foolish step"? Yet even the suggestion of the Congress and the administration taking that "foolish step" has done more to help the people of America and the interests of America than has all the legislation sponsored and passed by the party of which the distinguished Senator is an influential leader from October 1929 to March 4, 1933.

Mr. President, when the distinguished Senator made this speech in Philadelphia, Mr. Hoover was President, his President as well as ours; Mr. Mills was Secretary of the Treasury; Mr. Mellon was at the Court of St. James's; Mr. Mitchell was the dictator of the financial policies of New York City, Wall Street—if not the dictator, a most influential associate among the few that do dictate those policies—and all this time, Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania was here in the Senate seeing to it that nothing was done to check the deflation and permit reflation. In other words, until the 4th of March the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, the leader and full general of that army, prevented America from even entering upon the "road to ruin."

Now, let me call attention to what happened during the closing days of that historic and never-to-be-forgotten administration.

I need not remind the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senate of the United States that the reign of Mellon, Mills, Morgan, and Mitchell closed on March 4; that at that time every bank in America was closed; 13,000,000 men were unemployed, meaning, with their wives and children, perhaps 50,000,000; trade was stagnated; business was paralyzed; smokestacks were smokeless; dinner pails were empty; taxes were unpaid; interest was in default; incipient revolutions were widespread; individuals, corporations, counties, cities, and most of the States were accepting doles from the Government, which in effect placed such individuals, corporations, and municipal subdivisions in the Federal bread line. Mr. President, the policy of deflation sponsored by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, and led by him in the Senate, not only entered America upon the road to ruin but led America to ruin.

There is the picture on March 4, 1933, at 12 o'clock; and I have just tried to portray to the Senate what has been accomplished in the past 6 weeks. Although no act on the subject has been passed, even the discussions here upon this floor and in the other body of Congress and in other halls and chambers of this city where policies are considered and made, even the discussion of a reversal of that policy has done more to bring back our lost prosperity than all the acts considered and passed by the administration that ended only a short time ago.

Mr. President, in conclusion—and I am almost through—I desire to place in the RECORD some facts, and I invite the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the consideration of these facts. I alluded to these facts when I began my remarks shortly after 12 o'clock. I want to show, if I may, for whom the Senator speaks—and I make no charge. I do not think he knows that he speaks for the people to whom I shall allude; but in my opinion he does speak for them, even though he has not discovered it yet.

Mr. President, only recently we had 57 billions of resources in all the banks of America. If my knowledge is correct, each one of those dollars represented in buying power, in financial wealth, the sum of $2.44. If that is true, then that wealth, that power represented by $57,000,000,000 of resources, had added power—financial power, purchasing power, buying power so far as the farmer is concerned—in the sum of $139,365,000,000. In other words, the banks, to pay their depositors, would have to collect from their borrowers that much money in value. They never could collect it, because it is a physical impossibility for farmers and laborers and merchants and lumbermen and miners to get that much money at the high price at which the dollar is valued now to pay their obligations to the banks; and the banks, failing to collect from the borrowers, could not pay their depositors. So this is not only a farm-relief measure; it is a bank-relief measure. Without this amendment, or some similar amendment, not a single bank in America can ever pay its depositors—not a single bank. Either this amendment or some similar amendment must carry, or not a single bank—North, South, East, or West—within the confines of America has a chance to get enough of these $2.45 dollars to pay the depositors who have credit in that bank.

As a rule, the bankers are not against this amendment. In my State last year, when I was trying to get more money into circulation through another means, the bankers of my State, apparently not understanding what I was trying to do—and I could not make them see it, through my inability—were not for my proposal. But times are so changed in Oklahoma that I do not know of a single bank in that great State today that is not back of this proposal. The banks must have it or they will close.

Mr. President, that is not all. These bank resources, as I have said, are worth $139,000,000,000. That is their buying power, their purchasing power. It is necessary for the banks to obtain possession of that much wealth in order to pay the depositors. On the other hand, the borrowers must get that much wealth to put into the banks to enable the banks to pay their depositors. So this proposition neutralizes itself, and as a rule the banks of the country are not particularly interested in the proposal, save that if they know anything about it they are for it; but if they have been following the philosophy of the Senator from Pennsylvania and some of the papers, they do not think, they take what they hear as the gospel truth, and believing what the Senator from Pennsylvania says, and his interpretation, they believe they are to be ruined and that the country is to be ruined if we debase the dollar by a single penny.

Mr. President, there is a bunch of banks in New York which do not take that view about this matter—about 13 banks in New York City. Let me enumerate those banks, and then deduce my conclusions from the evidence. On December 31, 1931, the National City Bank of New York had resources in the sum of $1,857,000,000. On that date the other banks in New York City of this group to which I have referred had resources as follows:

The Chase National Bank	$1,988,000,000
The Guaranty Trust Co	1,494,000,000
The Bank of Manhattan Trust Co	461,000,000
The Bankers Trust Co	745,000,000
The Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co	756,000,000
The Irving Trust Co	621,000,000
The Manufacturers Trust Co	502,000,000
The New York Trust Co	323,000,000
The Public National Bank & Trust Co	120,000,000
The Empire Trust Co	170,000,000
The Marine Midland Trust Co	86,000,000
The City Bank Farmers Trust Co	70,000,000

Those 13 banks had total resources in the sum of $9,193,000,000. That was the face value of those resources. That was only 13 banks in New York City. I did not mention the smaller banks. It is safe to say that, taking the joint resources of the smaller banks, not mentioned, and adding them to the resources of the banks I have mentioned, in that one city alone the banks have total resources with a face value in excess of $10,000,000,000.

Mr. President, are these banks limited to the $10,000,000,000 when it comes to buying power, to purchasing power, to financial power? No; these banks have the resources, the buying power, the purchasing power, of $10,000,000,000, but that is not all. They have this enhanced buying power. As measured by the farmers' dollar, each dollar of their resources means $2.44. As measured by the entire list of commodities, each dollar of their resources amounts to $1.70.

I am pitching this discussion on the basis of the agricultural States, and I make my computations on the basis of the farm. These banks in New York City, having $10,000,000,000 of resources, have buying power, have purchasing power, have financial power, have political power, in the sum of $24,450,000,000.

It is a simple calculation. Ten billion equals 100 percent; 1 percent equals $100,000,000; 244½ percent, which is the number of cents to the dollar, times 1 percent gives us the result. Twenty-four billion four hundred and fifty million dollars is the total buying, financial, political power of those banks in New York City.

If this amendment carries and the dollar should be reduced in buying power, to the extent of the reduction these resources will be taken away from those banks and placed back on the farm, placed back in the mine, placed back in the lumber camps, placed back in the fisheries, placed back with those who are in debt.

Mr. President, if we cut the dollar half in two and make it worth only $1.22¼, these banks then will still have more than $2,000,000,000 of buying power, financial power, political power, which they did not earn, which they did not buy, a gift through the policy of the administration at Washington.

Mr. President, that is not all. There are $21,000,000,000 of United States bonds in the United States. Those bonds are held by men and women of wealth. The United States owes $21,000,000,000 of bonds, so far as figures are concerned, but the United States owes more value than that. The United States owes more buying power than twenty-one billion. It owes more financial power than twenty-one billion. If the farmer had to pay those bonds, the farmers would have to raise $2.44½ to liquidate each dollar of that twenty-one billions of bonds. How much would that $21,000,000,000 take? The farmers of the United States must toil and sweat and produce commodities and sell them to the extent of $51,345,000,000 to retire that bonded obligation.

Do these misguided, deluded bondholders believe they are going to collect $51,000,000,000 of wealth, of sweat and toil, of wheat and cotton and oats and meat, from the farmers of the United States to pay that obligation of $21,000,000,000?

Those bondholders did not pay $21,000,000,000 for the bonds. Many of those bonds were purchased with a 50-cent dollar, on the basis of an 85-cent bond. I will not go into that detail. I am presuming that the standard level of 1926 was the point at which all those bonds were purchased, and, taking that as the basis, those bonds today, to be liquidated by the farmers, would cost them $51,345,000,000.

Mr. President, that is not all. The States have bonds outstanding, the counties have bonds outstanding, the cities have bonds outstanding, the districts have bonds outstanding, corporations have bonds outstanding, and it is estimated that there are bonds of those classes outstanding to the extent of $50,000,000,000. Is that all the wealth that is represented by those bonds? No. If the farmers have to pay those bonds—and they must pay their share—they cannot liquidate $50,000,000,000 of State, county, city, district, and corporate bonds with $50,000,000,000 of wealth. They must produce dollars worth $2.44 to liquidate each dollar of those bonds. That being true, how much wealth must they produce in order to liquidate $50,000,000,000 of State, county, city, district, and corporate bonds? The computation is easy. Make the computation and you will find that they must raise, produce, and sell to the extent of $122,251,000,000 of buying power and of wealth in order to liquidate the corporate bonds and the city bonds and the State bonds and the county bonds and the district bonds of this Republic.

Mr. President, let us add those figures. The bank resources, based upon the present value of the dollar, are worth today $139,000,000,000. United States bonds, based upon the present buying power of the dollar, are worth $51,000,000,000. The bonds issued by cities, counties, States, and corporations, based upon the present buying power, are worth, in the products of the sons of toil, $122,000,000,000. So that in order that the people of the United States may get rid of their national bonds, their State bonds, their county bonds, and the other bonds they must produce and sell products in the sum of $312,000,000,000. The face value is only $128,000,000,000. There are almost $200,000,000,000 of wealth—of corn, of wheat, of cotton, of hogs and cattle, human sweat and toil—which must be produced and expended to pay money to a class of bondholders who did not earn the money, who did not buy the money, who do not deserve to keep the money, and that is the reason why I stated a while ago that this single amendment has more possible significance than any proposal that has ever come before the American Congress or any parliament in the history of the world.

If this amendment should be enacted, and if it should be exercised to the extent of 50 percent, and the dollar cut half in two, it would transfer that wealth from those who do not own it to the other side of the ledger, and still the bondholding class would have billions they did not buy and did not earn, and the producing class would not have as many billions as they deserve.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. REED. Can the Senator give us any assurance that this power to cut the dollar half in two, as he states it, would be used by the President if Congress were to give the power to the President?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the Senator knew in advance of asking that question, or he should have known, that, in the first place, I could not answer the question, because I do not have the facts now which the President would have when he proceeded to exercise the power; and, secondly, if I know, I doubt whether I would tell the Senator from Pennsylvania upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. REED. The Senator implied that he knew, when he said that $200,000,000,000 of property are to be taken from one class and given to another, and that that is why this amendment is the most important thing since Adam and Eve.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No, Mr. President; I said that if that were done, it would not be enough, that people would still have property and wealth in the United States which they did not buy and did not earn, and that, on the other hand, another class—the debtor class, the farming class, the city class, the working class, the middle class—would not have as much transferred to them as they would have if the Government did exact justice by them.

Mr. REED. I understood. The Senator would take all this wealth from Mr. J. P. Morgan and give it to the voters. Perhaps there would not be enough left for the voters to get.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am not going to prophesy from whom it is to be taken. I think I know of some from whom it will be taken. If there is a bunch of hogs in a lot, and if we throw a rock over there and hit one of them, he will squeal. When we hear a man squeal in this contest we may just put it down as a safe proposition that he either has been hit or is likely to be hit.

Mr. President, the other day the Senator from Pennsylvania, within his prerogative, asked the Nation to advise him and the other Senators and Representatives whether or not they wanted this amendment to be agreed to; in other words, whether or not the people of the Nation wanted the United States to enter upon the road to ruin.

I did not receive any telegrams from my State in response to that appeal. It really was not necessary for anybody in my State to send me a telegram, and, on examining my file, I find I received none from my State. But I find that there are some people in the United States with enough money to send telegrams who do not agree with the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania. The first one I received was from Hutchinson, Kans. This is in direct response to the appeal made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I want to read these telegrams, because they are interesting. This telegram from Hutchinson is addressed to me and reads:

A former Kansas Republican county chairman extends congratulations on your courageous fight for equitable debt adjustment and dollar revaluation. New hope inspired in all classes here. Mills says poor people with insurance and savings to be hurt under his policy of deflation. This class cashed their insurance and spent their savings.

C. E. KING,
Former Republican County Chairman,
Reno County, Kans.

Mr. President, I have another telegram from Atlantic City, N.J., in response to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania. It is dated April 23, is addressed to me, and reads as follows:

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., April 23, 1933.

Senator ELMER THOMAS,
Washington, D.C.:

Answering Senator REED's request for telegrams, we urge that your currency bill be passed as written, but as a separate measure. This bill seems well designed to carry out several sound recommendations of committee of the Nation. Imperative for business recovery that destructive opposition of REED not be allowed to change any essential part of program. We were Hoover supporters, but repudiate present Republican attitude.

KENTS RESTAURANT & BAKING CO.,
By KENNETH B. WALTON, President.

The next message, Mr. President, comes from New York City. This gentleman must have a little money because he sends a telegram of about three pages. He could not say as much as he desired in support of this proposition on one page, so evidently he took as much as necessary. Here is the message addressed to me:

NEW YORK, N.Y., April 22, 1933.

Senator ELMER THOMAS,
Senate Office Building:

For your information I have sent Senators REED, WALCOTT, Representatives LUCE, SNELL following telegram: "The overwhelming majority of Americans are astounded at your statement criticizing President Roosevelt's most constructive and essentially necessary currency-expansion program to restore an honest dollar and prosperity. Do you wish President Roosevelt to follow the past administrations' deflationary policy of maintaining an unfair, if not dishonest, dollar which was destroying agriculture, commerce, and industry? Do you want our financial and economic policy to be directed from London for the advantage of Great Britain and to our economic destruction? My firm does one of the largest commodity brokerage businesses in the world, and, for your information, during the past few days due to the belief that controlled inflation would be accomplished, America's greatest industry, the cotton industry, has been transformed from gloom and depression to optimism and is actually doing the best business in years, and our mills are putting tens of thousands back to work."

Is it displeasing to the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania to learn that the mills are reopening and tens of thousands of people are being placed back to work?

Reading further:

"You will find this true of other businesses. I am a member of the Committee for the Nation, composed of approximately 500 presidents or chairmen of the board of America's largest industrial corporations, also having representatives of more than 5,000,000 of farmers; our committee is not only advocating but urging the nationalization of our gold and revaluation of the gold ounce, so as to permit the direct issuance of 75 percent more currency. This would permit recalling billions of tax-exempt bonds, which are destroying our country economically. Your reference in comparing our currency-expansion program to Germany is so ridiculous that it is not worthy of answering, except that it comes from what should be a responsible source. If you will look in the records 14 years back, you will find that Germany was a bankrupt, defeated nation, without gold reserve, without national resources of commodities and raw materials, and owing untold billions of dollars to other nations, and having absolutely nothing on which to expand or inflate her currency. Germany was even then without a stable government, whereas the United States has approximately half the monetary gold supply of the world, unlimited national resources of wealth, commodities, and raw materials, and is not a debtor nation, but the world's greatest creditor nation; therefore the United States has the strongest foundation on which to expand her currency and thus restore an honest dollar. After consideration, I hope that in the interest of our country you will cooperate in eliminating the existing unfair, if not dishonest and thieving, dollar which is destroying our country, and use your best efforts for currency expansion, so as to restore an honest dollar, which is so vital for the recovery of agriculture, commerce, industry, and our national existence and happiness."

You are at liberty to place same in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.
Best regards.

ROBERT HARRISS.

Mr. President, then I have here a telegram from Greeley, Colo., addressed to myself, as follows:

GREELEY, COLO., April 21, 1933.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

We extend our congratulations. Majority of western people are very anxious for success of your proposed inflation measures. Our opinion that they are the greatest and only practical relief measures offered that can relieve us from this depression. Let us know if we can assist you.

WELD COUNTY BIMETALLIC ASSOCIATION.

The last message that I will call to the attention of the Senate is from South Bend, Ind., my native State—and, by the way, it is a great farming State and likewise a great industrial State. The message is as follows:

SOUTH BEND, IND., April 21, 1933.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

It is most significant that just the publicity about prospective inflation has brought such a tremendous improvement in prices and general psychology. It is therefore, I believe, most obvious that achievement of actual inflation through contemplated legislation will bring about a far greater advance in prices, and with the resultant buying power of the Nation the entire country would soon be on the road to complete recovery and prosperity.

That message is signed by Vincent Bendix, of Chicago, the head of one of the great industrial concerns of America.

Mr. President, I want to sum up just in a word to show what will happen, in my judgment, if this amendment shall be adopted and written into law and the powers conferred shall be exercised by the Chief Executive under the spirit and incentive and impulse of the preamble of the Constitution acting for the best welfare of America.

If this amendment should be adopted this, in my judgment, is what will happen:

First. Owners of bank deposits will immediately begin to convert such deposits into commodities, real estate, and property, to secure the benefits of the advance in price and value.

Second. Owners of collateral will begin immediately to negotiate loans in order to be able to take advantage of the rising prices.

Third. Merchants will begin to place orders for goods to restock their empty shelves.

Fourth. Wholesalers will begin to place orders for additional stocks to supply increasing demands.

Fifth. Manufacturers will take chances on opening their factories, thus making demands for raw materials.

Sixth. Such activities will make business for the railroads, transportation companies, transmission companies, and the banks.

Seventh. Labor will be employed and additional demands will arise for the products of the farmers, hence stimulate and raise farm and commodity prices.

Eighth. Bank credit and bank deposits will be thawed out, and banks will become active once again.

Ninth. Value will be replaced in all kinds of collateral and securities.

Tenth. Credit will be in demand and will begin to expand and revolve.

Eleventh. The people will be able to secure money with which to pay taxes, interest, and debts.

Twelfth. The amendment, if adopted, will continue the advance now noted in all lines of public and private activity.

Mr. President, inasmuch as the gold clause is under discussion, and inasmuch as, if the power conferred by this amendment is finally exercised, the gold clause will probably reach the courts, I ask unanimous consent to attach as exhibit A to my remarks a portion of a syndicated article prepared by Mr. Mark Sullivan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit A.)

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. As a second exhibit, I ask to have printed a statement relative to the English case recently cited involving the identical point whether or not the Government has the power to evaluate or reduce the gold content of the unit value.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit B.)

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask permission to insert a news article appearing in yesterday's newspapers prepared by Mr. J. R. Brackett under the title "Inflation—What It Is."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit C.)

EXHIBIT A

THE COURTS AND THE GOLD CAUSE

By Mark Sullivan

* * * * * * *

Suppose, now, either that the United States go "off the gold basis" in the sense of printing or minting great quantities of paper or silver money, or that the size of the gold dollar be reduced.

The present gold dollar "of present standard of weight and fineness" contains 25.8 grains nine tenths fine, or 23.22 grains of pure gold. Let us assume now that Congress reduces the quantity of gold in the dollar to, let us say, 20 grains, or 15. Or let us assume that Congress, by one act or another, puts the country's currency "off the gold basis."

In that event what would be done about all these billions of dollars of bonds, mortgages, and other contracts containing the old "gold clause"?

The universal assumption has been that the creditor could continue to demand and insist on getting gold dollars of the old size, weighing 23.22 grains. Especially has that been assumed by the creditors.

The question, of course, would go into the courts, ultimately to the Supreme Court. What the Supreme Court would do is a thing about which there can be only surmise.

There is, in short, difference of opinion about what the courts would now do, under today's circumstances. In any event, there is a probability at least that the courts may now have occasion to pass on the "gold clause" again.

* * * * * * *

A recent and extremely important and interesting case arose last year in England. I suspect practically every lawyer in the United States will be looking this case up shortly—for a similar case, many similar cases, may arise at any time in any county court in Illinois or Iowa or Kansas or California.

In 1928, in England, a Belgian company, the "Société Intercommunale", borrowed £500,000. They gave in return bonds. In the bonds was a "gold clause", similar to the American one, stipulating that the company would pay "in gold coin of the United Kingdom of or equal to the standard of weight and fineness existing on the 1st day of September 1928."

Last year, when interest came due, a holder of a bond demanded gold. In the meantime Great Britain, on September 20, 1931, had "gone off the gold basis" and the paper pound had become worth approximately $3.20 as against the value of a gold pound, which was and is $4.86.

The debtor company tendered paper pounds. The holder of the bond refused that form of payment and the case went into the British High Court of Justice, Chancery Division. This court handed down its decision on October 27 last. In part the court said that the obligation was to pay "£100" and that if the sum were now paid in gold the payment would actually be more than a hundred pounds. "It is not a bullion contract. * * * The contract is a simple contract to secure payment of a sum of money, and if the defendants tender the sum in whatever might happen to be legal tender at the date the payment was due they have discharged their obligation. * * * In this country there are certain things—paper and metal—which are legal tender, and for the purpose of paying a debt a tender of the appropriate amount of any of those symbols is sufficient to discharge the obligation. * * * This is not a contract for the delivery of gold; it is a contract to pay a sum of money."

This decision was in the lower court. The case was carried to the British Court of Appeal and the decision was confirmed. The case is still subject to final appeal to the House of Lords.

EXHIBIT B

THE ENGLISH CASE

Mr. Justice Farwell's decision in the case of Feist v. Société Intercommunale Belge d'électricite must have come as something of a shock to all holders of foreign-issued bonds bearing a "gold" clause. The company had issued £500,000 of "gold" bonds, and in both the bonds and the coupons it undertook to make payment "in sterling in gold coin of the United Kingdom of or equal to the standard of weight and fineness existing on September 1, 1928" (varying dates necessarily appeared on the coupons), and the plaintiff contended that the company was therefore obliged to make payment in gold coin or in its bullion equivalent.

Here, surely, was a "watertight" gold clause, if ever such a clause can be, for it not merely specified payment in gold coin, but actually defined its weight and fineness.

Mr. Justice Farwell ruled, however, that the document was inconsistent: that on the one hand it was an undertaking to pay a defined sum of money, namely, £100, and on the other it seemingly undertook to pay an unascertained sum; that the former was the true meaning, and the payment could therefore be satisfied in current legal tender.

EXHIBIT C

INFLATION—WHAT IT IS—ADVOCATES HOLD IT WOULD RAISE PRICES BY CHEAPENING VALUE OF DOLLAR

By J. R. Brackett

NEW YORK, April 22.—What is inflation?

Advocates define it as:

1. A means of raising prices, particularly those prices which have fallen most.

2. A plan to raise these prices by reducing the value of the dollar through regulation of the money system.

All of the many plans now being proposed in Congress are based on these two points, whether by use of silver, more currency, lessening of gold content of the dollar, or more credit.

The keynote is to cheapen money in order to raise prices. Money is, in a sense, a commodity, and the price of it is determined in part by supply and demand.

TODAY'S DOLLAR DEAR

Cheapening the dollar is the reverse way of saying raising prices. The dollar today is dear, prices are low. In 1929 the dollar was cheap, prices were high.

Suppose it were possible to combine a sample of all the commodities bought and sold in the United States. Suppose this sample was worth $1 in 1926. Today such a sample would be worth about 60 cents. Commodities include everything from food to cement.

COMMODITIES PAY COSTS

On the other hand, suppose it were possible to combine a sample of all the interest charges paid on debts, railroad rates, public-utility rates, long leases, and other items which change but little in cost. Such a sample would be about as expensive today as it was several years ago.

To get money to pay these fixed costs, the merchants, manufacturers, and farmers must sell commodities. They must sell nearly twice as many commodities today to meet those fixed costs as in 1929.

The purpose of the inflationist is to raise the price of the commodities so the costs may be easily met. The difficulty in meeting them in the depression has meant bankruptcy, foreclosure, and default—in a word, deflation.

WOULD MAKE MONEY CHEAP

Inflationists would meet this difficulty by raising prices with cheapened money.

Suppose dollars were for sale in the stores and could be purchased with the sample of all commodities described above. In 1929 the merchant asked one sample for $1; today he asks two samples for $1.

It costs about twice as much to buy a dollar. Money is expensive to buy. Inflationists would make it cheap.

INCREASING THE AMOUNT

In general, they would bring this about either by actually increasing the amount of all money in the country, or by devaluating the dollar by reducing its gold content.

The first plan makes money cheap by increasing the amount of it.

If the merchant above had a large supply of dollars he would sell them cheaper. If the whole Nation had more dollars it would willingly pay more of them for the sample of commodities.

REDUCING THE GOLD

The second plan would reduce the gold content of the dollar. If the gold content were cut in half, the gold would go twice as far in backing the currency, and would, the plan's proponents hold, have a lifting effect on commodity prices.

Many economists and financial observers believe a process of inflation started some time ago when the Government attempted to hasten the reopening of banks and planned the easing of mortgages, among other things.

These plans, they say, would bring money in closed banks back into use and would increase the liquidity of frozen funds in mortgages. Such an inflationary process is viewed as temperate and possible of control.

Mr. TYDINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Bratton	Copeland	Frazier
Ashurst	Brown	Costigan	George
Austin	Bulkley	Couzens	Glass
Bachman	Bulow	Cutting	Goldsborough
Bailey	Byrd	Dickinson	Gore
Bankhead	Byrnes	Dieterich	Hale
Barbour	Capper	Dill	Harrison
Black	Caraway	Duffy	Hastings
Bone	Connelly	Erickson	Hatfield
Borah	Coolidge	Fletcher	Hayden

Johnson	McKellar	Reynolds	Townsend
Kean	McNary	Robinson, Ind.	Trammell
Kendrick	Murphy	Russell	Tydings
Keyes	Norbeck	Schall	Vandenberg
King	Norris	Sheppard	Van Nuys
Logan	Nye	Shipstead	Wagner
Lonergan	Overton	Smith	Walcott
Long	Patterson	Steiwer	Wheeler
McAdoo	Pittman	Stephens	White
McCarran	Pope	Thomas, Okla.
McGill	Reed	Thomas, Utah

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think we should approach consideration of the pending amendment by admitting that a very many, certainly most, of the facts adduced by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], if not all of his conclusions, are true. There is no doubt in the world that people have borrowed money which at the present prices they cannot repay. There is no doubt in the world that people bought stocks and bonds. A policy of inflation will cause those bonds and stocks to decrease from their present-day value. There is no doubt that the debtor in this respect would probably be benefited if it were rationally and equitably carried through as a policy.

There are certain factors, however, in connection with the subject matter which ought not to be overlooked and which it seems to me up to the present time at least have received no consideration. I want to start what I may say by calling attention of the Senate to a paradox. Everybody in this Chamber, in fact in all the parliaments of the world, daily make use of the utterance that "the depression is world-wide." Yet all the cures for that depression which are offered are internal and not international cures. We are in the position of a man who is covered from head to foot with a disease. Our cure for the disease is to make well one part of the man's body, assuming that the other parts will as a matter of consequence get well of their own weight. If the depression is world-wide the cure must be world-wide. If the depression is internal, then the cure must be internal. Any other premise upon which an argument is based must of necessity be fallacious.

I want to begin by reading the words of Woodrow Wilson sent to the Congress of the United States right after the World War, because while he did not picture the situation with great clarity or with great foresight, apparently he did visualize that at this time we would be in this situation by a pursuit of the policy which we have adopted for the past 18 years since the World War started. Here is what President Wilson then said. This was a message sent to the Congress on January 3, 1921, and I quote in part:

> Large Government credits were extended during the war to certain European governments associated with us in the struggle. These ceased several months after the armistice, except for commitments already made either directly or indirectly. The recent Brussels Conference—

Mark these words, Senators!—

> The recent Brussels Conference, composed of experts from many European countries and from other nations, itself expressed the opinion that further credits should not be accorded directly by governments. I do not believe that they should be accorded indirectly. Exports of domestic products have not declined since the armistice. On the contrary, they have greatly increased. From an aggregate value before the war of less than $2,500,000,000, and of about $6,000,000,000 the last year of hostilities, they rose in the calendar year of 1919 to more than $7,900,000,000, and this figure will probably be exceeded for the last calendar year. For the first 11 months of the last calendar year we exported more than $7,500,000,000 worth of domestic merchandise. These have been largely privately financed. The difficulty in the way of still larger exports does not seem to lie so much in the lack of financial ability here as in Europe's lack of means to make payment. Her productive energies and the services which she renders have not yet reached the point where they balance the value of commodities taken from this Nation, and her ability to furnish for additional exports securities which business men would feel justified in taking is restricted. The experts of the Brussels Conference reported that "one of the chief obstacles to the granting of credit is the absence in borrowing countries of securities for ultimate payment." Until this obstacle is removed it is difficult to see how materially larger exports to Europe are to be made, even if exporters, aided or unaided by Government finance, stand ready to do their part.

Listen to this statement:

> It is remarkable that Europe is able to make effective demand for as large a volume of our goods as she is making. It is gratifying evidence of her recovery and progress toward full production and sounder financial condition.

I could read more, but I shall not do so.

How many of us in this Chamber realize that the balance of trade of the United States with the remainder of the world has been in our favor each and every year since 1893? There has not been in that 39-year period one year when we did not sell to the world more of our products than the world sold of its products to us. Indeed, to be exactly accurate, during that period of time we have sold to the world $36,000,000,000 worth more of the products produced in this country than the world has sold to us—a $36,000,000,000 balance of trade in the 39-year period, almost $1,000,000,000 a year favorable trade balance.

Does inflation take account of that fact? Does inflation take account of the fact that since 1920, or, in other words, commencing with 1921 we have sold to Great Britain alone $6,000,000,000 worth of our products more than she has sold of her products to us—twice the present value of the war debt to this country—$6,000,000,000 worth of farm products principally, forsooth, that have left this country and found purchasers over in Great Britain. Does inflation take into consideration that fact involving a favorable trade balance with one nation of $6,000,000,000 in the last 10 years? How many of us are keeping in mind the fact that one third of our exports are the product of the farm? Does inflation take into account that fact? If it does, I fail to see where it is applied.

Nothing in the world will compel us to assume a policy of isolation more than does the pending proposition, in my judgment. It is a policy of America living unto herself. We are saying good-bye to the rest of the world in the face of the fact that during the last 39 years we have sold $36,000,000,000 more of our goods to the world than the world has sold of its goods to us. Are the farmers of the West and the farmers of the South ready to pay that price? Are they ready to say good-bye for all time to their export market? Remember, we are exporting nearly 20 percent of our total agricultural production. Are the farmers of America ready to say good-bye to that for all time? That is what is being said in this amendment, because it means isolation for America.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator says the adoption of the amendment means isolation. Is not the whole theory of the bill to use its provisions for the purpose not of bringing about isolation, but bringing about an international agreement as to a new standard of money and currency so as to make the standard fair and uniform and facilitate trade with the whole world, rather than to isolate ourselves by pursuing our own policy without regard to what foreign nations are doing?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am glad the Senator has asked that question. I had not intended to come to it for a little while, but I will come to it now.

When the World War was over our Allies said they could not pay the war debt in full. President Harding sent a recommendation to the Congress and as a result of that recommendation the Congress created the World War Foreign Debt Commission. Then we revised the debts that every nation owed us, scaling them down. We refunded the debts on a lower plane than that which formerly existed. In the case of Italy, she received an equivalent reduction of about 80 percent. In the case of France and Belgium the reduction was about 50 percent. In the case of Britain, it was about 30 percent, for while the British pay us 3 percent interest for the first period of years and then 3½ percent, the Italians pay only one eighth of 1 percent upon their bonded indebtedness. So that, figured on the basis of the price at which foreign bonds sell today, we have in reality made a reduction of Italy's debt of 80 percent and of the British debt of 30 percent.

How much gold was there in the world at that time? There was about 11½ billion dollars. In 1931 over one fourth of that was in this country, because at that time we had $4,000,000,000 worth of gold. That was more than one fourth of the total monetary gold stocks of the world; yet in the case of Great Britain alone we required that she pay us $500,000,000 annually in gold to settle her unfavorable balance of trade with this country, and an average of $180,000,000 a year as installments upon her war debt, making a total of $680,000,000 a year that must come in gold from Great Britain to the United States. Great Britain has only $715,000,000 worth of gold; she has only $250,000,000 worth of silver, or about $1,000,000,00 all told; and yet we have required Great Britain to pay us three quarters of her entire monetary stock each and every year since the debt settlement down to 1933.

Nobody can deny a single figure I have mentioned. If there is any dispute about it, let somebody rise now and say where the error lies.

Talk about making international currencies equal! Talk about stabilizing the monetary systems of the world! I believe the time has come to be truthful in this matter, and not to wave the American flag unless the American flag ought to be waved. I say that the policy of this Government ever since 1920 has been to drive Britain eventually off the gold standard, and there is no escape from it. It is the only way she could balance her budget and continue to exist. Every economic fact that enters into the matter is true; and yet we gave our best customer, which since the war has paid in unfavorable trade balances twice the amount of the debt, a reduction of only 30 percent in the settlement. We gave some other countries which were not as good customers of our products as was Great Britain an 80-percent reduction.

What happened? Talk about stabilizing the money values of the world! As soon as we demanded the payment of the war debts and the private debts and the trade balances in gold, every country that had silver money called in the silver money and melted it up into bullion and traded it for gold, selling it on the world silver market. To this hour 541,000,000 ounces of silver have been gathered in by the governments of the earth and melted up into silver bullion and thrown upon the world's silver market, glutting it and driving the price from $1 down to 25 cents an ounce. Sixty percent of all the countries of the world are on a silver basis, and they must translate their silver money into gold before they can come and buy the products of our farms and our factories and our mines.

Is it any wonder? We demanded payment in gold, did we not? Can we blame these governments that owed us money, whose trade balances with the United States were unfavorable, whose war debts had to be paid in gold, whose private debts had to be paid in gold, for getting all the gold they could lay their hands on with which to discharge their obligations?

The 541,000,000 ounces of silver money which has been demonetized and melted up and thrown on the world's silver market is one thirtieth of all the silver produced in the world since Columbus discovered America. I owe my summary of these figures to the industry of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], who secured these facts from our commercial attachés throughout the world, and who gave them to me the other day, for which I am deeply obligated. That amount of silver, by a natural calculation, is one thirtieth of all the silver produced in the whole world since Columbus discovered America. Is it any wonder that the silver currencies have depreciated? But who compelled them to depreciate, if not the United States, which demanded payment only in gold? Then we want to blame England and France and Italy and Belgium and India and all these other countries for doing only what, by the sheer force and working of economic laws, was inevitable.

Now we come along, at this belated hour, when the horse is out of the stable, and try to lock the door. Now we come along, realizing that the price of silver has gone away down to nothing, and carry in this very bill a provision to accept $100,000,000 of silver in payment upon the war debts. What a pity we did not do that 4 or 5 or 6 or 8 years ago, and arrest the decline of silver, and keep our markets with the Orient and with South America and with Mexico!

The citizen of Bombay, India, has to take 5 of his silver pieces to buy 1 American gold dollar today, where he used to take 2 of his silver pieces to buy 1 only a few years ago. A Ford automobile in India today costs about $2,700; 5 or 6 or 7 or 8 or 10 years ago one could be bought there for about twelve or fourteen hundred dollars. Is it any wonder that we are not trading with the Orient? Is it any wonder that the nations which have to pay us with gold are depreciating their gold basis so that they can get down upon a plane where the international exchange will make trading with those countries favorable? Are we not forcing them to do it?

Notwithstanding the fact that our balance of trade with the world has been favorable for 39 years, in 1920 we passed the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act. We had the idea in this country that we could keep on selling to every nation in the world and keep them from selling anything to us. We had the idea that there were no smart men in those other countries; that they would sit by and see us bar their goods and would not bar our goods in return. This depression was only postponed by the fact that during the last 12 years we have loaned $15,000,000,000 to foreign governments. Since 1920 the amount of the foreign governmental loans sold in the United States was around $15,000,000,000, and they were paying us the unfavorable balance of trade which they owed to the United States with the money that we were lending to them. They were paying off their unfavorable trade balance with the money that we were sending abroad and spending and circulating there. When we quit making these foreign loans the trade declined precipitately. The minute no more of our money went abroad, as I have shown by the total amount of gold stocks in Great Britain, there was not enough gold over there to keep the show going.

It is said that we ought to make England get back on the gold standard. It is said that we ought to make France get back on the gold standard. Then we ought not to put into operation the policies which, in the very nature of things, drive them off the gold standard. There is no escape from it—not the slightest bit.

This business of thinking that the United States is always right and the rest of the countries of the world are sitting around scheming how they can take advantage of us is more demagogic than actual. We have built up our prosperity not alone through the efforts of our own people but through the foreign money which poured into this great potential theater of endeavor and operations from abroad. Prior to the World War foreigners invested in our railroads and in our industrial establishments and in our banks and in our property and in our mines by the billions of dollars because they knew there was a great opportunity here for return, and that the money would be safer here than at any other place on earth. During the same time we sent back, every year, a great amount of gold to foreign countries in dividends upon those investments, or in amortization of the bond issues, or in interest on the bond issues. So, while they were sending their gold over to us to pay us for their unfavorable balance of trade, we were sending gold back to them to pay dividends on the investments they had made, and gold flowed back and forth and the world was in balance. We were a debtor and an exporting nation. Today we are a creditor and an exporting nation, and the gold is all coming this way; and there is only eleven and a half billion dollars' worth of it in the whole world. Imagine a pile of gold 35 feet long, 35 feet wide, and 35 feet high and you have all the gold under God's sun.

Does a policy of inflation take into account the fact that sooner or later the time will come when we cannot keep one foot on the international road and one on the road of isolation? We shall have to walk one road or the other. I am not rising, may I say to the Senator from Oklahoma, to direct opposition to his proposal. There is much justice in it. There is much sense in it. All I am attempting to point out is that we are at the parting of the ways. We shall have to go back on all our history, we shall have to go back on $36,000,000,000 of favorable trade balances in the last 40 years, we shall have to cut loose from all the world—and, incidentally, the war debts plus our private loans to governments, amount to $23,000,000,000, and we on top of that have loaned another $3,000,000,000 to foreign corporations. We have 26 billion invested throughout the world, only about 10 billion of which are war debts; and the interest on that, at 5 percent, brings in a billion and a quarter dollars in gold a year. Do we want to say good-bye to that?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED. Is it not a fact that if we debase the dollar by cutting its gold content in half, we are thereby canceling half of the present debt due to this country from foreign nations?

Mr. TYDINGS. There is no question about it; and the next step will be, and I can hear the Senator from Pennsylvania now, "We need more tariffs", because this is the road of isolation, and who is going to refuse them? What are you going to do, Mr. Cotton Farmer who raised this pound of cotton for 5 cents a pound, when one half of your world market is gone? I will tell you what he will do. Let us translate that into terms of human beings.

The cotton crop is produced in 16 States—a fourth of all those in the Nation. As nearly as I could get the figures from the Bureau of Agricultural Economics down here, there are 6,288,000 farms in America, and 1,986,000 of them, about a third of the total, produce cotton. It is the major crop on most of them. If over half of our cotton crop goes abroad, then half of the farmers who are producing it are producing for the export market. We cannot get away from that. There are 1,655,000 cotton farmers in America; so, if we say good-bye to our export trade, 800,000 of them will have no means of livelihood; and they, with their dependents, constitute a nice little population of 2,000,000 people that we will have to feed, clothe, and shelter.

Does inflation take that step into account? Let us take the case of wheat. Wheat was produced on 940,000 farms. The total value of the crop was $514,000,000, and we shipped 18 percent of it abroad in 1929 or 1930, I have forgotten the year. Therefore, if 18 percent of it went abroad, then 18 percent of the farmers raising it were working to supply the foreign market. If 18 percent of all those engaged were working to supply the foreign market, then 286,870 wheat farmers were working to supply the foreign market. They and their dependents make another million who must be fed, clothed, and sheltered. They cannot go to raising oats, they cannot raise rye, they may raise a little more hops now, but even that market will not absorb their number, and I am wondering whether we are ready to have another million persons thrown on the market.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Is the Senator later on going to tell us just how we are to lose the foreign market by the adoption of this amendment?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I am coming to that.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator ought to tell us that first.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator wants me to tell him how that is to result. I want to build up to it. It is inescapable, as I have prepared these categories in all fields of endeavor, translated from bushels and tons and pounds to the human beings. I am going through and take the totals, although there are some observations I should like to pass on in between, but I shall skip over them.

In all lines of work there are 48,829,920 persons over 10 years of age gainfully employed in the United States. My authority is the United States Occupational Statistics, Department of Commerce. All those persons working together in 1929 produced $52,000,000,000 worth of goods, outside of gold and silver. Of this amount, and excluding re-exports, $5,170,000,000 worth were sold abroad. That is 10 percent of the total. Therefore the complete loss of our foreign market would mean that 10 percent of all persons normally and gainfully employed would immediately be thrown out of employment. That would be 4,882,000 people.

If we will study the occupational statistics, we will find that there are 10,000,000 agricultural workers in the United States, and 16,000,000 in the mechanical industries. Those figures lead to the conclusion that each farmer supports one and a half mechanical workers, and every one and a half mechanical workers support one farmer. In other words, employment, to a certain extent, is correlated, so that if 4,800,000 people were thrown out of employment, assuming we had no foreign trade whatsoever, that would automatically, before the repercussions cease to be heard, throw approximately a similar number out of work.

I can illustrate that best by the railroads. In 1929 the total freight receipts of the railroads were about $4,200,000,000. Therefore a loss of our export markets, which were one tenth of our total production, would have meant a loss of one tenth of the gross freight receipts, or about $450,000,000 a year. But railroad income and railroad fixed expenses are not the same. Taxes remain the same, interest on bonds remains the same, sinking-fund requirements remain the same, but railroad operating income does not remain the same. So pretty soon we are at the point where income will not pay stock dividends, and in time will not pay bond requirements. What happens then? Contracts for new orders are canceled, affecting steel mills, car foundries, locomotive works, Pullman-car works, cotton away back on the farm, and many other things. People on the inside, learning that railroad stocks are becoming insecure, begin to sell them. This communicates itself to car-foundry stock, locomotive stock, and the like, and soon the whole process of deflation is on its way.

In my judgment, the unemployment today is directly attributable to the loss of the foreign market, because the calculations work out exactly to an apex. For every dollar of foreign market we have lost that has made its proportionate contribution to the army of the unemployed, and when we get back $5,000,000,000 a year worth of new orders we will put back to work 10,000,000 people who are now out of employment. If America wants to abandon that whole policy permanently, let me call attention to the fact that the unemployed who would be directly thrown out of work through the loss of our foreign trade, plus those who would be indirectly thrown out of work by the same calculation, plus their dependents, would make an unemployed army of 22,000,000 men, women, and children. Are we ready, through Government taxes, to support 22,000,000 more people in idleness in the United States? That is what we are asked to approve.

Somebody says, "This is only internal. What relation has this to the monetary systems in the rest of the world?" To start with, I go back to my original conclusion. Everybody who speaks here says the depression is world-wide. If a man is sick all over, making his little toe or his thumb well will not make him well; and if this world remains sick all over, outside of the United States, mark my words, the United States will never get well. We are all going to die or we are all going to live together, and if there is anything left in the tenets of Christianity, that ought to be our course. We ought to want to live and to let live. This business of starving the people of these poor countries simply because we have the economic might to do it should make every man who advocates that never want to put his foot inside a church again. To leave economics for a minute and splurge over into the field of religion, which I very seldom do, even in debate, let me say that it is absolutely contrary to the teachings of Jesus Christ, and we will pay for it in the end.

We are asked to give up a billion dollars' worth of trade balances a year, to give up a billion and a half dollars of debts which are owing to us, either in private or Government debts, through a policy of isolation; and internal inflation is nothing more than a policy of isolation because it is a retaliation, as the press shows, against the money systems of England, France, and the other countries. I have already traced the history of silver, and God knows that picture should stop us from making gold go through the same downward spiral through which silver has gone.

It is said that we are not responsible for the unsettled condition of the world's gold monetary stock. Let me call attention to a few facts. The measure which became the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act was introduced in 1929 and it was written into law in 1930. I want to tell the Senate what the rest of the world did in 1930, 1931, and 1932. Listen to this: Senators may think this world is not tied up together.

We passed the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act to keep out the pauper goods of foreign countries so that our rich working men and women would not be jeopardized and hurt. Do Senators know what was said over in France? Those people over there said, "We will put tariffs on to protect our poor working men and working women and keep out the goods manufactured by the rich working men and women of the United States."

When we said we were going to pass a tariff act to keep out goods made by the poor people over there England went up to Ottawa and passed a tariff act to keep out goods made by our rich working men and women here. Who lost by that? We were selling to all of them more than they were selling to us, and we lost by it. If gentlemen believe in this policy of isolation, go out and argue it with the unemployed. There are 10,000,000 of them who will take on the argument. Go out and argue it with the farmer, whose farm values have gone down. Go out and argue it with the banker, go out and argue it with the workingman. We are already isolated, we are living in the greatest pool of isolation that has ever been created since the beginning of time, and we are stewing in our own juice; and, like people who have been wrong, we are trying to blame it on everybody else, and I will not join in doing that. I am going to take my share of the responsibility.

Mr. President, let me show what the rest of the world did after 1930 to keep out the products made by the rich working men and women of the United States from going into these countries which had only pauper labor. In 1930 the first thing we heard was that M. Briand, celebrated world statesman of France, seriously advocated before a European conference a European customs union against the products of the United States. By the end of 1930 Norway, Sweden, Belgium, and Holland entered into an agreement for reciprocal trade relations between themselves and against the rest of the world. In Latin America many countries adopted policies for the curtailment of imports. In 1930 there were six general or exclusive tariff revisions on the part of many European countries, with a general trend in rates upward. All but two of the governments of Europe made some changes in their tariff rates during that year, and Senators know which the two were. They could not do it under the Treaty of Versailles. Early in 1931, the rest of Europe having raised its schedules, Austria and Germany entered into a customs union in an effort to keep the trade with one another because the rest of the world was barred.

In the Far East, China increased her tariffs; in the Netherland East Indies, a 10-percent increase immediately became effective. I could read on ad libitum. I could quote from the Department histories, but I will not take the time now.

Mr. President, the movement could be traced. Yet we are talking about keeping out the products of these poor people. Who started the tariff war? The tariffs are working against our customers. Are there not smart men in those governments? Are they going to sit down and see us bar the importation of their products and not keep ours out when the balance of trade with us is already in our favor?

In France they not only adopted retaliatory tariffs against American imports—and, by the way, with the exception of 1 year we have sold France more every year than she has sold us since 1910—but the balance of trade was so heavily against France (her annual payments to us took gold, the payments on the private debts she owed to American investors took gold, her trade balances took gold) and in order to try to turn the balance of trade from against her to her favor she not only put on tariffs but she put on quota and embargo provisions.

May I remind my colleague from Maryland our State produces apples, and we export 88 per cent of them, principally to Europe. But we could send only so many apples into France, notwithstanding the fact that the merchants over there wanted to buy more. That was France's effort to turn an unfavorable balance of trade into a favorable one. Look at our apple orchards today. We could sell those apples everywhere, but the tariff and quota and embargo laws prevent us from selling the apples.

Mr. President, is that the way to make the United States prosperous? Take the markets away from the farmers; take the markets away from the people who used to supply them, and we have ten or twelve million people unemployed.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I will yield in just a moment. I want to say a word further along this line. "Oh, yes;" it is said, "look what France did; she stabilized her franc at less than 5 cents instead of 20 cents. Look what Great Britain did; she went off the gold standard." Who compelled her to go off the gold standard? I think with the depression existing all over the world the time to wave the foolish flag of a silly, stupid, short-sighted, ostrichlike nationalism has passed. The depression is world-wide, and if it is to be cured it will be cured in a world-wide manner or not at all. I now yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. In reference to what the Senator says about tariff wars, I fully agree with him. Two years ago a member of the Liberal Party of Great Britain, who has always been a free-trader, told me he was going to vote for a protective tariff, "because", he said, "since this tariff war started and your people were a part of it, the balance of trade against Great Britain last year was a billion and a half, and", he said, "we cannot afford to let goods come in, because we cannot afford to pay for them when we cannot sell."

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course not.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. "So", he said, "we have got to shut them out. We may have to eat less, but we cannot let the country go bankrupt in this tariff war."

A German statesman, when I called his attention to the fact that Germany had imported over $800,000,000 of agricultural products and yet had just then put a high tariff on agricultural products, and when I asked him how Germany could afford to do that, with the low wage level and high prices for food in Germany, said, "We cannot afford to let agricultural products come in, because we have no method of payment. Since you passed the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill you will not take our goods; we have not enough, and yet we cannot pay and we cannot afford to let them come in."

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course not. May I follow the Senator's suggestion by saying that if anyone will take the figures of our export trade with the world during the last 40 years and examine them he will find that during the very years when we imported the most goods from abroad we exported the most goods to foreign countries. In other words, we sold more to the world when the world was selling the most to us. Why? Because foreign countries took the money which they received from selling their goods in our market to pay for the goods which they bought from us. The farmer goes to town with 10 dozen eggs. He cannot buy a pair of shoes until he sells his eggs. So, Europe cannot buy our products unless we buy hers. A man cannot buy what he has not unless he parts with what he has. I think we have had enough of isolation. I certainly am sick of it; and if I have contributed to it, directly or indirectly, I am sorry; and I certainly am not going to contribute to any more of it than I have to.

There are some people who, even in spite of all the economic chaos in the United States, in spite of the fact that 12,000,000 workingmen and workingwomen are pounding the pavements and have been pounding the pavements for 3 years, still want more tariffs. Let me point out to them that the value of our imports has declined over two thirds since 1929. They represent a very small fraction of our normal production. If we need tariffs to make America prosperous, why, in the name of common sense, are we not prosperous. We have them, and every other country beneath God's sun has them; the whole world is locked up in watertight tariff compartments as I stand here speaking. No nation can trade with any other.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD rose.

Mr. TYDINGS. Before the Senator interrupts, let me say further along that line of thought, and then I will yield, that I used to hear the former Senator from Utah, Mr. Smoot, who was a devout and sincere protectionist, say that a great percentage of our imports were on the free list. I looked that free-list question up the other day and I found of the raw materials imported over half of them were silk and rubber. I know the Senator from Nebraska wants the rubber farmers of America to have a square deal.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. And the coffee farmers.

Mr. TYDINGS. And the silk farmers. Then I looked up the figures as to foodstuffs, and I found that over one third of our food importations consisted of coffee—and God knows we do not want to put the American coffee raiser on a level with the coffee producer down in Brazil. But when it came to manufactured commodities, when it came to commodities which we ourselves produce, the desire was not to equalize the cost of production at home and abroad; oh, no; the desire was to put the tariff wall up so high that nothing of a similar nature could get over it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now?

Mr. TYDINGS. I now yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Department of Labor report shows that the decline in industrial production and the increase in unemployment started in the United States within 30 days after the House voted for the Hawley tariff bill on the 28th day of May 1929, and that industrial production has decreased and unemployment has increased until this day.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right, and if that is the trouble, what are we dealing with the gold dollar for? What are we trying to deal with the agricultural situation internally for? I firmly believe that that is the trouble; at least, I believe it is the trouble after I have examined all the facts which have come within my possession; and if it is the trouble, I am in favor of attacking the disease where it exists.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not want to interrupt the Senator any more than just to say that I believe the tariff war resulted in the currency war.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that conclusion is inescapable. I will not take the time, unless the Senate would be interested in hearing it, but I examined the figures the other day as to the amount of gold in the world and who had it. I found that in 1931—I think that was the year for which I took the figures—we had $4,593,000,000 of gold; France had $2,100,000,000 of gold; Great Britain had $718,000,000 of gold; Germany had $543,000,000 of gold; Spain had $470,000,000 of gold; Argentina had $420,000,000 of gold; Japan had $411,000,000 of gold; Italy had $278,000,000; and Russia had $248,000,000 of gold. Thus 9 nations, between them, had $9,790,000,000 worth of gold, which is about nine tenths of all the gold in the world.

Mr. GORE. As of what date were the figures compiled?

Mr. TYDINGS. As of January 31, 1931.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to get off on the money just yet, if the Senator will excuse me.

Mr. FLETCHER. I merely want to say a word which will not make the Senator digress from his line of thought at all. He laid down the proposition that the United States is about to lead in a direction and to establish a precedent that will be harmful to all the other nations of the world and will destroy our foreign trade. I merely wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that 30 foreign nations are already off the gold standard and have been off that standard for nearly 2 years.

Mr. TYDINGS. And, while the Senator was absent, I showed how we drove them off the gold standard.

Mr. FLETCHER. I thought the Senator was claiming that we are now about to do it.

Mr. TYDINGS. No.

Mr. FLETCHER. And 16 foreign countries have depreciated their currencies, and that system has been in operation for nearly 2 years.

Mr. TYDINGS. And the way to get rid of pneumonia is to go where the germs are prevalent.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand the Senator, he is opposed to any legislation on the financial question?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I am not.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, I did not get the right idea. Is the Senator opposed to the amendment which is pending?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am.

Mr. NORRIS. Is he opposed to all parts of it?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator believe, then, that if instead of changing the financial laws of our country we would repeal the tariff law, we would relieve ourselves from the depression?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has asked a very pertinent question, and I will try to inform him as to what, at least, I think should be done. First of all, if we depreciate the value of our money, in my humble judgment the same course will follow which followed the passage of the tariff act; England will be forced to devalue her money further; France likewise will do the same thing. In my judgment, the only reason why that is not being done now is because the statesmen of those countries are here, and they are hoping to forestall that very possibility by effecting some sort of an international agreement.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me finish, and then I will again yield. If we were now to devalue our money, in my judgment it would be foolish to have the international conference. I do not see any need of having it if we are going to pursue a policy of nationalism, of complete isolation. It strikes me that we ought to be consistent. If we hope to achieve a cure in the field of international difficulty, then let us lay aside these questions until after that field has been exploited and our efforts have failed.

If they shall fail, I can see that if other nations persist in a policy of trade and monetary isolation circumstances will leave us nothing more to do than to modify, to some extent at least, the existing disparity between debtor and creditor. But assuming, on the other hand, that we are to be successful in the international field, that tariffs are to be lowered through reciprocal agreements, that world trade is to be revived, that we are to regain our markets, that the world debts are to be settled in lump-sum payment of which I am strongly in favor for many reasons, and assuming that silver currencies are going to be stabilized and brought into some parity with gold, then I think that while a change for the better may not take place immediately, yet over a period of a few months there will be a decided improvement in the economic conditions of the country; and I submit that, in my opinion, such improvement will be sound and permanent.

What I am afraid of is that we are going into court having first called the man on the other side a bad name, which is not going to be conducive to the kind of litigation upon which we are about to enter. If we are going into the conference in a feeling of friendship, with a desire for honest fair dealing, then we had better leave out all controversial matters which we can and not proceed as if we are going to play a poker game.

My observation has been, humble though it be, in viewing past conferences, that their possibilities for good have to a large extent been destroyed by the assumption on the part of peoples who sent representatives to such conferences that they were not going to be fair, but that, as it were, there was going to be a poker game played and everybody had better watch his alley. That being the case, it could not help but affect the delegates, and they entered cautiously into the proceedings to find out what the other delegates were going to suggest. I think we have reached the Waterloo; I think we are at the Marne. We are standing at the Marne today with the army of depression coming on and attacking not only Paris but the capital of every other nation in the world. I believe the time has come for a counter attack, and I do not believe in making it on one front alone. I think that world trade can only be revived by all countries; that currencies can only be stabilized by all countries; that war debts can only be settled by all countries. I do not think they can be settled by any one country sitting back of the Atlantic Ocean on one side and the Pacific Ocean on the other.

Mr. NORRIS, Mr. SHIPSTEAD, and Mr. WHEELER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will yield after I make a further remark, because the Senator from Nebraska and I are both groping, I hope, toward the same objective—I know he is, and I hope I am—and that is relief for the American people. I may be wrong about it, as he often says; I hope I am wrong; but if this proposal shall be adopted, whatever I think about it I want the Senate now to know, for whatever my opinion may be worth.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I have undertaken to ask these questions not from any argumentative viewpoint or spirit.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand that.

Mr. NORRIS. I realize the Senator is acting in perfect good faith, of course. However, the Senator says that if we should adopt this particular amendment and act under it it would force Great Britain, for instance, to debase the pound still further, and would force France to debase the franc still further, and so on. Is the Senator satisfied now with the value of the dollar as compared with the value of the pound and the franc?

Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, no.

Mr. NORRIS. How are we going to remedy that situation?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is a very fair question.

Mr. NORRIS. What are we going to do about it?

Mr. TYDINGS. I believe, and I believe very sincerely, that we forced Great Britain to devalue the pound for the reasons I stated. First of all, she was sending to us $500,000,000 of gold every year to pay her unfavorable balance of trade with the United States. She was sending to us $175,000,000 of gold to pay her annual war-debt installments. In addition to that she owed us about three other billions of dollars in private loans we had made abroad. In other words, we had over $700,000,000 of gold coming year after year from Great Britain to the United States. Now she only has $714,000,000 of gold altogether, so that it would take her entire stock of monetary gold to make one annual payment.

What did England do? She tried desperately, like every individual debtor does who owes more than he can pay for the moment, to find avenues where she could get some more gold. Great Britain could not trade with us. Our tariff has taken care of that. She needed our cotton which she could not get any other place. It was going over there in abundance. There was no way she could turn the balance upon us. She looked to India, China, and South America. The Prince of Wales went to South America on a tour of friendship, and he went to China and to India, and tried to establish more friendly relations. That move did help Great Britain a little, but it was not enough to bring in sufficient money to supplement the gold monetary stock to the extent of the payments necessarily coming to America. So Great Britain, faced with that situation, had very little other alternative than to depreciate her money. It was the only way out, it seems to me. She had to get it in trade.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator believe that it is probable that we can get an international agreement that will fix the value of the pound and the dollar? Does he think that can be accomplished?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am very glad the Senator asks that question, because I might have overlooked it and I think there would have been a gap in my remarks if I had not covered that point.

I am very much encouraged from several factors that we will get such an agreement. First of all we know the Secretary of State of our own country. Fortunately the Senator from Nebraska and myself have both been in the Chamber many times when he has spoken. We know that he is international-trade minded. We know he believes that America is better off when it sells more goods abroad, and the facts show that it is, every time we are importing the most goods from abroad. I believe Mr. Hull was selected not because he was a strong man politically, not because he was dominant in his State, not because he was wealthy, not because of many other reasons that might normally enter into the selection of a person of that kind; but it seems to me that in that appointment more than in any other the President had indicated what was his outlook. I may be wrong.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator is right.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am coming now to the second fact. Mr. MacDonald is already here. I have read in the paper today that what he said is that we must all act together to stabilize the money value. Mr. Herriot has said the same thing. If they are going to meet to stabilize money values, had we not better leave ours alone for the meeting which is only 2 months away?

Mr. NORRIS. The adoption of the pending amendment, let me suggest to the Senator, does not necessarily mean that we will not wait. But let me ask the Senator this question: Suppose we fail to get an agreement, which we have tried a great many times, though sometimes I thought not in the best of faith; but for years we have been advocating an international agreement on financial questions. Suppose we fail; what shall we do then?

Mr. TYDINGS. I hate to make this remark and I hope I do not take too dark a view of the picture, but if these world representatives fail as statesmen to meet the conditions which have been pyramiding year after year until they cannot be piled up any further, then I am frank to admit that I do not expect to pursue in my future votes in this body, unless there is a little glimmer of light still left, any policy such as I hope I have more or less adhered to up to this time. I say that because in my judgment then we will go into a period of what might be called the economic dark age. We will say good-bye to every other country, more or less. Nationalism will run rife. I have looked across the sea. I have seen it in Russia. I have seen it in Germany. I have seen it in Poland. I should like to preserve my country, if I could, with some of its liberties, with some of its individualisms which have perhaps been abused and need modification; but I should like to prevent its swinging to the other extreme of the pendulum by waiting—although it has been a long wait—until the statesman of these various countries, all of whom seem now more than at any other time anxious to do the things that ought to be done, have acted.

I am going to say to the Senator from Nebraska that one reason why I feel like supporting the bill and the amendment is my belief that the President would not use the powers therein granted until after the conference failed, and only in the event it failed. But I know the pressure will be terrific on him. I know that no sooner will he affix his name to the document than the wires will burn with "Do this immediately" by men who are depressed, by men who have lost their all, by men who are hungry and out of work—not by the man who is reasoning along a course which may bring us out, but by the man who is grasping for a straw, a straw that will not support him, a straw that has not enough cork and buoyancy in it to hold him afloat. I hope we can get into an economic condition that will make the present look perhaps a little bit more rosy than it does at this time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator at that point?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. If the Congress is unable to withstand the demands for inflation, what right would we have to assume that the President would be able to withstand them?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator's question is very apt and, I think, answers itself. I do not believe the President would, however, but I do not believe that it will help him or the country to put him into that position. The reason why I do not think the President will is because up to now he has not only appointed a Secretary of State whose policies, according to the way I see the future progress of the country, show that he is a good man, but he has now the heads of governments here—not the representatives of the conference but the heads of the governments—and lo and behold, the heads of the 3 leading governments of the world, 3 of the 4 or 5 leading governments of the world are here today. They are down at the White House. They are sitting there talking as we are talking.

The world's conference comes off in a very short while. Each of the statesmen who has come here from abroad says that this is not a national problem. Each one of them says we have got to live and let live, one with the other. Each one of them says that he, as well as we, has made mistakes, that his government perhaps has been to blame as has ours. It seems to me that when we have that feeling, when we have that desire to cooperate—the only kind of cooperation which in my judgment will be helpful—we had better keep out an element which might upset the possibility of these gentlemen's interlocking their various ideas into a concrete workable machine with which to dissipate the depression.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I want to ask the Senator a question, but before I do that may I invite the Senator's attention to another important step that Great Britain took in her defense or in her efforts to maintain the gold standard? In 1925 she forced India on the gold standard in order to force the gold out of India by putting a premium on gold.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No one can deny the importance of stabilizing foreign exchange. I do not think anyone can quarrel with the desirability of that point of view. But we have, it seems to me, a domestic problem here which, so far as I am able to learn, does not affect foreign countries. The Senator will agree that when the war was over our capital structure was topheavy. From 1920 to 1930 we had underwritten a total of more than 70 billions of new capital issues payable in dollars. Does the Senator think our production of wealth, our national income, will support that kind of capital structure without some alteration of the value of the dollar? Is not the alternative wholesale bankruptcy?

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me interrupt the Senator. I am not going to take direct issue with the Senator, but let us see if this is not what we are getting into: Let us suppose that the value of the dollar is altered so that it is only worth, for example, 50 percent of its present value. Let us suppose the bill passes tonight and the President affixes his signature tomorrow morning. By the time the stock exchange opens there is no doubt in my mind that the roof would blow off of the stock market. There is no doubt in my mind at all that stock would immediately shoot up to highs that would be at this day almost unbelievable. Wheat would go up, and all commodities would go up.

Let us suppose that in the world conference an agreement is entered into stabilizing the American dollar at 90 cents. What happens to the 40 cents intermediate inflation between now and the ratification of the treaty stabilizing the dollar at 90 cents on the dollar?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. France stabilized her franc without consulting anybody, and Britain stabilized her pound the same way. What I am talking about is some agreement for stabilization of world currency.

Mr. TYDINGS. But the Senator leaves out one factor, one very great keystone in the arch of France's financial policy. France stabilized her franc over a period of years. The situation which I am calling to the attention of the Senator is a 3 or 4 months' period. We will have an unhealthy inflation, and then we stabilize the dollar, and what becomes of it? The minute the dollar is stabilized at 90 cents on the dollar, all the inflation the 50-cent dollar built up immediately collapses, and we have exactly the position which we are trying to get out of today, only compounded. That is the danger of this thing, and it is because of that reason that I cannot conceive that the President would put it into effect until after failure of the world conference.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. If this power is given to the President and not exercised by him for a considerable time, is it not obvious that all business has to be on the hand-to-mouth basis while that unexercised power hangs over the community?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has put his finger right on the quick nerve. Here, when the matter is only talked about, silver goes from 25 to 36 cents an ounce and stocks go from $1 to $9 or $10 a share, just on rumor. The ink will not be dry on that document before there will be men here who will immediately be yelling that what we need is a policy of deflation, that some other group of constituents have been mulcted in this process of inflation, and that here we have left those poor fellows along the wayside, bleeding and dying, and we had better adopt a policy of deflation in order that we can get them on firm ground again.

Mr. REED. I am wondering, if President Roosevelt had this power to debase the gold content of the dollar and did not exercise it, whether my friend the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], who says I am working for J. P. Morgan and the rich bondholders of the country, might not be in some danger of saying that about President Roosevelt if he refuses to debase the dollar as my friend would like to see it done? That would be an unhappy state of affairs.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I see inflation, I see a great deal of the possibility of real deflation instead of inflation in it before its effects are fully felt.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. In a moment I will yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I want to make just one observation.

Mr. TYDINGS. All right; go ahead.

Mr. WHEELER. I assume the Senator thinks that the bill to remonetize silver which I introduced the other day is conservative compared with this proposition of giving the President of the United States the power to devaluate the dollar at his will down to 50 percent.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has stated my position in exact words. The Senator from Montana was ultra conservative the other day in offering the proposition which the Senate then would not take, and now in adopting the one which they are about to take.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will, if my colleague will let me make just one observation first.

Great Britain has been our very best customer. Since 1910 Great Britain has bought from us $16,000,000,000 more of our goods than we have bought of hers. Think of it—five times the amount of the war debt! If anybody challenges those figures, I have them here, year by year.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I challenge them. If we take the British Empire as a whole, that is not true.

Mr. TYDINGS. But the British Empire is not paying this debt. We did not lend the money to the British Empire. We lent it to Great Britain, the United Kingdom; and we can collect it only from the United Kingdom. I have a few notes that I wish I could put somebody else on to help me discharge them; but, unfortunately, the man whose name is on the note is the one who has to pay it off.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. Just a minute; then I will yield, because I refused to yield to my colleague until I bring out this fact:

We say, "Oh, those English over there"—and I do not want to get off on the war debts—"those English over there ought to pay this debt. Notwithstanding they have bought $16,000,000,000 more of our goods than we have of theirs during the last 20 years, notwithstanding they send us half a billion dollars a year in gold, and notwithstanding they send us $180,000,000 a year in war-debt payments, they ought to pay us." "Well", I said, "how are they going to pay us? Let us see if they can"; and I took the income-tax schedules for Great Britain and the United States.

A single man who makes $1,250 in America pays the Government $10 income tax. A man who makes $1,250 in Great Britain pays his Government $56—five times as much.

A man who makes $2,500 in Great Britain pays the Government $253, while our man pays his Government only $60.

A man who makes $5,000 in Great Britain pays his Government $815. In our country he pays $160.

A man who makes $10,000 in Great Britain pays his Government $1,940. In our country he pays $600.

A man who makes $20,000 in Great Britain pays his Government $5,500, while our Government charges only $1,960 on the same income.

With all the doles in England, with all her unemployed—not recent but scattered over years—with the fact that her gold stocks have been depleted down to $715,000,000, and she has only $250,000,000 in silver, in the very nature of things how could she stay on the gold standard? She could not sell us anything. We even barred her coal when we were selling $15,000,000 worth of coal a year, and importing but $800,000. We had a ratio of 20 to 1, but we put a tax of $2 a ton on coal, and then we expect the British Government to pay us in gold. It is the most ridiculous, paradoxical situation, and it cannot be done.

I think the English people have been splendid in this whole situation.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I am going to yield to my friend next. I want to say, first of all, that they did not come here and ask for a 50-percent reduction in their debt. They came here and kept the old principal, and all they asked was a reduction in their interest rate. All these other countries got off with 20 and 30 and 40 cents on the dollar. England is our best customer. I say that the facts show that she has tried to pay her debt 100 cents on the dollar.

I yield now to my colleague from Maryland.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. President, I largely agree with much that has been said by the distinguished senior Senator from my own State, but I desire to go back a few moments. When he was speaking about the iniquities of the tariff, he directed my personal attention to the fact that the exportation of apples in Maryland had been very greatly hurt by the building up of the tariff wall in France.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I should like to ask the Senator if he is not conscious of the fact that Baltimore City is one of the greatest centers in this country for the manufacture of straw hats; and when we passed the tariff bill, did not the senior Senator from Maryland see fit to protect straw hats?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am very glad the Senator has brought that up, because I intended to bring it up myself; and I hope I shall have the attention of every man here.

What is the situation with straw hats?

I venture to say there is not one man on the floor of the Senate now who can tell me what percentage of the straw hats consumed in America are imported. If there is one, let him stand up. Do you mean to say that you are going to pass judgment upon a case about which you know nothing of the evidence? How many men here know how many straw hats are imported? [Laughter.] Well, I will tell you: Over one half the straw hats worn in America come from abroad; and if we revise the tariff, I shall not vote to reduce the tariff on straw hats for the simple reason that whenever the importations of an article which we are equipped to produce in abundance at home are over 50 per cent of the home production it cannot be contended that that tariff is either a prohibitory or an embargo tariff.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I am in sympathy with what the Senator says. I agree with him.

Mr. TYDINGS. Wait a minute. Does the Senator agree that that tariff is not a prohibitory or an embargo tariff, or does he say that it is?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I think it is a very proper tariff, as did the senior Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I gave the Senator a fair answer to his question, and he is evading mine; but it needs no answer, because whenever the importations of an article which the American producer can produce to supply the entire home market exceed the local production the tariff cannot be called a prohibitory tariff.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Must a Democrat vote for every low tariff, regardless of the factors that enter into it? Must a Democrat vote for free trade? I advocate no such policy. I will say that if you will show me in the entire tariff schedule any other article but straw hats—any other one—where the importations are more than half of the local consumption of that article, I will show you a case for a new duty; but you cannot show me another one.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator tell us how he voted on the manganese tariff?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not recall.

Mr. REED. The imports of manganese are more than 90 percent of the domestic consumption.

Mr. TYDINGS. I might have voted for a small tariff for revenue on that product. I do not have to vote against every tariff; but I will venture to say this, and the Senator knows this is logic, it is not politics: Whenever the importations of any article exceed the local production of that article, and we are in a position to produce it, it cannot be maintained that that is a prohibitory or an embargo tariff.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I am going to ask if there is any man who does say that that is a prohibitory tariff, because I do not want my position equivocated. Is there any man here who claims, under that state of facts, that such a tariff is an embargo or a prohibitory tariff? Is there any man here who now claims that a Democrat who believes in equalizing the cost of production at home and abroad could not support that tariff without going back on his principles? Is there any man here who will contend that?

There seems to be none. At last I have convinced the Senate of the justice of my position. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President——

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator has by no means convinced the Senate of his logic, because a while ago the Senator was emphasizing in general terms the Tariff Act of 1930 and condemning that as the reason for Maryland's losing 80 percent of its export of apples.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator ought to have been specific as to the tariff on straw hats.

Mr. TYDINGS. I was. The Senator from Michigan was sitting there dreaming about the bank situation in his own State.

Mr. COUZENS. Oh, no, no; the Senator cannot divert me in that way.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will recall, I pointed out the number of articles that were on the free list, the percentage that came in, how the Smoot-Hawley Act in most cases applied only to articles which we produced at home, and in those cases it was not applied with an idea of equalizing the cost of production at home and abroad but as an embargo; and the Senator knows by the facts now that the case of straw hats does not come within the embargo category.

Mr. COUZENS. I also contend that the other rates do not come within the embargo category, but the Senator condemned the whole tariff act as a reason for preventing the export of Maryland apples.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will read the Senator some of the items, then, to convince him that the other rates are not of the same kind as in the case of straw hats.

I venture to say that there is not a man in the Chamber who has ever made a study of the straw-hat situation. I venture to say that up to this afternoon there was not one Member in the Chamber who knew that over half the straw hats worn in America came from abroad. I venture to make the statement that there is not a man in the Chamber who knew that 5 or 10 years ago only 30 percent of the straw hats we wore came from abroad, and that during the past—well, to be on the safe side, I will say 10 years—the amount of straw-hat importations has grown each year, and it was only when they reached the halfway mark that the Senator from Maryland supported any increase in tariff; and wherever that condition can be shown with any other article, I am inclined to do the same thing, all things considered.

There is no violation of policy there, and I am not equivocating. I am going to talk about the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act now, since the Senator from Michigan wants me to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, is not the straw-hat season opening rather early this year? [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; for the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Of crude materials, 83 percent came in free; but raw silk and rubber—which, of course, we do not produce in the United States—between them accounted for one half of these importations. However, only 40 percent of finished manufactures and only 19 percent of manufactured foodstuffs were imported. Those who were seeking prohibitory tariffs were careful to see that there would be as little competition as possible in the American market for the products that they themselves produced.

I did not try to keep out any competition in the American market. I was ready to put the foreigner on a comparative parity with our own producers. All I asked for my people was the same right that I was giving to the other man. If the Senator had followed that policy, he could have taken me to task with a great deal more assurance.

Now, Mr. President, let us get back to inflation. We have a world conference coming on. We are going into that conference to chart the course of the United States for the future. This administration for the first 6 weeks seemed headed toward a solution of the world problem, and I hope it is still headed in that direction. I am inclined to believe that these grants of power which the administration hopes to secure are only to be used in the event the world conference is not successful. But I cannot see the sense of anticipating that lack of success, of injecting into this already chaotic condition factors which will but complicate and not simplify the solution of the grave matters ahead.

Mr. President, I believe that the depression is caused by international factors, principally a stoppage of international trade and commerce; secondly, by a debasement of silver money which has been debased to the extent of 541,000,000 ounces since 1920. I believe we will have to stabilize silver through a reverse of that process.

I think that in the international conference we ought to accept a lump-sum settlement of a fair amount in settlement of the war debt and get rid of it, and if we do that, I believe that a lot of these panaceas will be unnecessary.

Mr. President, I think the American people are sick and tired of expedients. I think they have had enough of unguents. I think they have had enough of palliatives. I think they have had enough of equivocation and evasion. They want an attack on the fundamentals, the underlying things which have brought on the depression. I think the Congress can support the President by waiting until an attack on the fundamentals has failed, before we inject into the conflict, already complicated, other and unrelated matters.

Therefore, I do not feel that I can bring my support to this matter at this time. If we do have inflation in the meantime, and subsequently stabilize the dollar, we will have the problem of more deflation brought on our doorstep. If, on the other hand, nothing is to be done about this matter, if the President is simply to be a reservoir for power, and wait until the world conference fails, then it might be passed on to him with some degree of soundness.

I am not going to vote to complicate what seems to be the one sound solution and forever condemn the United States to a policy of isolation, which means nothing more nor less than the regulation of industry, the 30-hour week, the regulation of agriculture, unemployment relief on a permanent scale, high income taxes, the loss of world trade, the loss of our war debts, and the loss of our private debts; and that in a country whose prosperity has been built up by selling more to the world than the world has sold to it. I am not going to turn my back upon our good customers unless our good customers force us to do it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma, I want to ask for one or two interpretations of the language of the bill concerning which there seems to be some misunderstanding and controversy.

I first call his attention to the language on page 2. Under subsection (a) there are two different permissions granted—first, respecting open-market operations; second, respecting the direct purchases of Treasury bills or other obligations of the Government.

Some have interpreted the language under subsection (a) as applying the $3,000,000,000 limitation only to the second one of these permissions. Will the Senator state whether, in his judgment, the $3,000,000,000 applies to the entire subsection (a)?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I would answer in the affirmative. Otherwise under subdivision (1) there would be no money to support the exercise of the power granted under that subsection. It is my understanding that the $3,000,000,000 is to be made available to do either or both of the things under subdivision (1) and subdivision (2).

Mr. VANDENBERG. Therefore, any interpretation that subdivision (1) is an unlimited permission would, in the Senator's judgment, be wrong?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is my judgment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If there is any doubt about it, the Senator would be very glad to clarify the language to make the situation plain?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Exactly so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to ask the Senator, in respect to the first of these privileges, what the language "corporations in which the United States is the majority stockholder" would embrace?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think that would embrace such corporations as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would it embrace Federal land banks, under the mortgage section of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In the event the United States owns a majority of the stock, yes; but unless the United States does own a majority of the stock, no.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator explain to me the result accomplished by the sentence injected at line 24, on page 2, reading as follows:

No suspension of reserve requirements of the Federal Reserve banks under the terms of section 11 (c) of the Federal Reserve Act, necessitated by reason of operations under this section, shall require the imposition of the graduated tax upon any deficiency in reserves as provided in said section 11 (c).

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. As I understand it, section 11 (c) of the Federal Reserve Act provides that when banks start to borrow, they can borrow a certain amount of money at a certain fixed rate. If they increase the borrowing, eventually the rate begins to increase likewise, and if the bank has to continue borrowing, the rate gets so high that they cannot borrow any more. It is the intention of this section to provide that banks can borrow without having the rate increased.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan permit an interruption?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. REED. My understanding of that is that where the reserve requirements are suspended, and less than 40 percent in gold is permitted to be kept as a reserve, this section of the Federal Reserve law puts a tax upon the deficiency under the 40 percent. The effect of the sentence referred to would be to suspend that provision of the law. It would allow a reserve to go below the 40 percent without any penalty and that is the whole purpose of it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is exactly the intent of my answer, because banks could not borrow at all unless they had the 40-percent reserve. Later, if they borrowed so that they did not have the 40 percent, then there would be a tax imposed. This would not impose the tax, although they might borrow when they did not have the 40 percent in gold backing up their reserves.

Mr. REED. This is not a question of the bank borrowing at all. The Federal Reserve banks will not borrow. They buy these Treasury obligations directly from the Government and issue Federal Reserve notes in exchange for them. In taking in these Government obligations they are increasing their own liabilities by the issuance of the notes, and, under the existing law, 40 percent in gold must be kept as a reserve against those outstanding notes. Obviously they are not getting in any gold when they are putting out notes and their reserve is going to be impaired. Under the present law they would be taxed by the amount of that impairment. Under the pending measure there would be no such tax.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, the net result would be permission to reduce the 40-percent coverage.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Without being taxed. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Now, I should like to ask the Senator a question as to page 4, referring to the second $3,000,000,000 limitation. May I ask whether the language commencing in line 6, which permits the issue of these notes for the purpose "of meeting maturing Federal obligations to repay sums borrowed by the United States" would include short-time notes to cover Budget deficits?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Exactly so. It includes those, as well as maturing long-time obligations. For example, $640,000,000 of Federal bonds were due on the 15th of March. We had to refinance those by selling short-term obligations. If this measure had been in effect, it would have been possible to pay those obligations with these Treasury notes. There are now maturing from week to week large volumes of short-time obligations, Treasury certificates of indebtedness. If we cannot refinance those to our satisfaction, as an alternative we will have this fund to fall back on, and it would be used for that purpose. I doubt whether it will be used for that purpose, but it is possible.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That virtually would mean the use of this privilege to meet Budget deficits, would it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In the event the Budget deficits have been converted into some sort of interest-bearing obligations.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The deficits could be translated into a 30-day obligation and then handled under this section?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The purpose of it is to find some means of getting the money into circulation. It would not do any good to print billions of dollars and leave them in the Treasury. The Government has printed $2,000,000,000 of money since the 4th of March in Reserve bank notes, and about $20,000,000 went into circulation. The balance of that 2 billion has done neither the country nor its citizens any good. It kept the printing presses running for quite a while, three shifts a day, and, in addition to having the printing presses running to print $2,000,000,000 of that money, they have been running for months printing the refunding bonds, and they are running now and will continue to run, until such time as we get back on some sort of a stable financial basis.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Could not the Senator completely reach his objective—and by his objective I refer to the necessity of getting the money to work—by confining this privilege to the purchase of United States bonds, so that there would be at least a thoroughly bona fide bonding transaction underlying the use of this monetary privilege?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think I would agree with the principle stated by the Senator; but I may state the real reason why that provision was placed in the amendment. Suppose some of these weeks we cannot refinance some of these short-term obligations satisfactorily. If the President should have the power to use these Treasury notes to purchase outstanding Treasury obligations, he would thereby have a club which those who have money would understand he had, and he could thereby, in my judgment, secure the sale of additional obligations, even long-time obligations, at a lower rate than could be accomplished if that were eliminated.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator thinks that the inclusion of that phrase is essential to the objective he has in mind?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is in harmony with the spirit of the entire measure.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator. I want to submit just one general inquiry to him further. If the philosophy of this amendment produces the result which the Senator has in mind, is there any sense in the price-fixing section of the farm relief bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me say that when that bill was prepared this matter apparently was not in mind; and in the hearings before our committee every day, we would get on to the money question. We just could not keep off it. It became a conviction in our committee that the money question had to be adjusted before anything could be done to help the farmer. So, in the last analysis, we decided to incorporate a report to the Senate calling attention to that fact. At that time, as I have said, this particular feature of inflation, or reflation, or expansion was not contemplated.

Now, since this is before the Senate and before the country, it is my judgment that if this amendment goes through, it will be practically a waste of paper and ink to print the farm bill, because I doubt whether it would be used, since even the talk about this amendment has done more to raise commodity prices than the entire farm relief bill might have done if placed in operation at vast expense and with the employment of hundreds and perhaps thousands of agents in the country.

I agree with the viewpoint expressed by the Senator, that the last provision would, in my judgment, do more to raise commodity prices, the thing we all want done, than the farm bill could do if it did all its sponsors claimed and hoped for.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then the Thomas amendment might fundamentally claim for itself that it will protect America against the need to use the Wallace-Tugwell-Ezekiel formula?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I should not want to make any commitments on that proposition because I can see in the bill given this lengthy title this additional virtue, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Michigan. Let us assume that the amendment under consideration would do what I think it will do, raise commodity prices to a point even higher than that contemplated under the original bill. It was hoped that under that bill the price of wheat would be raised to about 90 cents a bushel, cotton to about 12 cents a pound, and other things in proportion. That provision was being made for the express purpose of raising the prices of those commodities to a parity with the wholesale prices of other commodities—steel, for example—and other things which the people have to buy. If the "inflation amendment", so-called, should raise the price of farm commodities and at the same time raise the price of other commodities and perhaps later on they should still be at a disparity, then this bill might be used to give the farmers' prices and commodity prices a still further boost and raise them to a general average along with wholesale commodity prices.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Just one more question. Is there any provision in the amendment which provides for inflation without definite boundaries, except that section of the bill which relates to the content of the gold dollar? Let me put the question differently. Is not the section relating to the content of the gold dollar the only entirely unbounded inflation provision in the amendment? I am not referring to the 50-percent limitation; I am referring to the fact that one cannot estimate what would happen under it, whereas one can estimate the rest of the situation.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If this amendment should become law, the President could reduce the gold content of the dollar to any extent up to 50 percent. He could take out one half of the gold content of the dollar.

Mr. VANDENBERG. He could increase it 100 percent if he wanted to do so under the language of the amendment; but, of course, that is an absurd hypothesis.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes. Just what will be done no one can tell. As I understand, the President's action will be based upon the best expert advice and opinion he can secure, not only locally but abroad, because the question of money has ceased to be local and has become international; but I am satisfied that nothing will be done in the future under the amendment unless and until the leading trading nations competing with America come to some kind of agreement. If they remain off the gold standard, we will remain off the gold standard. We do not dare to go back on the gold standard so long as they stay off it or any one of them stays off it, because if we do, the country that does not go back on the gold standard can immediately depreciate its currency below the standard fixed and can take the trade of the world from those that are on the gold standard. We have been "buncoed", I think, long enough about that; and I doubt if we will take that action unless we all go back together.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The only point in the general amendment with which I find myself in serious difficulty is in respect to the release of this virtually unlimited power to the President to deal with the gold dollar. Will the Senator be good enough to state to me whether he thinks the remainder of the amendment would have adequate advantage in it pending the outcome of international negotiations regarding gold and silver, which, in turn, might come in the ordinary constitutional way to Congress for ratification? Does the Senator get the purport of my question?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes. Mr. President, it has never been my opinion that we should necessarily be forced off the gold standard. Had those in responsible position acted earlier, we would not today, in my judgment, be off the gold standard. We could have reduced the value of gold or its buying power through another process. By placing paper money in circulation or placing silver money in circulation we could have arbitrarily brought down the buying power of gold, and we might have had a vast sum—not too large—of real money in circulation. That fact of itself, in my judgment, would have brought down the buying power or the value of gold. We could have done that if we had commenced early enough, and it would not have been necessary to have gone off the gold standard. We could have been today operating under the gold standard with the value of gold away down below what it is now; but not having done that, and having adopted the policy of deflation, with the dollar mounting from month to month, now being at $2.44½ measured by farm commodities, we reached a point where we could not go any further, and when the people could not pay their debts, their interest, and the banks could not collect so as to pay their depositors, of course, the public knowing of these facts began to make runs upon the banks.

The banks cannot stand runs; sometimes it is difficult for them to stand the ordinary strain and drain upon their deposits; but when some unusual condition arises and the banks are called upon to pay currency or cash upon deposits to be hoarded, then they fail. That is what caused the bank holiday in March. So now we have reached the point where nothing can be done except to go off the gold standard. There are only $4,400,000,000 of monetary gold in America, but even so we have still nearly $40,000,000,000 of deposits; and when the people want their money, they want gold; paper is of no account.

I was handed a while ago a piece of Detroit scrip. Here it is [exhibiting]. It looks very much like money. That scrip circulates in Detroit and is good for $2, but it is not good anywhere else unless in the hands of someone who is going to Detroit. Paper money in itself is no better than that scrip. As I see it, we have gone off the gold standard, and we must remain off the gold standard until we get this matter stabilized.

Let me say again to the Senator from Michigan that it is my judgment that, although we are off the gold standard, this financial matter could be so handled that paper money would go to a premium above gold. If we should today make paper money so scarce that people could not get such money with which to pay their restaurant bills, their traveling and other bills, if they had to have it and could not get it, paper money would be at a premium over gold. That can happen if paper money is made sufficiently scarce. That is the explanation of my theory; that if we had started earlier and placed some additional money in circulation we would have brought down the buying power of gold, and all that is now proposed would have been unnecessary.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me bring the Senator back to my particular question. It is my understanding that the chief use intended to be made of the gold-dollar section of the bill is to arm the President in conducting international negotiations in respect to the international stabilization of gold.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I would say that, in my judgment, it has two possible benefits for this country. What the Senator has mentioned is one of them, but it is not the only one. If the President finds that the other nations cannot go back upon the gold standard at the present value of gold, then in adjustment with them we will have to reduce the number of grains in our dollar; but if the other nations will not go back on the gold standard under an agreement, then we must remain off that standard or else voluntarily reduce the number of gold grains contained in the dollar in order to make it comparable to theirs, and try it alone, which I do not think will be done.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But the Senator does not expect that any such experiment will be undertaken, at least until an international effort has first been made?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Absolutely not.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well. Now, does the Senator think that his amendment, without this advance authority to the President in it, but with a perfectly frank feeling on the part of Congress that it is ready to be receptive to an international agreement if, as, and when made, would cease to be useful if there were a present elimination of this warrant for the international agreement?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, let me answer that question in this way: If this section should be stricken out and the President should not be given the power vested in him arbitrarily to decrease the gold content of the dollar, and then he should participate in an international conference as President Wilson did at Versailles, in what position would he be placed? President Wilson no doubt thought that any agreement or treaty he made would be ratified by the Congress; but President Roosevelt, knowing of the experiences of former Presidents, will enter that conference with regard to money and say: "I cannot agree to anything; I must take any suggestions you may make back to the Congress; any treaty that I may propose will have to be passed upon by the Congress." Then he will get the best agreement he can. He comes back and submits it to Congress, and then what will be the result? Unending debate, because we never could agree upon the number of grains that should be in a gold dollar. Some want many grains in the dollar and others want few grains in the dollar, and we would never agree. Those interested in silver cannot agree as to that metal.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me use the precise example the Senator has submitted, because it is equally eloquent in illustrating, it seems to me, the menace of this section. Suppose President Wilson had been given this precise type of authority before he went to Versailles; the United States today would be a member of the League of Nations, which certainly would not be agreeable to a vast majority of the American people.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I do not want to get into that discussion.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am merely using the Senator's example.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me suggest to the Senator from Michigan a difficulty about deleting the provision with reference to the gold content of the dollar and undertaking to have the President negotiate on the assumption that Congress would later approve his action. Can the Senator understand with what timidity foreign nations would enter into any agreement as to the stabilization of their money without the assurance that when they make the agreement the United States is going to carry out its part of the contract?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I can fully understand that.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does not that suggest to the Senator's mind how desirable it is to invest the President with the power proposed, so that when he enters into an agreement as to fixing the gold standard throughout the world that the standard will be fixed in accordance with that agreement?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; but offsetting that timidity, there is what seems to me to be a rightful timidity within our own confines respecting how this grant of power might be used. It seems to me a perfectly good argument may be made either way.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator will permit me further, if our agreement as to fixing the number of grains in the gold dollar is on the same level with other nations' currencies with relation to their former standard, would there be any harm in the agreement?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I cannot answer the Senator until I see the agreement.

Mr. CONNALLY. How are we going to get the other nations of the world back on the gold standard when it is impossible for them to go back on the old standard unless we fix a standard somewhat comparable to their own and agree that that shall be an international standard?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I agree we must do precisely that thing, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. How are we going to do it unless we give the President, who is going to do the negotiating, the power to do what we want him to do and what the Senator says we have got to do, rather than to go into a conference and say, "I hope Congress will ratify what I am going to do; I do not know whether it will or not, but I hope it will"? Would foreign nations make such an agreement?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; I think they would.

Mr. CONNALLY. And then take the chance of the debate here, the logrolling, and so forth?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; I think they would; because in 150 years there are only a few outstanding examples of failure on the part of the American Congress to sustain their negotiators in respect to international agreements.

If the Senator will permit me to say so, I think there is a very general feeling, so general that it is quite dependable, that there ought to be an international rearrangement in respect to both gold and silver. It would not trouble me in the slightest to vote in favor of a revaluation of the gold dollar on the proper basis of a firm international contract. The thing that disturbs me is to put a blank check in anybody's hand. It is no reflection on the integrity or the judgment of the President; I would feel precisely the same way in respect to any President. I do not think the good Lord ever made one man wise enough to use that much power. Since there is such a general meeting of minds in respect to the need for the international stabilization, both of gold and of silver, I think the President goes into the negotiation under far different circumstances than President Wilson went to Versailles in respect to the League of Nations.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not care to discuss the League of Nations.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I only use that example, because the Senator from Oklahoma used it to illustrate the point the other way around.

Mr. CONNALLY. My objection to a discussion of the League of Nations is that I have found that whenever a Republican gets in the hole on any question, he tries to drag the League of Nations around the Senate Chamber a few times.

Mr. VANDENBERG. This is not merely a Republican Senator engaged in this debate at the moment, and he is in no hole——

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not charging the Senator with anything; I am stating what has been done here before, and I hope the Senator from Michigan will not follow that example.

Mr. VANDENBERG. This is a Senator of the United States endeavoring to determine what the truth of the situation is. If I could have an international contract laid down upon my desk that I could vote for definitely and specifically, I should have no horror about reducing the gold content of the dollar if our constitutional right to do so may be favorably resolved. The thing that is disturbing me is the grant of an unknown power to achieve an unknown objective. I do not think that is in keeping with the spirit of our democratic constitutional institutions.

Mr. WHEELER. The thing that bothers me is whether or not the Congress has a right to delegate its constitutional power in advance to ratify a treaty. In other words, every treaty has to be ratified by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is not a treaty.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course it is a treaty. It cannot be otherwise.

Mr. CONNALLY. The authority granted the President is not to make a treaty.

Mr. WHEELER. What else is it?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is that when he enters into this agreement he does something with relation to our own currency, independent of any agreement, so far as a binding treaty is concerned.

Mr. VANDENBERG. He has to have an international contract or the thing is of no dependability.

Mr. CONNALLY. Suppose Great Britain and France do the thing, it would not be necessary to bring back a treaty.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think though, in the very spirit of the Senator's own questions to me a little while ago, they would require us to sign on the dotted line before they believe us, precisely as we would require them to sign on the dotted line.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator said we should make an agreement to bring it back. What would happen with reference to international exchange in the meantime? Here we would be under an agreement to fix it at a certain ratio. We do not know whether that would be done or not until Congress approves or rejects it. In the meantime the fluctuation in our money and exchange would do the very thing that we are trying to avoid. It would destroy our foreign trade and throw the whole international picture into confusion and chaos.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That argument is a two-edged sword. I contend that when we create an unused Executive power of the extent here contemplated, which can be exercised at any time in any direction and in any way that the Chief Executive desires, we have thereby created the precise uncertainty to which the Senator from Texas adverts; and it is one more reason why I have a feeling that I prefer certainty to uncertainty in respect to the contract.

I will say to the Senator from Texas that if this unused but potential authority is to be left in suspense indefinitely in the hands of the President, to be used by him to move dollar values up or down when, as, and if he sees fit, I would ask for no better opportunity to get all the wealth that I could ever hope to spend than just one advance bit of information respecting his contemplated use of that power. I think it is an exceedingly dangerous thing for the most honest of men to be put in a position where even a remote leak respecting that information could lead to a scandal besides which Teapot Dome would be a tea party instead of teapot.

Does the Senator see the point to which I advert?

Mr. CONNALLY. I see the point, but I do not see that it relates to this matter any more than any other leak when the Executive or the Congress is about to take some fundamental action. Of course, leaks about what we are going to do here might occur. If anyone knew in advance about such action with respect to the stock market or anything else, that advance information could be turned to private advantage. That is inevitable. But if the procedure suggested by the Senator from Michigan were followed, we would not need this bill at all, because the President now has power under the Constitution to make treaties with foreign countries. If we are going to fall back on the treaty-making power, then there is no occasion for the legislation at all.

This is an extraordinary grant, but we are living in an extraordinary era. We are living under tremendous difficulties. This is a short cut, of course. We all know that. It never would be called for except for the exigencies of the existing situation. But how is the President going to deal effectively and aggressively and quickly with the foreign powers unless when he says, "We will reduce or raise the dollar", other governments dealing with him know that that will take place?

Under the European form of government and their parliamentary system, Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald and his government tomorrow can make an agreement of that kind and it is permanent. It does not have to be ratified by anybody, because they are the government.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am fully aware of that fact.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why should not we do the same thing?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Because we are not under the European system.

Mr. CONNALLY. We ought to be able to function in an emergency such as this just as the European system functions.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is an age-old argument. The European form of government and our form of government are different. I hesitate to depart from our form of government and paraphrase the European form. The Senator's question illuminates the fundamental difference in philosophy of approach to the question. He has put his finger on one of the things that disturbs me. I cannot conceive that we can paraphrase the British system and graft that paraphrase upon our system and have a constitutional democracy left. I agree with him that except as this optional power is granted to the President, there would be no need to include the gold section in the bill. In fact, that is the base of my original inquiry which precipitated this entire debate. My question has been whether there is substantial utility in the bill for the present if the gold section were eliminated pending the outcome of some international agreement. Under such circumstances, I could go along with this program.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I move to amend the pending amendment by striking out, on page 5, beginning in line 1, down to and including line 18.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to offer my amendment before that is done? I have an amendment affecting this section which has been printed and lying on the table several days.

Mr. REED. I am sure that what I am proposing will tend to perfect it. If the Senator prefers to have his amendment offered first, I have no objection.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that it does not make very much difference. The Senator is moving to strike out the so-called "gold clause"?

Mr. REED. That is true.

Mr. WHEELER. I am proposing to amend it. My amendment has been submitted to the administration, and my understanding is that the Executive is favorable to it. It gives him the power to remonetize silver at some fixed definite ratio in the event he may see fit to do so.

Mr. REED. Is the Senator proposing to amend that part which I am proposing to strike out?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; that very part.

Mr. REED. Then I think the Senator's amendment ought to come first.

Mr. WHEELER. That is the way I thought about it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Montana is offering an amendment to have it printed and lie on the table?

Mr. WHEELER. No; it has been printed and is on the table. I should like to have it adopted.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; it will lead to considerable debate.

Mr. WHEELER. Then I will offer the amendment and let it be pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Montana proposes to amend the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma, on page 5, by striking out the words beginning with "by proclamation" in line 1 down to and including the words "foreign currencies" in line 5, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

By proclamation to fix the weight of the gold dollar in grains nine tenths fine and also to fix the weight of the silver dollar in grains nine tenths fine at a definite fixed ratio in relation to the gold dollar at such amounts as he finds necessary from his investigation to stabilize domestic prices or to protect the foreign commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, and to provide for the unlimited coinage of such gold and silver at the ratio so fixed.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TYDINGS in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. Is the pending amendment the one offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] or the one offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The understanding of the Chair is that the Senator from Pennsylvania withholds his amendment until the amendment of the Senator from Montana shall have been acted upon.

Mr. REED. That is true, but I desire to be recognized to speak on the amendment of the Senator from Montana. I should like to be recognized for some remarks upon the amendment, but if I am recognized, I should be perfectly willing to let the remarks wait until tomorrow.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, as soon as the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] is recognized and makes his request I desire to move a recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if, when he proceeds in the morning, it will be to discuss the Wheeler amendment or the gold-content question?

Mr. REED. Partly the Wheeler amendment but chiefly the gold content.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Pennsylvania desires to be recognized for the purpose of speaking first in the morning?

Mr. REED. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has been recognized for that purpose.

Mr. REED. I yield now to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

CROP-PRODUCTION LOANS TO FARMERS

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (H.J.Res. 135) to amend section 2 of the act approved February 4, 1933, to provide for loans to farmers and for crop production and harvesting during the year 1933, and for other purposes. I have consulted about it with the minority leader, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. This is an amendment of the Crop Loan Production Act, which makes it possible to loan to wheat farmers who grow winter wheat. It must be acted on quickly, because the loaning period expires the 1st of May.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, as I recall the statement of the Senator from Texas to me, this is a House joint resolution which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and by that committee reported favorably and is now on the calendar.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 2 of the act of February 4, 1933 (Public, No. 327), be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end of the first sentence thereof the words "and in the case of summer-fallowing or winter wheat, a first lien, or an agreement to give a first lien on crops to be harvested in 1934, shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, be deemed sufficient security."

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H.R. 3835) to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power.

RECESS

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a number of Senators have expresed to me the hope that, in view of committee meetings and pressing office work, we shall not meet tomorrow until 12 o'clock. I hope the Senator will agree to that. If we do not conclude consideration of the amendment tomorrow, I shall be very happy to cooperate with the Senator to recess until 11 o'clock on Wednesday morning.

Mr. SMITH. I think that all Senators recognize that, if possible, we must get this legislation passed. I have refrained from asking for a night session. I hope that we may go along in the ordinary course and get through with the bill. I do not want anyone denied an opportunity to express himself, but we are about to make a freight train out of this measure. Attached to the engine are numerous box cars carrying every kind of provision, and it is getting to the point where I am afraid the engineer and conductor cannot keep it on the track.

Mr. McNARY. I share that feeling, but I feel certain that if we meet at 12 o'clock tomorrow we can dispose of the pending amendment. If we do not dispose of the bill tomorrow, then I shall be glad to cooperate with the Senator to recess until 11 o'clock on Wednesday morning.

Mr. SMITH. Will the Senator join with me in an endeavor to hold a night session tomorrow?

Mr. McNARY. Let us compromise by taking a recess until 11:30 tomorrow morning. That will give us more time.

Mr. SMITH. Then I will modify my motion, and move that the Senate recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 25, 1933, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 24 (legislative day of Apr. 17), 1933

AMBASSADORS EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARIES

Sumner Welles to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Cuba.

Breckinridge Long to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Italy.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 24, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

O give thanks unto the Lord; for He is good, and His mercy endureth forever. We praise Thee; we thank Thee for Thy unfailing care. By the vision, by the passion of our patriotism, by the fervor of our industry, by the stern ideals of duty, may we prove ourselves worthy of the public trust. In every way, O Lord, make us instant to expose wrong, quick to detect evil, and ready to denounce the unjust. Almighty God, as the Ambassadors of disturbed lands gather in state in yonder executive chamber, O fill the unseen chair at the council table. By the ministry of brotherhood may they enter into cooperation with Thee and hasten the golden age of the world. Grant that their deliberations may be as coals of fire upon all rivalries and animosities that pall mankind. May they redeem all lands from their desperate condition. O welcome the day when they shall give back the song of the angels—"Peace on earth, good will to men." And may they never again keep step to the grim music of the hymn of hate. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, April 22, 1933, was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a radio address delivered by Mr. Edward A. O'Neil, president of the Farm Bureau Federation, on April 21, 1933.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is this a Member of the House who delivered this address?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No. It is Edward A. O'Neil, president of the Farm Bureau Federation.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Oh, he is just one of these farm agitators. I object.

MUSCLE SHOALS

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to House Resolution 111 the next business in order will be the further consideration of House bill 5081, the Muscle Shoals bill. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] has 2 hours and 9 minutes left and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] has 2 hours and 2 minutes left.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE].

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in favor of this bill, believing that it is one of the best bills that this session of Congress has considered. The question of the operation of Muscle Shoals has been before Congress for the past number of years, but for some reason or other it has been always sidetracked, and we have never been able to enact satisfactory legislation covering the project. This bill from every standpoint should be promptly enacted into law, so that the Tennessee Valley and the farmers of the Nation may have the benefit of it.

FERTILIZER PRODUCTION

Not only will it reduce the price of fertilizer to the farmers but it will assist in the reduction of electric-power rates to all people in the area generally affected by this project. This measure gives wide authority either to operate the present plants or to lease them for production of nitrogen or for other fertilizer ingredients for agricultural purposes. Adequate safeguards are placed in the bill to protect the marketing of these products.

GENERAL PURPOSES OF BILL

It is well recognized that there are four distinct fields of usefulness in which a valuable service can be rendered by the Muscle Shoals project:

First. Nitrate manufacture for national defense.

Second. Fertilizer production.

Third. Power development.

Fourth. Navigation improvement.

All who favor this legislation hope and believe that each of these projects will be well developed and the work carried on under an administration friendly to the purposes for which the act is created.

I trust that the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle will join with us in the speedy enactment of the legislation.

MUNICIPALLY OWNED POWER PLANTS

I have in my district six municipally owned light plants that have made a wonderful record of progress in furnishing their customers power at cheap cost. These plants are located in the following cities: Denton, Sanger, Bowie, Burkburnett, Vernon, and Seymour. I hold in my hand a press copy of the record which the plant in Denton, Tex., made in the reduction of power rates. I ask unanimous consent to insert this brief statement in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is that newspaper publicity?

Mr. McFARLANE. It is not. It is just a statement by the mayor of Denton, Tex., showing the record made by the municipal light plant of that city. It is not lengthy.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I think our RECORD is now already overclogged and, so far as I am concerned, I shall register an objection to that.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman is taking my time. I expect to register an objection.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. The gentleman's time is just as valuable as mine. I object.

Mr. McFARLANE. Then I want to briefly refer to it and read it into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARKE of New York. His own remarks?

Mr. McFARLANE. My own remarks.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, the question of further development and appropriate use of the great hydroelectric plant at Muscle Shoals has recurred with unvarying regularity at every Congress since the ending of the World War. Those who would be most directly affected—those who would enjoy the largest measure of benefit from its use—would be the people of Tennessee and Alabama. Three counties in my district border on the Alabama line, and it is less than 60 miles from the geographical center of this district to the Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals.

Our people, during all the years that have intervened since the utilization of Muscle Shoals Dam was first proposed in Congress, after the ending of the World War, have alternated between feelings of high hope and deep disappointment. They have not been able to understand why the declared purpose of the Government in building the great plant there for manufacturing nitrates to meet the exigencies and demands of the World War and for the further purpose of manufacturing fertilizers for peace-time use should not have been carried out.

The failure to use this great power development, in which the Government has invested the peoples' money, of approximately $147,000,000, can only be explained and accounted for by the well-known organized opposition of the great power and fertilizer companies.

The methods of propaganda used by power companies, of political manipulation, of the uncontrolled and corrupt use of millions of dollars, have been disclosed by an investigation of the Federal Trade Commission in which it was shown that these great interests bought newspapers, controlled others without owning them, subsidized college professors and teachers, and controlled political conventions and legislatures. These great interests fear that the people of the entire United States will have a great scale illustration of the cheapness of the cost of production and distribution of power and fertilizer, so they have not and do not spare effort or expense to kill every attempt to develop it.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Tennessee, of Alabama, of the South, and of the whole country—those who believed in the use of this great power development for furnishing cheap electricity and cheap fertilizers—were deeply discouraged until President Roosevelt became the candidate of the Democratic Party for President. All that was known of his trend of thought, of his policies and beliefs, and his courage for action with reference to power development and control while he was Governor of New York, gave assurance that if elected he would see that proper use of this great project would be made.

Mr. Speaker, after he was elected he gave to representatives of the public press, down at his Warm Springs home in Georgia, an outline of a great experimental demonstration which he would make—of what might be accomplished for the direct benefit not only of the Tennessee Valley but the surrounding States, and for its educational value to the people of the United States. In the great area comprising the watershed of the Tennessee River and its tributaries—40,600 square miles in extent—a great laboratory test would be made, an experiment of vast proportions, of far-reaching benefits—an experiment which might profoundly and helpfully affect the people of the whole United States.

This development scheme would begin with the great Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals as the nucleus of operations and extend up the valley and to the far-away mountains of Virginia.

The bill which we have under consideration sets forth the powers and duties to be exercised by the officials of the "Tennessee Valley authority", a corporate body to be set up, whose directors and officers are appointed by the President, and sets forth in detail the ends and objectives of the measure and the manner in which they shall be achieved.

In this great laboratory test there will be carefully planned use of many different resources, together with the development of various activities. The great dam at Muscle Shoals, which is the major factor in the combination, would be further developed and more fully equipped by the addition of other power units for generating electricity as needed to attain maximum capacity. The power developed will be used for manufacturing fertilizer—nitrates—fertilizers in concentrated form and of high availability as plant foods. The best fertilizers that chemists and scientists can evolve will, no doubt, be made here and made available under the terms of the bill for demonstrations and tests at all the demonstration farms, the agricultural-college farms, and on those belonging to farmers throughout the United States who will use them under such conditions as will permit an estimate of their practical value. It is further provided that fertilizers shall be sold, giving preference to farmers, at cost, plus 4 percent. In this way—through such experiments and use—the farmers everywhere will be able to realize in a practical manner the maximum of benefits to be derived from their lands and their labor.

The surplus of electric power under the terms of this bill will be disposed of at wholesale prices to cities, towns, States, corporations, partnerships, and individuals and cooperative organizations of farmers and citizens—preference always to be given to those who are not procuring it for the purpose of selling for a profit. Should it become necessary to assure low rates for the people, the corporation controlling the Muscle Shoals property is authorized to lease or build transmission lines to carry electric current to towns, communities, or cities. The building of transmission lines by the authority at Muscle Shoals will depend on the success of efforts first to be made to have it transmitted by firms or companies engaged in the distribution and sale of electricity at fair and reasonable rates.

The surplus power is primarily for the benefit of the people as a whole, particularly domestic and rural consumers who are given preference over industrial users. By making maximum developments on the Tennessee and its tributaries, industries, no doubt, will be able to procure power for their use, and the cost of developing on a large scale will make the price to the domestic user very much less by reason of this large load factor.

Another great objective of the bill is the creation of storage basins or reservoirs in the upper valley—the first to be made at Cove Creek, where a great dam will be built. This great storage of water may be released in seasons of low water, generating electricity at the dam. The released water will help to equalize the flow over the dam at Muscle Shoals and will add to its power as it will to any other intervening dams. The benefits of these great storage basins will inure to the benefit not only of the towns, cities, and people on the Tennessee River but will favorably affect the people living on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers who suffer periodically great flood damage.

The measure provides for improving navigation on the Tennessee which eventually may be of tremendous importance to the people along the Tennessee River from Knoxville to the Ohio River and to commerce generally.

Mr. Speaker, among the new factors entering into this great carefully planned program, and not of least importance, is that of reforestation of the highlands. The immediate benefits to be derived from this part of the general plan will come from the employment of thousands of idle men and in preventing destruction and timber loss and damage by forest fires. Reforestation of cut-over lands, of marginal lands, is a foresighted provision for growing timber for the use of future generations and for conserving the rainfall by forest growth. This will not only be of great value in providing future stores of timber but will prove a valuable aid in flood control.

This part of the program is peculiarly that of the President, who profoundly believes the Government should be mindful of the future as well as of the present. It is also a part of his great demonstration plans to withdraw nonproductive marginal lands from cultivation and make use of them by planting in trees and by other appropriate uses. The reclamation of the rich swamps and overflow lands, by drainage and other means, will compensate for the withdrawal from cultivation of marginal lands and of great benefit to the adjacent territory in that it will help to rid such sections of mosquitoes and the miasma of the swamps, which endanger the health of the surrounding communities.

In this great experimental laboratory is to be tested and proven the benefits to be had from the combination of cheap power for public and private use, of the manufacture of nitrates and fertilizers, of reforestation, the withdrawal from cultivation of marginal lands, the reclamation of swamps, of building great dams at Cove Creek and other points for aid in flood control and for the development of electric power, for planned provision for making farm life in this great valley inviting, thereby drawing thousands of people from centers of population to make a living on the cheap lands not only in the valley but in all the nearby adjacent country.

Out of this great laboratory test which combines all these factors and elements, what will be the result?

Perhaps the greatest value of this stupendous undertaking will be found in the demonstration of the value of well thought out plans for combining in one general scheme the many important undertakings authorized by this measure, which, if successful, and it will be, widespread public attention will be drawn to it. It will be visited and studied by millions of people. It will be followed by other great combined enterprises of like purpose in other sections of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, four of the counties in my district have their western boundaries on the Tennessee River quite a distance below Muscle Shoals. This great river enters Tennessee again not many miles below the Shoals. In the lower river it has great power possibilities as have the many streams running through the counties of my district and emptying into the great river. We have the hope that the time will come when the lower river, with its rich land and many power resources, will be developed, the power to be used not only for local benefit but to supply the people of Kentucky, Missouri, and Illinois. To make this project what it really should be, a dam should be constructed at Aurora, Ky., and at other points between Aurora and the Wilson Dam.

A greatly discouraged people in the South, as they come to better understanding of this great vision of a great leader, will take heart again; will see opportunities for work and employment for many, for the sale at better prices of their products, for cheaper electricity for their various uses, for cheaper fertilizer, for home life made easier and more comfortable by placing within their reach aids to better production from their lands and conveniences in their homes and on their farms they have been unable to enjoy.

For my part, I can foresee great industrial enterprises springing up at Muscle Shoals employing thousands of people. Many will be able to drive over the line daily from Tennessee to work and return home at night. The blessing of cheap electricity will be carried to untold thousands, who are now paying exorbitant lighting and power rates. The average throughout the towns in my district for home use is now about 10 cents per kilowatt. I see better local markets made possible by this development for much of what the farmers produce, not only at Muscle Shoals, but because of other industrial enterprises which will come to all of our towns and cities where cheap power will be made available. I can see many of the unemployed of my section working in reforestation, in the reclamation of swamp lands, in building dams, and other activities directly pertaining to this great scheme of development. I can see farmers producing cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, and all the farm and vegetable crops at less cost and on smaller acreage. I can see a great demand for the splendid deposits of phosphate rock which abound in six counties of my district and in other middle Tennessee counties.

Out of the tests in the chemical and scientific laboratories at Muscle Shoals, there will be methods evolved for extracting the fertilizing elements contained in phosphate rock which are now unknown. This necessary element for almost every fertilizer will be sent to farmers everywhere at low cost for transportation, cheap in price, in highly available form for plant growth, and suitable for home mixture. The use of phosphate will develop great mining propositions, giving employment to thousands in our great basin of Tennessee so rich in this great resource.

Mr. Speaker, I can see plantations divided into smaller farms to supply those who will come to our section, which has been favored by nature with a splendid climate, abundant water, and productive lands. I foresee as a result of this great demonstration to be made in the public welfare and for the general good a strong movement of people from centers of population which will aid in balancing the distribution of population.

Mr. Speaker, I have already stated that the average rate for electricity to home users in my district is about 10 cents per kilowatt-hour. It was shown by uncontroverted proof before the Military Affairs Committee, of which I am a member, that in the city of Windsor, Canada, just across the river from Detroit and 240 miles from the plant at Niagara, they are selling their power to users for 1¼ cents per kilowatt-hour and making a profit, which they returned at the end of the year, paying back 10 percent of consumers' bills for the year. In the city of London, Ontario, the city buys its power from this great Government-owned Niagara Falls plant, and sells to its consumers at 1½ cents per kilowatt-hour. This city, after paying for its power, paying interest, insurance, depreciation, and all other expenses, showed a profit of $80,000 per year.

Mr. Speaker, with all the power possibilities of this great plant so near to hundreds of thousands of people, why should they be burdened with exhorbitant rates? Why should they grope longer in the dark? Why not give them light and power for their use, enjoyment, and pleasure? Why not permit them some of the profits of the new deal? Why should power companies be permitted to collect exhorbitant rates from the people to be used in paying profits to over-capitalized companies and to the many holding companies who skim the cream off of the operating companies' earnings and who have put wind and water into the companies' bonds and stocks and claim the right to returns on all their grossly inflated capital structure?

Mr. Speaker, let us now insist that our people have a right to as low rates as those people of Canada. Let us pass this bill and assure ourselves the benefit of all its advantages and blessings.

We of the South have good reason to be hopeful and confident. We are thankful we have a President who has visions of putting into effect and carrying to success great enterprises for the public welfare—enterprises too costly for private undertaking, too great for States to carry out.

We believe the people of our section of the South stand on the threshold of a happier and better era and that the entire Nation will benefit by this great laboratory experiment. [Applause.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, the reason that H.R. 5081, the so-called "Muscle Shoals bill" introduced by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL], is before the Committee on Military Affairs, is because of section 124 of the National Defense Act, which requires the President to investigate the question of nitrates in time of war, and of fertilizers in time of peace.

This bill, as reported from the committee, goes far beyond the scope as planned in section 124 of the National Defense Act, especially through sections 27 and 28 of the bill, which I will touch upon later. The bill proposes to put the Government into a field of commercial enterprise heretofore exclusively operated by private industry.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] said he was not going to touch upon the question of power and he did not touch very extensively on the question of fertilizer, so I should like to direct my remarks for a few moments to those two subjects.

This great Government project was started during the war in order to supply power that would let us manufacture nitrate, so necessary in the production of explosives for munitions. The Government spent $150,000,000. About $47,000,000 of that money was spent in the development of the Wilson Dam, a hydro-power dam, costing $47,000,000, and the testimony shows there are only 45,000 to 50,000 kilowatts of primary power at Wilson Dam No. 2, 10 percent of the time. During the other 90 percent of the time it may develop upward of 75,000 kilowatts. It is necessary, in order to get more hydro power at Dam No. 2, the so-called "Wilson Dam", to build the proposed Cove Creek Dam. It was estimated that that dam would cost $34,000,000 some years ago, but I think it might be fair to say it might be reduced by perhaps 30 percent of the original estimate today, so that it would take somewhere between twenty and twenty-five million dollars more for the Cove Creek Dam.

It is proposed, when that dam is built, to generate through hydro power, some energy. The testimony reveals about 10,000 horsepower, if my memory serves me correctly. The main purpose of this second dam is to impound water so that more water will be in a uniform flow, coming down to the Wilson Dam No. 2, to give more electrical energy there.

It is proposed by this bill to later construct what is referred to as Dam No. 3, and many other dams for so-called navigation and flood-control purposes. To my mind, those other dams are more or less veiled around this whole power question, not so much perhaps for navigation purposes and flood control as the real purpose behind this bill, which is to build up the maximum amount of electrical energy by hydro power at Muscle Shoals.

On Saturday the gentleman from Tennessee stated that in his opinion we could generate around 2,900,000 horsepower after this whole development had taken place. There is other testimony which shows that we could generate 5,000,000 horsepower. The testimony before our committee, covering a period of years, indicates that the cost of building those hydro-power plants, as a minimum fair figure, would be $125 per kilowatt. If that project were carried out, to give the fullest amount of electric energy by hydro power, that alone would cost the Government somewhere in the neighborhood of $700,000,000. I think that is a fair statement, based on the testimony given to our committee. However, this bill makes authorization for an appropriation of $50,000,000 and not the entire $700,000,000, but that is contemplated as just a small part of this project that the committee had in mind in reporting out this bill.

Now, I want to call attention to the fertilizer situation. As this bill was originally introduced it did not require the manufacture, either by the Government or by private operators, of any definite amount of fertilizer. In connection with this entire Muscle Shoals question that has been one of the foremost arguments in connection with the development of the project, cheaper fertilizer for the farmers, with two different schools of thought, one, that the Government engage in this business for the production of cheaper fertilizer, and the other that private capital go in for the production of cheaper fertilizer.

Nitrate plant no. 1, about which we have heard so much talk, is practically out of the question, as it is obsolete. I think it is fair to say that that plant is obsolete, whereas plant no. 2, which is the large plant, can be used for the production of fertilizer, either in the fixation of nitrogen or by the electric-furnace process of making phosphoric acid, and possibly other ingredients. The prices of nitrogen in the world, not only in the United States, have gone to very, very low figures. In fact, it has been stated that the prices are so low that the people making nitrogen cannot even get a fair return on their invested capital. At any rate, we know that nitrogen is overproduced today in the world and that the United States has a very large supply; but to insure for the future for national defense, and that is the only national defense that I see in the bill, we require this authority to maintain nitrate plant no. 2 in stand-by condition so that it could be used in time of war if it were found economical and wise to use it. In my judgment, that is all the national defense there is in the bill for war times. I admit there are possibilities down there at Muscle Shoals to make very large quantities of fertilizer, which the committee had in mind when it wrote section 124 of the National Defense Act. We require in this bill a minimum production during the first 2 years of 10,000 tons of fertilizer or fertilizer ingredients. If it is found uneconomical to make nitrogenous plant food, we can then turn to making phosphoric acid. After that first 2-year period it is the purpose under the bill to build that capacity up to its maximum capacity, but I call the attention of the House to some of the diverting factors which, in my judgment, will prevent us getting these large amounts of fertilizer either by Government or by private operation. For instance, in one section of the bill the President is authorized to exchange electric energy for land, to be used for manufacturing purposes for other industries, the electrochemical industry, and so forth; and there is a sort of veiled idea in this bill of trying to bring in these other industries under sections 27 and 28 for the social and physical well-being of the people of this district—the purpose is to bring large industries down into the Tennessee Valley.

Let me submit to the House that if these large plants are brought down there for the manufacture of commodities other than fertilizer or nitrogen, just that much more power will be taken away from the manufacture of fertilizer. Yet there is a provision in the bill whereby fertilizer manufacture may have a certain amount of this power.

These are some of the things the proponents of the bill wish to see accomplished, but I doubt very much if they will because of some of the other factors I have mentioned.

There is a provision in the bill that the Tennessee Valley Authority shall construct a transmission line to transmit power from the Cove Creek Dam and the Wilson Dam. This is mandatory on the authority under the terms of this bill. Therefore you can see they will try to develop this property for manufacturing purposes other than fertilizer. In addition to making it mandatory upon the authority to build this transmission line, the authority is authorized to construct transmission lines in any direction from the generating plants to an extent of 400 miles. They may duplicate, they may parallel, the existng lines of private companies serving this district; and may I point out to the House at this time that the testimony before our committee indicated that only two thirds of the generating capacity of private plants now in existence in these six Southern States is being marketed. In other words, right now the private companies in these six States have 1,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electrical energy that is unsold, according to the testimony of the officials of the power companies before our committee. The development of Cove Creek Dam and the output from Wilson Dam, without the construction of any of these other intermediary dams about which I have just spoken, would give us just as much more energy as the unsold output of existing facilities.

The minority views in the report accompanying the majority report indicates that there is now invested by private companies in these six Southern States, $600,000,000, some, if not all, of which may be destroyed. The stocks and bonds of these private companies are held by the customers of these companies to the extent of some $60,000,000.

In the construction of future dams other than Dam No. 2, under the provisions of this bill, it is required that the Authority show there is a reasonable market demand for the additional power before the dams may be constructed.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Connecticut 10 additional minutes.

Mr. GOSS. This Government may spend $700,000,000 on this project.

I wish now for a minute to comment on section 27, which provides among other things, reading from page 17 of the report:

> To aid and further proper use, conservation, and development of the natural resources of the Tennessee Drainage Basin and such adjoining territory as may be related to or materially affected by the developments consequent to this act.

What does this mean? The members of the committee do not know, as indicated here on pages 17 and 18 of the report in connection with sections 27 and 28. We took no testimony. No testimony was offered as to what the staggering, gigantic propositions may mean in dollars and cents to the American people. It provides for the general welfare of the citizens of said area. I ask the Membership of the House what the general welfare of the citizens of this whole territory means.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have been trying to determine the effect of this power development upon other industrial sections of the country. The gentleman is familiar with my district in Wisconsin. Does the gentleman care to state what, in his opinion, will be the effect of this development upon other industrial sections?

Mr. GOSS. Nobody can tell, because there is nothing in this act that requires the Government in operating these power plants or selling the electricity, either wholesale or retail, to do so at a profit. The Government may sell it at a loss or it may charge higher prices. This is left entirely to the authority. Thus nobody can foresee what the cost will be. I may say that many people hope power costs will be cut in two, but there is no section in this bill which requires the power or fertilizer operations to even earn interest on the money expended.

You will find the old familiar Ford plan, where they made a capital charge on the hydro plant of $30,000,000 and on the fertilizer plants of $6,000,000; that where they were very careful in these two instances to require them to get interest out of the investment. No such provisions prevail in reference to power or fertilizer.

The bill goes on to say: For the general purpose of fostering an orderly and proper physical, economic, and social development of said areas. Again I submit that neither the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, nor any Cabinet officer who might be called upon to act under the terms of this bill came before our committee to give us any information as to what this might mean.

The bill gives to the President the authority to make all such surveys and plans and to cooperate with the States. We do not know what kind of cooperation this means. In section 28, after giving authority on flood control and navigation to the maximum extent, the maximum flood control, the the maximum navigation facilities, it says:

> To provide for the proper method of reforestation of all lands in said drainage district suitable for reforestation.

Here again, I submit, we do not know how much money will be spent. We do not know what plans the administration has in mind, because no testimony in this regard was given to the committee; and the same is true with reference to the economic and social well-being of the people living in said river basin and all adjacent territory.

A careful reading of sections 27 and 28, showing the very broad scope of the bill, discloses that it is nothing more than a state of socialism. No one can estimate what the demands for money will be to carry out the provisions of these two sections. I have already stated to the House that from testimony adduced before our committee and from the speeches of the proponents of this bill the Government may be obligated for some $700,000,000 and upward.

Here is what the minority had to say:

> In the opinion of the minority, any additional appropriations needed will be obtained through the issuance of bonds rather than coming back to Congress for such additional appropriations.

Here is the language I wish particularly to call to your attention:

> Thus, while sacrifices are being made to balance the Budget, the public debt may be increased to an unlimited and potentially dangerous extent.

I have only tried in the short time I have had here to explain the vast sums of money that may be expended in the development of more power and in the production of some fertilizer and the carrying out of all these social-welfare activities with respect to the citizens residing in this entire area.

O Mr. Speaker, this bill is veiled under the purposes of national defense, flood control, and improvement of navigation, but when this bill comes back to us, as I expect it will, if we have before us from the conference committee the so-called "Norris bill," as a member of this committee studying the subject for several years, I do not really know what will be involved. I hope before the day is over some Member of the majority will come down here on the floor and try to explain to us some of the vague hidden powers contained in the bill under the guise of flood control and improvement of navigation. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the bill reported proposes to put the Government into fields of commercial enterprise heretofore exclusively occupied by private industry—fields of activity never suggested by anyone who believes the functions of the National Government should be confined within constitutional limits.

If put into effect, the Government will be in business for the sake of business itself. While it declares that promotion of navigation, national defense, and flood control are primary purposes, it is obvious that enumeration of such purposes is only a smoke screen behind which the Government will engage in commercial business. Those who support the legislation would not do so if divorced from alleged constitutional powers. They make no other pretense. Only a flexible mind can conceive a relationship between the manufacture and sale of chemical products for fertilizer, the manufacture, transmission, and sale of electricity, and any constitutional function of the National Government. While the act does lip service to the power to regulate interstate commerce, to control flood waters, and provide for national defense, the real purpose to engage in commercial business is so manifest it is doubtful that any court could be deceived by the hollow claim that the purpose is navigation improvement, control of destructive floods, and preservation of national defense.

The control of the National Government over navigable waters of the several States is not a proprietary one but purely a delegated sovereign right to regulate, control, and improve the navigation thereon—Port of Seattle v. Oregon & Washington Railroad Co. (255 U.S. 56). The United States Supreme Court has held that no constitutional power resides in the Government to engage in business and that while the commerce clause permits the National Government to regulate commerce, it does not grant the right to engage in commerce—License Tax Cases (5 Wall. 462).

POLICIES DECLARED

By expressed provision (secs. 5 and 12) it is declared that the policy of the legislation is to improve, cheapen, and increase the production of fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients by carrying out the provisions of the act, and, so far as practical, to transmit or sell power equitably among States, counties, and municipalities within transmission distance.

There is a declaration of policy to construct joint power and navigation dams, to conserve and make available the power to provide cheaper navigation, and to create sinking funds to retire the cost of such dams, the power houses, and locks, but for some reason the Cove Creek project, estimated to cost $34,000,000, and the Dam No. 3 project, estimated to cost $20,000,000, are excepted. However, any future dam may be constructed on self-liquidating terms approved by the President, sufficient to return bond interest on investments chargeable to power and sufficient to amortize the capital cost. No provision, however, is included for self-liquidating operations in the fertilizer business or in the generation, transmission, and sale of power to the public, or for investments to be made to increase the generating capacity at the Muscle Shoals plant and the construction of the storage and power dam at Cove Creek and a power project at site no. 3, immediately above Muscle Shoals, or return to the Treasury of $10,000,000 authorized for immediate activities, involving additional expenditures of some $65,000,000 to $70,000,000.

PROPOSED COMMERCIAL OPERATIONS

A recital of the activities in trade and commerce in which the corporation would participate shows that business enterprise is the objective. The charter powers of a private organization would not provide a wider scope for its activities. The bill creates a corporation labeled "Tennessee Valley Authority of the United States." It is permitted to have succession in its own name; to sue and be sued as would any private corporation; to use a corporate seal which must be judicially recognized; to make contracts; to adopt bylaws; to purchase, lease, and sell personal property; to acquire by lease, purchase, or condemnation real estate; to appoint and discharge at will officers, attorneys, agents, and others independent of Civil Service provisions, including general managers, assistant general managers, secretaries, treasurers, bookkeepers, administrative and executive officers, and fix their compensation.

Detailed directions in the fertilizer operations of the corporation are to purchase fertilizer and fertilizer material needed in its fertilizer program; to encourage practical use of fertilizer produced and purchased through cooperation with national, State, district, and county experimental stations and demonstration farms; to manufacture fixed nitrogen and other fertilizer ingredients to the extent deemed wise and profitable; to alter, modify, or improve existing chemical plants; to build new chemical plants; and to sell for profit fertilizer products produced in a manner to insure wide distribution to farmers.

It is made the duty of the corporation to produce nitrogenous plant food in form for direct application to the soil containing not less than 10,000 tons of nitrogen, to be increased in response to market demand to the maximum capacity of the plants, and to continue such production if absorbed by the market. In event the production of nitrogenous plant food proves to be uneconomical, it is made the duty of the corporation to produce phosphoric acid, fertilizer, or fertilizer ingredients in form for application to the soil in quantities equal to the required production of nitrogenous plant food, with no provision to discontinue such production if unprofitable. Lease contracts are authorized under conditions to safeguard the interest of the United States for mass production of fertilizer or fertilizer ingredients and, with the approval of the President, for other manufacturing purposes. It is also the duty of the corporation to alter, modify, or improve the existing chemical plants and to construct new plants for fertilizer production. The sales price shall include cost of production plus 4 percent. Fertilizer shall be sold with preference to farmers and in a manner to insure the widest practical distribution. For purposes of fertilizer production, it is declared that the value of nitrate plant no. 2 shall not exceed $6,000,000, and that such plant shall be maintained in stand-by condition or the equivalent for production of nitrogen for war purposes until Congress shall otherwise provide.

Furthermore, the corporation is directed to maintain and operate experimental laboratories and plants and to undertake large-scale experiments to enable it to furnish nitrogen fertilizer and other products needed for military and agricultural purposes in the most economical manner and at the highest standard of efficiency; to request the advice and assistance of any officer, agent, or employee of any department of the United States; to manufacture and sell to the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy at cost explosives or the nitrogenous content of explosives; to deliver power without charge for operation of locks, lifts, and other facilities of navigation; to produce, transmit, and sell electric power, but no products shall be sold outside the United States or its territorial possessions except for use by the Army or the Navy or allies of the United States Government in case of war.

Members of the board and its appointees or agents shall be subject to dismissal in event any political test or political qualification shall be permitted or given consideration in the selection of employees or in their promotion.

In order to effectuate the purpose to distribute power equitably within 400 miles from the point where generated, the corporation is directed to sell power not only to States and political subdivisions within that area, but to corporations, partnerships, and individuals. In furtherance of the program to transmit and sell power, it is authorized to build transmission lines to any point at any time using funds provided either by Congress or from power sales or from proceeds of its own bond issues.

Enumerated preferences are given to States, counties, municipalities, and mutual nonprofit organizations of farmers who build their own transmission lines. Contracts for sale to private distributors would be subject to cancellation on 5 years' notice in order to supply States, counties, and municipalities, and subject to cancellation in event the resale price to consumers exceeds a price determined by the Federal Power Commission.

Additional public funds are authorized to be spent for increasing the power capacity at Muscle Shoals and to build a storage, flood-control, and power dam 300 miles upstream for the alleged purpose of equalizing the 600 miles of river flow as an aid to navigation, the control of flood water, and maximum development of power. The corporation is directed to build a transmission line, in event it is unable to conclude arrangements with private distributors, for transfer of power between its own power plants extending a distance of 300 miles in the Tennessee River Basin and to build other transmission and distribution lines to power markets anywhere within a radius of 400 miles contingent upon failure to contract for transmission, distribution, and delivery of power by persons, firms, or corporations engaged in resale of electricity or for the use or purchase of privately owned lines.

GRANTS OF AUTHORITY AND FUNDS REQUIRED

To the end that the corporation may better operate with the utmost freedom, it would assume exclusive use, possession, and control of the Muscle Shoals nitrate and power plants including all auxiliary property. With approval of the President, it would take over other property, real and personal, belonging to the United States deemed necessary for its purposes.

In order that the corporation may avail itself of patent rights, methods, formulas, and all scientific information obtainable in the Patent Office for production of chemical fertilizer and production of power, it would be permitted to appropriate such patent rights and formulas or other scientific information. Compensation for the taking of such property rights would be determined exclusively by Federal district courts without authority to make compensation by mutual agreement.

In order that the corporation may not be delayed in promptly going forward with its commercial operations, $10,000,000 is authorized to be appropriated, of which $4,000,000 shall become immediately available to begin construction of the Cove Creek storage dam and power plant and to begin the production of fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients. Should the $10,000,000 prove insufficient, additional appropriations are authorized necessary for carrying out the purposes of the act; and if there should be difficulty in securing such appropriations, the corporation may resort to the sale of its own 60-year bonds to the extent of $50,000,000, for which it may pledge "all net income from property of the United States hereby entrusted or hereafter to be entrusted to the possession and control" of the corporation as well as the credit of the United States. Such bonds would enjoy the special privileges accorded in Panama Canal bonds. Interest would be paid in gold coin, and the bonds would be free of every form of national, State, county, and municipal taxation.

EXPENDITURES AUTHORIZED

Expenditures authorized for launching this wide-spread commercial activity are as follows:

Operating capital (includes $4,000,000 for Cove Creek)	$10,000,000
Installation additional generating capacity at Wilson Dam (estimated)	6,000,000
Installation additional generating capacity at Nitrate Plant No. 2 steam plant (estimated)	2,000,000
Transmission line from Muscle Shoals to Cove Creek (estimated)	6,000,000
Construction of Cove Creek Reservoir and power plant ($34,000,000 less $4,000,000 included in operating capital)	30,000,000
Total new funds	54,000,000

Indefinite amounts for other developments are authorized. This would increase the total public investment in physical properties on the Tennessee River to more than $175,000,000.

PRODUCTION AND SALE OF POWER

While the corporation is directed to sell fertilizer at 4-percent profit, it may sell power, wholesale or retail, to any character of purchaser without regard to cost. Armed with the right of eminent domain, it may build power houses, substations, and transmission lines in competition with private power operators using for the purpose public funds secured from appropriations by Congress, from the sale of power or from the proceeds from the sale of bonds. It may duplicate power plants and transmission lines where adequate plants, transmission lines, and distribution systems already exist, serving the entire area, and in this manner greatly impair if not destroy millions of dollars of investments in plants, lines, and distribution systems privately owned. Charged with the duty of disposing of large quantities of power, it would be free to engage in cutthroat competition, to invade the market of private companies, and sell power at any price that will command a purchaser.

In disregard of local State authority to regulate the rates of public-utility companies, a private distributor buying power for resale is required to agree that the maximum price to the consumer shall be fixed by the Federal Government—the Federal Power Commission—which would provoke legal conflict with State regulatory agencies. It would be free to engage in discriminatory practices in fields of commercial enterprise where similar conduct by the citizen is prohibited by the antitrust laws, the antimonopoly laws, and by public-utility regulation. In the sale and distribution of power the corporation is not required to observe the first principles of private business, to earn the cost of invested capital, or to pay its own way. The most it is required to do is to pay cost of operation, maintenance, depreciation, amortization, and amounts deemed necessary by the board to withhold as operating capital or to be used for new construction before paying the remainder into the Treasury of the United States.

The extent of such unregulated and unrestricted competition with private industry can better be appreciated when it is remembered that private companies engaged in generation and distribution of electricity in public service are required to secure, first, the consent of the State in which they do business, to submit to public regulation and control, to secure local franchise permits in towns and cities, to conform to rate schedules fixed by public authority, and to consent to the supervision of the amount and character of securities issued. Generating plants and other major facilities or equipment cannot be constructed except upon the certificate of public authority that a public necessity exists and that public service will be promoted. Furthermore, the amount of return permitted to be earned is subject to State determination.

Evidence before the committee discloses that the power market within the States surrounding Muscle Shoals is adequately supplied with extensive interconnected transmission lines and distribution systems extending into practically every town and village and, in a large measure, into the rural sections; that the existing capacity is more than 33 percent in excess of the market demand; and that rates are efficiently supervised and controlled and below the national average, both for domestic and industrial use. It is obvious that any effort to market 1,000,000,000 additional kilowatt-hours of energy from the Muscle Shoals plants at this time would necessarily invade the market of private companies, and that it could not be sold except at substantial reductions in rates with consequent disastrous effect upon the gross and net income of private companies.

PRIVATE INVESTORS AND PRIVATE INVESTMENTS

Evidence before the committee disclosed that within the States of Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, and Mississippi privately owned power companies have investments in excess of $600,000,000 in water power and steam plants, distribution systems, and lines interconnected with each other and with the Muscle Shoals plants. Six companies in one interconnected group within the 400-mile radius of the proposed power system proposed to be set up by the act serve 1,678 towns, covering a territory of 196,000 square miles, with 430,000 customers. They have 36,000 miles of transmission and distribution lines, 20,000 miles of which are high-tension lines, and 17,000 are distribution lines.

Residing in the territory of these companies are 37,000 preferred stockholders who own 623,797 shares of preferred stock, in which they have invested more than $60,000,000. They have outstanding bonds amounting to $288,000,000, of which about $75,000,000 are held by some 38 insurance companies. Many of the stocks and bonds are held by universities, savings banks, and individuals. The outstanding preferred-stock issues are $110,000,000. Taxes paid in 1932 were $6,000,000. The entire property, plant, and equipment account of these companies is $616,000,000. The average number of employees in 1932 was 9,339 and the pay roll was $13,470,000.

Evidence was submitted that contrary to a gradual increase in the power market in the territory adjacent to Muscle Shoals of about 5 percent annually in former years, there has been considerable decrease since 1930 and that the market value of the securities issued by these companies has decreased several points in the case of the bonds within the last 4 or 5 months and about 50 percent in the case of the preferred stocks. It was stated that the decreased value of these securities is largely attributed to apprehension in the minds of investors concerning the stability and future worth of their investments because of the threat of Government competition. Witnesses for these companies stated that within recent weeks thousands of individuals and corporate investors had inquired of the companies for information concerning the effect of the proposed program of putting the Government into the power business in the territory served by these various companies.

LACK OF EVIDENCE OF ECONOMIC VALUE OF PROPOSED POWER-PLANT INVESTMENTS

It is fair to say that the committee nor the Congress has any definite data or information respecting the economic value of proposed power plants and power-plant operations contemplated by the act. Scant attention has been given to a survey by an engineer officer of the Army in 1931 of the existing power service and power rates in the territory surrounding Muscle Shoals and of an economic study of proposed power and navigation dams such as is contemplated by the legislation. The report submitted to the Chief of Engineers not only discusses the value of the Muscle Shoals power plants in public service and in chemical industry but the economic value of proposed power plants at other points on the Tennessee River, including the Cove Creek project. This report shows that combination of navigation and power dams near the market for power on the Tennessee River is economically justified only between Knoxville and Chattanooga after proper credit is given for necessary investments for navigation and flood control, that these projects would afford greater flood protection at Chattanooga, where flood damage is greatest, than would the proposed Cove Creek project; that construction of the Cove Creek project in advance of construction of sufficient power dams below to justify contribution for increased power production from Cove Creek could not be justified from an economic standpoint, and that the cost of additional installation of generating equipment at Muscle Shoals is unnecessary.

In a separate report of an investigation of a proposed system for transmitting and selling Muscle Shoals power through a publicly owned system to available municipal and industrial markets at 20 percent less than existing rates, the same engineer estimated that within 15 years the project will result in a deficit of $40,000,000. The conclusions in that respect are summarized as follows:

1. The Government's power plants at Muscle Shoals and the proposed Cove Creek development are not suitably located to serve as the main generating stations of an extensive independent power system.
2. The construction of an independent system would involve large expenditures of public funds.
3. The cost of transmitting power in such a system would be high, and the reliability of service at long distances from the generating center would be poor.
4. The construction of such an independent system would be an economic waste, in that it would duplicate transmission facilities now ample to serve the region.
5. It may be expected that the deficit from the construction and operation of such a system, which will have to be met by the Federal Treasury and by the general taxpayers, will largely exceed any savings from lower rates which may accrue to the limited local public served.

From a purely business standpoint, the United States would save tremendous waste of public funds if the Muscle Shoals power and nitrate plants were sold to private industry on the best terms available. In the absence of such method of disposition, they should be leased on the best terms obtainable. If, however, it is determined that the United States shall retain ownership of the project and operate the power plants, the power should be offered first for local industrial development in the production of electrochemical and electrometallurgical products for which the facilities and equipment are adaptable.

Industries of this character require large amounts of power and raw products, such as phosphate rock, coke, coal, limestone, silica, and magnesium, all of which are locally available since it was the presence of such raw products that determined the location of the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals. The development of an industry of this character would stimulate activity in collateral industry, would create pay rolls, and provide employment, and develop business where none exists today. During the period that Muscle Shoals has stood idle another war-built plant, adjacent to the Tennessee Valley near Nashville, has been active in industrial operations in the production of rayon and cellophane. The Old Hickory plant near Nashville, which cost $90,000,000, was sold for $3,500,000 about 10 years ago. It has furnished employment to an average of 3,500 persons annually with an average annual pay roll of $3,250,000 and has paid an average tax bill of $65,000. Industrial chemical operations at Muscle Shoals sufficient to absorb a substantial amount of the power would be several times that at Old Hickory.

COMPARISON WITH A PROPOSED SIMILAR PROJECT ON THE ST. LAWRENCE RIVER IN NEW YORK

The proposed legislation would exercise authority within the States of Alabama and Tennessee, which the State of New York through the power authority act denies the Federal Government with respect to power to be generated in the St. Lawrence River, a navigable stream in that State. The State of New York through the power authority act asserts inalienable ownership, possession, and control of the State in the bed, waters, power, and power sites within the watershed of the St. Lawrence for the benefit of the people of the State. On October 28, 1931, the New York Power Authority filed a memorandum with the Secretary of State at Washington asserting that the State regarded as definitely settled:

1. The authority of the Federal Government is paramount in all matters having to do with the improvement of commerce and navigation along the St. Lawrence River.
2. The State of New York is the sole and absolute owner of that part of the water flowing in the St. Lawrence River, and to the land comprising its bed and the power and power sites in, upon, or adjacent to it on the American side of the international boundary, and is fully vested with a legal and inalienable title thereto.

The memorandum stated that the principle of ownership has been established by a long line of court decisions and uniformly recognized by the United States Government.

In this connection attention is invited to the following comparison of principal differences between the plan reported by the committee and the recent power authority act of New York, enacted under the leadership of Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt:

COMMITTEE BILL	POWER AUTHORITY ACT OF NEW YORK
The Federal Government is authorized to operate power plants and power lines, transmit and sell power, and fix retail rates in different States.	The power authority act of New York asserts against the Federal Government's inalienable ownership and exclusive jurisdiction of generation, sale, and distribution of the St. Lawrence River power, including the right to fix rates. No bonds or other obligations can be issued until firm contracts for the sale of power shall have been made sufficient "to insure payment of all operating and maintenance expenses of the project and interest on and amortization and reserve charges sufficient to retire the bonds of the power authority issued for the project in not more than 50 years from the date of issue thereof."

This was President Roosevelt's view then as compared with this bill now.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I feel that anything that may be said on this bill at this time will probably not change a single vote; in fact, it occurs to me that 6 hours of debate is almost unnecessary, because I doubt if there is a Member of this House who does not have his mind fully made up as to how he shall vote on this proposition.

The question of Muscle Shoals legislation has been before this House for many years. I have read most of the debates and the history of this legislation, and you can hardly pick up a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, when the bill was under consideration, that one of the men in the forefront of the fight was not the distinguished Member from the Muscle Shoals district, Judge ALMON, of Alabama. The people of the Tennessee Valley will never be able to repay him for his persistent and intelligent efforts in their behalf.

So far as I am personally concerned, I would even go farther than some of the provisions of this bill. I anticipate, however, that the body at the other end of the Capitol, as well as the free conference committee, will make some changes that will, perhaps, liberalize some of its provisions, but I am enthusiastically for this legislation, and to be perfectly frank with you, I cannot see how anybody can oppose this bill. When you realize that during the World War this Government, in order to carry out its adopted program of national defense, invested $150,000,000 in this property primarily for the purpose of national defense; and, secondarily, for the benefit of the American farmer, and then observe that not one single thing has been done in a big way during all the intervening years to develop the property, it occurs to me as almost criminal. It has been a political football, used by special interests to carry out their own selfish desires and create sectional prejudice.

The United States Government has $150,000,000 invested here. There is nothing in the world necessary to be done except to have enough money available to start the wheels turning, not only to produce whatever nitrogen or fertilizer may be necessary but, secondarily, to develop the power that is lying there dormant at this time.

Let me say in reply to my friend from Connecticut [Mr. Goss], when he talks about this costing several hundred million dollars, or perhaps a billion dollars in the final analysis, the Government is not out anything in this connection, because the authority is authorized to issue and sell $50,000,000 in bonds secured by the property, as well as provide for interest, sinking fund, and amortization. No more money can be spent except by coming back to Congress for an appropriation. The President will not ask for more and Congress will not appropriate unless it is justified. It is a self-liquidating project that will pay its own way and make money after it is fully developed.

Why not go on and develop this great property down there? Why let it lie idle when it will provide employment for thousands, develop a great area, benefit the farmer, and furnish cheap electricity for homes and factories?

There are some things, Mr. Speaker, that in their very nature are monopolistic. I am not for putting the Government into every kind of business, but there are some things like water, and in these more modern days there are things like gas, telephones, and electricity that are getting to be of such common, universal, and even necessary use that they must, in their very nature, be more or less monopolistic, whether owned privately or publicly. These necessities ought to be within the reach of every user.

I am not for doing damage to private interests in that country, but a careful analysis of this bill will show that every opportunity on earth that is reasonable, fair, and just is given for the leasing of this property not only for the making of fertilizer but also for the development of additional power facilities and power lines. It is even provided that with building of Cove Creek Dam and Dam No. 3, which all the engineers, I think, have admitted is necessary for the carrying on of the project, nothing more can be done in the way of building dams or developing power until the market demands will justify it. Surely you can trust your President and this authority, as well as the Congress, to do equity toward all parties at interest.

If you go back to 1912, 20 years ago, there was another great Roosevelt by the name of Theodore, who favored the conservation of the natural resources of this country, and among other things he favored the preservation of the water sites of America for the benefit of all the people, and if you had heard some of the testimony before our Committee on Military Affairs a few days ago, particularly by a distinguished Senator from the State of Washington, about how power sites in the great Northwest had been gobbled up for a song by special interests who turned right around and capitalized on them for millions and sold stocks all over the country that were full of wind and water, I think you would reach the same conclusion that the majority of this committee reached when it said, "Let us develop this and do it ourselves for the benefit of the American people if the power interests will not do it."

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does not the gentleman know that we have had that same experience in Texas, where the power interests have to a considerable extent gobbled up the power sites on the different rivers of Texas?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Oh, that is true of every State in the Union. There is not a State in the Union where power interests or selfish private interests of some sort have not come along and taken charge of the streams that God put in this old world for the benefit of everybody, and after, perhaps, having got them for practically nothing, then turned around and capitalized them, and then I might say they "Insullized" on them and sold stocks comparable to the Insull stocks all over the country. I do not say all of them did this, but I do say that a lot of them did. This bill will put an end to such sharp practice, as well as provide a yardstick by which we shall learn what is a fair and reasonable charge for electric energy.

My friends, since electricity has become as common and necessary as water, gas, and fuel, it ought to be within the reach of every man in America to use it upon terms that he can afford. [Applause.]

I take it that this is just a step in the development of that great area. It is not done for the purpose of confiscating anybody's property. This does not place the Government any more in business than it now is. Under this bill private fertilizer and power interests can lease and operate if they will contract to sell the products to consumers at only a fair and reasonable profit. They have had that opportunity, but showed no disposition to deal fairly with the public.

Now, there is no money involved here except that which will come out of the project itself. Do you propose to allow this property to remain idle for another 15 years? It will afford the greatest possible opportunity for the development of all sections of the United States, and if it is a success it will be followed by the development of the Columbia and the St. Lawrence for the benefit of all the people.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman stated that this is merely a step in the direct development of water power elsewhere in the country. Is he suggesting to the House and the country that the Roosevelt administration is going into the various States for the development of power?

Mr. THOMASON. I do not assume authority to speak for the administration, but I do think it safe to say that this administration is for the preservation and development of the great waterways, power sites, and other natural resources of this country. I am equally sure that this administration is not for the exploitation of public watercourses by special and selfish interests.

Mr. BRITTEN. I appreciate what the gentleman says, but what are you going to do for the private interests you destroy?

Mr. THOMASON. I am going to do nothing against them so long as they do the decent and right thing, but I am not willing to turn the country over to them.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is what is going to happen.

Mr. THOMASON. My home city of El Paso owns its own water plant. Rates are not so low as I should like, but are far cheaper than they were under private ownership. A fair profit has been made, which has many times helped to tide the city over financial difficulties. I do not want cities to take over public utilities if they will take the wind and water out of their stock and exact only a fair and reasonable charge. I do object to the practice indulged in by some utilities of having one set of books for the tax assessors and another for the ratemaking bodies. I want them treated fairly but not to have an advantage.

I voted in the last Congress against placing a consumers' tax on electricity. I also voted a few days ago to right that injustice, and I am glad this body passed it by such a large majority.

You Republicans are an inconsistent lot. When you were in power you spent $120,000,000 on the Ohio River without any hope of getting a dollar of it back. You spent millions on the Cape Cod Canal without getting a cent in return. Three years ago you yelled your heads off about the great Hoover Dam, which you named for your chieftain. But, now that a great project already in existence is to be improved for the benefit of millions of people, you can express nothing but criticism and condemnation.

No man can visualize the great good that will come from this development. I hope the day of war has passed, but the clouds are hanging low in many parts of the world. This is an ideal location far from the sea coast and well protected for the manufacture of explosives. In the days of peace it will provide cheap fertilizer for millions of American farmers. It will give flood control, navigation, afforestation, and employment in all that vast area. One of the crying needs of the day is the improvement of country and community life. Cheap electricity in every home will make for convenience, happiness, and longer life. With cheap power, factories by the hundred will spring up all over the South and add to wealth and employment.

It is gratifying to know that this bill will pass both Houses by a large majority and will receive the approval of our great President. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, this is a great day for the South, a great day for Tennessee, and for the people of my congressional district. I am glad to have a part in the passage of this important bill. It means much to the Nation. It was my pleasure in January of this year to go by airplane with the distinguished Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee and other colleagues to inspect the physical conditions of the Government's investment at Muscle Shoals. President Roosevelt was there with Senators HULL, NORRIS, MCKELLAR and a great number of distinguished visitors, all interested in the development of this property.

We are now about to get action. No longer can the power trusts or the fertilizer trusts delay it. It is the express will of the people of America, their mandate at the polls, and with a new President, imbued with the responsibilities of his office and anxious to serve America the pending bill will soon become a law.

The Muscle Shoals question has been a Federal problem since 1824, when President Monroe, through John C. Calhoun, as Secretary of War, recommended a survey of the Tennessee River so as to improve its navigation at that point, in aid of commerce and military operations. From that day to the present this subject has had the attention of the Nation at different times.

In 1916, in the National Defense Act, the President of the United States, Woodrow Wilson, was authorized to investigate the best and cheapest means of producing nitrates and other products for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizer and other products by water power and was authorized to acquire sites upon river or rivers or upon the public lands as he thought best to carry out the purposes of the act, and was authorized to construct, maintain, and operate at such sites dams, locks, and improvements to navigation, power houses to generate electrical power, and the production of nitrates useful in the manufacture of fertilizer.

The President was given the right to purchase and condemn land for the purpose and money was appropriated and Wilson Dam No. 2 was built and two nitrate plants for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen for war purposes and for agricultural use in times of peace were completed. The dam is there. Buildings are there. Machines are there. All we now need is action and cooperation.

In 1928 a bill somewhat similar to the present bill was passed by Congress and met a pocket veto by President Coolidge, and in 1930 a second Republican President, Mr. Hoover, vigorously protested the passage of a similar bill and vetoed it.

Henry Ford once made a very serious and determined effort to lease this property.

Many bills have been debated in Congress for years looking to a disposition of the property. All to no avail until the present leadership of President Roosevelt, when on April 10, 1933, he said in a message to Congress:

> It is clear that Muscle Shoals development is but a small part of the potential public usefulness of the entire Tennessee River. It enters the field of flood control, soil erosion, afforestation, elimination from agricultural use of marginal lands, and distribution and diversification of industry. In short, this power development of war days leads logically to national planning for a complete river watershed involving many States and the future lives and welfare of millions. It touches and gives life to all forms of human concerns.

We are told there are 11 valuable dam sites between Cove Creek Dam and the Wilson Dam, and the construction of Cove Creek Dam will double the power available at each one of these sites.

All these dams will be built within the next 20 years, and the power generated will be sent in various directions to cities and towns. New cities and towns will spring up in the wake of industry which will settle along this 300-mile section of the Tennessee River from Cove Creek to Wilson Dam. This area will become a great hive of industry.

Millions of busy and industrious people will come to the Tennessee Valley to enjoy this great national resource and benefaction. Many hundreds of millions of dollars will be spent in development in our State.

New plants, new enterprises, and new life in farming and agriculture will follow. Cove Creek Dam, when completed, will flood 52,000 acres of land, making the largest artificial lake in the world. The eyes of the world will be centered on Tennessee, and millions of people will seek this new field of industry and enterprise.

Farming will prosper as never before, producing many different crops and vegetables to feed the millions engaged in construction and in the development of industry, all because of cheap power, cheap fertilizer, and an ideal climate with ideal surroundings in which to live.

Power is required in modern industry; and with all the mineral deposits in our section, with a fertile soil, with the finest of American citizens of the truest and best strain of the Anglo-Saxon blood to draw from, a people who love the ideals of our Republic and the principles of our Constitution, our section presents a promise of prosperity never before equaled.

The farmers for the first time will learn the actual cost of fertilizer, and it will be from 25 percent to 50 percent cheaper than at present. No longer will Chile have a monopoly upon mineral nitrate of soda, as she now has. This trust has taken millions of dollars from the farmers of the United States. This should not longer be permitted. Let the Government help break this trust and set free the farmers of our country. It will be the greatest blessing ever to befall our people and will give them renewed ambition, a new faith, and new hope. Broad power is given in the bill for the authority, the representatives of the Government, to either operate the present plants or lease them for the production of nitrogen or other fertilizer ingredients for use in agriculture.

ELECTRIC POWER

It is provided that all electric power not used in navigation projects and in the production of fertilizers shall be sold and preference given to States, counties, municipalities, and nonprofit cooperative associations. Three-year contracts for power are permitted to States, counties, and associations building their own transmission lines. This power may be sold by them without discrimination among customers of the same class.

Private power companies engaged in the sale and distribution of electricity for profit must sell to the consumer at a figure found to be just, fair, and reasonable by the Federal Power Commission.

In order to prevent duplication of transmission lines and to prevent waste of invested capital, the board is authorized to negotiate with private power companies having transmission lines needed by the Government to serve the public to buy such lines at fair and reasonable prices. If negotiations fail, the authority may acquire the line by condemnation, when the full and fair value of the property must be paid to the owner.

No new lines need be built except where none now exist. The fear that money would be wasted in duplicating existing transmission lines was encouraged by the power trusts in the mind of the public for a purpose.

No ground of fear need exist. All that is required is for the power interests to cooperate under this bill in serving the public by leasing or selling their lines at a fair valuation, and thus promote the industrial, agricultural, and economic development of the Tennessee Valley, which will result in the improvement of business conditions throughout the Nation and the speedy restoration of prosperity.

COVE CREEK DAM

No one longer disputes that the Government should build Cove Creek Dam. Even the power companies now agree to this. It must be done to develop flood control, navigation, and power in the Tennessee Valley.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

If we will pass this bill and begin the work of building the dam, cleaning out the basin, relocating the roads and bridges, and constructing the power houses, then an army of unemployed workmen will be needed. No longer will the man without a job be walking the highways in search of work. He can and will get employment and become again self-sustaining. The purchasing power of the people will be restored and normal prosperity once again reign.

The people of my State are ready, anxious, and willing to cooperate with the Government in this great program of development. No one opposes this national project unless it is because of a selfish motive.

BOND ISSUE

There is provided a bond issue, to build Cove Creek Dam No. 3, of $50,000,000. Already the Government has an investment at Muscle Shoals of $150,000,000 earning practically nothing. This additional expenditure should make the whole investment profitable to the Government and the people. These bonds are Government obligations, but the interest on them is to be paid from the sale of power.

No money can be appropriated on this work except that authorized by Congress. The initial issue will complete Cove Creek Dam and Dam No. 3 and make the necessary changes in the nitrate plants and install the necessary fertilizer equipment and provide working capital.

DEMOCRATIC PARTY PLATFORM

In 1924 the Democratic Party platform contained this provision:

> We hold that the production of cheaper and higher-grade fertilizers is essential to agricultural prosperity. We demand prompt action by Congress for the operation of the Muscle Shoals plants to maximum capacity in the production, distribution, and sale of commercial fertilizers to the farmers of the country, and we oppose any legislation that limits the production of fertilizers at Muscle Shoals by limiting the amount of power to be used in their manufacture.

In 1932 the Democratic Party platform pledged the present administration to the development of natural resources in the common interest and said:

> The conservation, development, and use of the Nation's water power in the public interest.
>
> The removal of Government from all fields of private enterprises except where necessary to develop public works and natural resources in the common interest.

Muscle Shoals, as it now stands, was the product of the World War, when our Nation was drawn into that world catastrophe of sorrow, misery, and death. Out of this came Muscle Shoals to manufacture nitrates for munitions of war. Let it now be dedicated to peace. Let it be used to manufacture for the farmers of the United States cheaper and better fertilizer, and second, let it be used to protect the people against the Power Trusts of America. Let it produce throughout the years the yardstick by which the people of the Nation may know the fair, legitimate, and actual cost of electricity.

These two purposes alone will be of incalculable value to our people for all time.

Let us protect the farmers and home owners in this country, and let the power companies, with their watered stocks and inflated bonds, reap what they have sown. Let us develop Muscle Shoals and Cove Creek Dam, with intervening dams, and thus make cheaper current available to all the people. Let us provide for cheaper fertilizer to be sold the farmer. The fertilizer trusts and power companies have robbed the people of my State and district too long already. Let it be stopped and stopped now.

I should be glad if it were possible to so amend the present bill and have included a provision to pay to the State of Tennessee and to Alabama 5 percent from the gross proceeds of power generated in those States; but I am supporting the bill even though this provision is not included, because I have no opportunity to offer an amendment upon this subject. This would protect the right of my State in the earnings of this property, which I feel would be fair and just. We furnish these natural sites within the confines of my State, and while the property owners are reimbursed for the value of lands taken, yet the State of Tennessee loses tax values to the amount of almost $1,000,000, based upon a 50 percent assessment. The sovereignty of the State is thus permanently deprived of this asset. The original bills have provided for a 5 percent dividend of the gross earnings to be paid to Tennessee on the dams located within the State. I hope the committee will permit an amendment to this effect on the floor of the House today before the bill is passed.

I hope and believe that this is the beginning of the development of the potential power in Tennessee and that my district will soon have the attention of the National Government in this respect. One fifth of all potential power sites in the Nation are located in Tennessee. The fourth district, which I have the honor to represent, has many possibilities in which I hope to interest Government engineers later. The Caney Fork River, Cumberland River, Stone River, Elk River, Duck River, and other streams which flow through this section present admirable location for the development of power so essential to the progress of the great citizenship in that section of the South.

We have paid tribute to power companies throughout the years. Let us have cheaper current, and thus relieve some of the drudgery on the farms by affording the home owners cheaper light and heat, and the housewives the opportunity of cooking, ironing, laundering, and many other advantages arising out of cheap current. Let power turn the wheels of machinery for the farmers in the use of their cream separators. Let the current be sold to individuals, towns, cities, and communities. The authority provided in this bill to sell power to the people by the Government as a sovereign would not be subject to the rules and regulations of public utilities commissions in the different States. No rates will or can be fixed other than by the Government, and this will afford a savings to our people of almost one half of the present prices they are forced to pay to power companies, who have sold watered stock and inflated bonds, unfortunately, to the people in my section for the past many years. The Government can build lines without the consent of public utilities commissions in the States.

This means that the Government, or the people, will receive the profits that accrue. It will put thousands of men to work who are now idle. It will protect our people from floods. It will stop us from longer paying tribute to the Fertilizer Trusts of America and foreign countries.

We must perfect this great national resource. We must provide for additional dams, and especially at Whites Creek, in Roane County, where the Chief of Engineers of the Army states that this is one of the most economical and desirable possibilities of developing additional and cheap power of the entire area to be developed.

When the bill is passed providing cheaper fertilizer for the farmer and carrying cheaper power to his home, together with the farm relief bill already passed and now in the Senate, the bill providing for the relief of mortgage debts on farms, and other relief legislation in prospect, then a new day for the farmer shall have dawned.

This legislation is the greatest forward step ever taken in this Nation for the common man—the man who has made America great.

Let the currency be inflated if need be and the circulating medium increased and the excessive cost of government reduced—then the "new deal" will bring agriculture to the front. It is our greatest national resource. Let us continue the fight for the forgotten and neglected men of America, the great common people, the masses of the people.

They are the ones who have developed this country, cleared its fields, opened its mills, mines, and factories, built its cities, its railroads, and paved highways reaching all over the Nation. They fought for and established our independence. By their sacrifice and suffering they have defended their Nation's honor at home and abroad. For 150 years our people have struggled in peace and war to make this Nation what it is today.

Let us render the greatest good to the greatest number. Let us carry on. Let us build for the future and serve not only the present but all coming generations. Let us remember that "he who serves best lives most."

And in the language of a Tennessean, permit me to conclude with this expressive poem:

An old man going a lone highway,
Came at the evening, cold and gray,
To a chasm vast and deep and wide,
Through which was flowing a sullen tide;
The old man crossed in the twilight dim,
For the sullen stream had no fears for him;
But he turned when safe on the other side
And built a bridge to span the tide.

"Old man", said a fellow pilgrim near,
"You are wasting strength with building here;
Your journey will end with the ending day,
You never again will pass this way;
Why build this bridge at the eventide?"

The builder lifted his old gray head—
"Good friend, in the path I have come", he said,
"There followeth after me today
A youth whose feet must pass this way.
This chasm that has been naught to me,
To that fair-haired youth may a pitfall be;
He, too, must cross in the twilight dim—
Good friend, I am building the bridge for him."

[Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], who asked a question a moment ago as to what the policy is to be, I wish to state that our President in his great speech in Portland, Oreg., stated definitely that there were four great developments of electric power in this Nation that should be undertaken; namely, Muscle Shoals in the Southeast, Boulder Dam in the Southwest, the Columbia River, the greatest of all, in the Northwest, and the St. Lawrence River in the Northeast. I had the pleasure of introducing him to that audience, and in that campaign he made a claim that it was the intention that these power developments should be undertaken by the Government so as to use them as "yardsticks", to use his own words, to fix the price for the sale of electric energy.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does the gentleman really believe that those four projects he has mentioned to the House should be developed when there is now a great surplusage of power owned by private enterprise, the stock in which is held by the people all over the United States? Does the gentleman believe the President will still go ahead and construct those great power sites in those four places, notwithstanding that fact?

Mr. PIERCE. If there is a surplusage of power, it is caused by the tremendous prices asked. The prices asked for electric current are often many times the cost of production. The companies almost universally have developed not their cheapest plants, but the expensive ones. They have built transmission lines and charged into their capitalization many times the actual cost.

Mr. Speaker, all utilities which are essential to life, health, and the growth of our civilization are natural monopolies. Water is essential to life itself. Therefore the business of supplying it is a natural monopoly. Its distribution and supply permit of no competition. Private ownership of a natural monopoly is indefensible. Being indefensible it is intolerable. Being intolerable it must be abolished.

Electricity in its varied uses has become so much a part of our economic life that it is now a natural monopoly. It is just as essential to our daily existence as is the post-office or the water-supply systems. Yet this great natural monopoly is almost entirely under private ownership and control.

Here in our United States nature has provided us with four great natural sites for hydroelectric development. We have the St. Lawrence with Niagara Falls in the Northeast; Muscle Shoals on the Tennessee in the Southeast, the Colorado with the Hoover Dam in the Southwest, while in the Northwest we have the mighty Columbia, the greatest power stream on the continent, second only in size as a river to the Mississippi. The combined potential power of these four streams is sufficient to turn all the wheels of industry, move the traffic of the Nation, and provide modern electrical conveniences to every home in the land. Nature has provided these sources of electrical energy and placed them strategically for man's use. Why should we permit private monopolies to appropriate them and exploit them for private gain?

Recent surveys reveal that the profits of private power companies are out of all proportion to those of other industries and utilities serving the public. The Nation of April 26, 1933, gives the following comparisons of the distribution of gross revenues between labor and the capital invested in four great industries:

	To labor	To capital
	Percent	Percent
Steam railroads give	75.2	24.8
Telegraph and cable	72.1	27.2
Manufacturing (all)	63.2	36.8
Electric light and power	33.9	66.1

Public ownership of this great natural monopoly of water power would at once reduce by one third the costs to the consumer. When by amortization the costs would be paid off within a 40-year period, the rates would be reduced another third. Increased consumption would further reduce rates. Lowered costs would make electricity available to every home in the land—light, heat, refrigeration, and power with modern conveniences everywhere. The development of Muscle Shoals is the beginning of this great program. Its inception grew out of our Nation's war need for nitrates. When this Muscle Shoals site was proposed, Senator George E. Chamberlain, of my own State of Oregon, proposed the Columbia as another site to be considered. President Wilson decided that Muscle Shoals was then more feasible for immediate use, and that site was chosen. The dam was constructed. A nitrate plant was built. The end of the war came. A great plant built at Government expense capable of developing enormous electrical energy lay idle. For nearly 12 years every effort to develop and distribute electricity under Government management has been thwarted by the private power interests. Twice bills for this development passed both House and Senate, only to be vetoed by Presidents Coolidge and Hoover.

During all this time the only beneficiary of this gigantic Federal outlay has been a private power company, which pays the Government one fifth of a cent for electricity which it sells to its consumers for as high as 12 cents. Is it not time to stop such exploitation of a natural resource that belongs to all the people?

It is said with much earnestness that Muscle Shoals should not be made available for the public use because it would ruin the present investors in private electric companies operating in that part of the United States. The electric companies will be able to salvage out of their distribution systems all they are worth. The present generating systems will be run for several years during the time these Government plants are being installed. We should not forget that a part, in many instances a large part, of the capitalization of the private companies is "water." These companies have not always availed themselves of the cheapest development. Expensive development and costly transmission lines afford a large capitalization upon which utility commissions of the various States fix rates high enough for the earning of net dividends on millions of capital that should never be considered as invested capital.

Methods of the electric-power companies have been so ruthless and unfair that the consumers have very little sympathy for these modern buccaneers.

No private investor should be allowed to retard progress nor stay the onward march of civilization simply because he desires to continue to bleed the public for his own selfish enrichment.

The President has promised the Columbia as the next large enterprise of Federal hydroelectric development. Government surveys of that great River have shown that the Umatilla Rapids project can be most economically constructed, that it is practicable and advantageous for immediate development work, that it could be begun at once, because preliminary engineering work has been done, and that a great public employment program could be initiated on the Columbia River this summer. The Government should push the work with all possible speed, so that during the first term of President Roosevelt the four great development plans may be far advanced. Nothing in our President's constructive program can rank in importance with Federal development of hydroelectric projects. Think what this great conception will mean to the people in every section of the United States. The development of the Columbia will follow that of Muscle Shoals. Let us pass this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, as I look at this Muscle Shoals bill I feel that when it receives the signature of the President of the United States a new charter of economic liberty will have been granted to that great southeastern section which it is going to affect. I speak on this subject with a good deal of authority, because I come from the region that is to be the recipient of the great benefits that will flow from Boulder Dam. We are living today in a machine age, and the most important public utility, the most important social economic factor, in the United States is power. Electric power is the great facility which in the future will turn 95 percent of the wheels of industry, and cheap power is the key to any measure of prosperity that this Nation is going to enjoy in the future. I am very glad indeed to raise my voice and say that in the passage of this bill we shall owe a great measure of gratitude to that noble old Roman in the Senate, GEORGE W. NORRIS, of Nebraska. For 14 years he has fought this battle and fought it nobly, and I hope when this bill is signed that Muscle Shoals will be named Norris Shoals, because he has earned the right to have it named after him.

This great project has within it four purposes—power, fertilizer, flood control, and erosion or afforestation. Those are the four things that will be the foundation of the future progress of the country. In California the people of the Imperial Valley have for years been under the tremendous menace of the Colorado River. That will be ended when Boulder Dam is finished. You in the South have the same problem of flooded lands, and I am hoping for the day when we will do something like this on the Mississippi River to make that great Southland area safe from flood.

I happen to come from the city of Los Angeles, which owns its own water and power systems. It so happens that when this city took over the private company that was supplying power to the great part of its citizens, the going domestic electric rate was 9 cents per killowatt-hour. That rate today is 4.8 cents per kilowatt-hour, and, because of this low rate and the corresponding low rates for commercial, industrial, and street lighting, the citizens of Los Angeles have paid over $57,000,000 less for their power in these four classes than they would have, had the private companies been able, through a monopoly which they held, to continue their high electric rates. In addition thereto, they own a power system worth $90,000,000, most of which was earned from surplus profits.

It will thus be seen that publicly owned power has proved an effective yardstick by which to measure electric rates. It is because of this knowledge of the effect of publicly owned power on privately owned power rates that I am so whole-heartedly in favor of this Muscle Shoals project. It is readily seen that with power rates sufficiently low, the great Tennessee Basin may confidently anticipate an era of development that will quickly absorb any surplus power that may now exist, not because it is not needed, but because the rates charged by the power monopoly are so high that the people cannot afford to use the power.

While I am fully conscious of the tremendous advantage that will accrue to the Tennessee Basin through low power rates, I am also convinced that because of low-priced, high-grade fertilizer the development that must follow this project will be further enhanced. Then, too, a flood-control system that will protect the rich bottom lands from yearly inundations will remove the dread and uncertainty that hang over the menaced areas like the sword of Damocles and thus give further impetus to their rapid settlement and cultivation.

I am in full accord with the President's program on this measure. I am also in accord with his idea that this is just a first step in a program of national planning which will have the dual purpose of coordinated development and the saving to the people of what is left of their most priceless natural heritage—water transportation and water power.

This project, with all its rich promise, and the Boulder Dam project that is now happily under way, are the first 2 of 4 great projects which the President promised to foster when, speaking as a candidate in the Northwest, he mentioned Muscle Shoals, the St. Lawrence project, the great Columbia River undertaking, and the Boulder Dam. It was his bold stand on this great question that cemented the liberal element of the country into a solid block of support for his candidacy. Now, less than 2 months after his election, he courageously advocates as a President what he promised as a candidate.

I note, not with much surprise, that the opponents of this bill are chiefly concerned with the prospective losses to be sustained by the stock and bond holders of the private power companies whose interests are to be affected. I doubt that any private company whose plants are capitalized fairly will be hurt in the least. But those whose securities are composed chiefly of wind and water will, I am sure, get a jolt. It is not at all singular that these opponents never have for one moment given thought to the people of the Tennessee Basin's problem of laboring under the burden of high power rates. Had these private companies been disposed to be satisfied with reasonable rates, they could have done twice the business they now do and they would not have a surplus kilowatt-hour of power unsold. But that is not their stripe. They are of the "all the traffic will bear" school. They never have learned and they probably never will learn that "live and let live" is a much safer business policy than the one of overweening greed which they have heretofore practiced.

I trust that every man and woman in this House who is in sympathy with the idea of making the "new deal" mean a "square deal" will vote for this measure and grant to the good people of the Tennessee Basin a new charter of economic liberty that will enable them to go forward to that high destiny to which their important situation in the national economy entitles them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I have been reflecting somewhat upon what has transpired in this Chamber in the last month. I have seen the valiant efforts of the minority party in seeking to torpedo some of the legislation that has come here for deliberation, and as a member of the minority party speaking on this bill I presume I ought to preface my remarks with the same statement that was made by the Christian martyrs when they were gathered in the Roman arena. It will be recalled that they looked up and said something to this effect, "We who are about to die, salute you." So we minority Members will salute you of the majority as we are about to die upon the roll call that will be held upon this bill.

I am not going to change any votes on this bill by what I may have to say today. In fact, any Member of the minority who essays to speak on an administration bill must feel a great deal like the fellow who was in jail and who, as he saw a buddy going along, called and said, "Hey, partner, what time is it?" He said, "What do you care; you are not going anywhere."

So we of the minority know that we are not going anywhere particularly on this bill, but there is something I should like to bring to the attention of the House, particularly to the proponents of this bill. I am open to conviction, and I am ready to vote for this bill, if an affirmative case is conclusively set forth; but I do not believe you have definitely established the need for this kind of legislation.

I live in Illinois. I do not know whether my constituency is going to get any particular benefit from this bill. However I remembered a statement that was made by a distinguished Democrat in this body, who served here for years, Mr. Chisp, of Georgia, when he gave to the country the statement that "he serves his district best when he serves his Nation best." I am, therefore, willing to serve my district by serving the country, if I am convinced that this is good for the country. We might supplement that, I suppose, by a statement that Lincoln made whenever he scrutinized any proposal:

> Every proposal contains good and evil, and the only proper rule in embracing any kind of measure is whether it contains more good for more people than it does of evil.

I therefore look at this bill in that broad light.

There has been a great deal of general talk here. This bill has been referred to as "a charter of economic liberty" and "as the great consummation of a dream after a hundred years of effort"; but I cite you that nothing definite or conclusive has been offered to show that there is any particular need at this time, and it is not emergency legislation. When I think of all the general statements that have been made by the proponents of this bill, it recalls the story of the country boy who went to call on his lady friend one night in a horse and buggy, and upon reaching the house he went in and sat down on one end of the horsehair sofa and she sat over at the other end. They sat there in silence for perhaps an hour, and finally he turned to her in mental desperation and said, "Mary, how is your ma? Not that I give a dern, but just to make talk." It seems to me a lot of talk has been made on this bill, as a matter of fact, but it has not been conclusively set forth that there is any need for this legislation.

Not so long ago in this body we passed a farm bill to relieve agriculture. Why? Because prices were so low. Oats were quoted at 8 cents a bushel; cotton, 5 cents a pound; corn, 26 cents a bushel; wheat at 30 cents a bushel. Why are prices low? Because there is no demand. The market seemed to be glutted. So what did we do in this body? We passed a relief bill that is hooked up with a processing tax. For what purpose? For the purpose of decreasing production in agriculture. Now here we cite the need for fertilizer to increase production, and there does not seem to be any genuine consistency between the two. I have not heard anybody in this Chamber say that this bill is necessary from the standpoint of navigation. I have not heard anybody establish a case that there is a dearth of power in the Tennessee Valley at the present time. If you justify it on the ground that this is a securities-policing measure, that you are going to police the companies that have issued watered securities and try to squeeze out the water, it is a damnably expensive way of administering police regulations upon the security companies of this country. I will not vote to spend $50,000,000 or $10,000,000 or any amount of the people's money when that function is properly exercised by the Federal Trade Commission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has expired.

Mr. JAMES. I yield to the gentleman 2 additional minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I say to the proponents of this bill that my mind is open to conviction. I am ready to vote for this bill when it is conclusively shown that we need this measure from the standpoint of fertilizer, power, navigation, and all of the other things that have been cited as a reason for the bill.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. The gentleman comes from Illinois?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. That is the home of the Insulls. If there is any other answer on earth than that, I should like to know what more answer is necessary than that the gentleman's own fellow citizens defrauded this country of millions of dollars. The necessity for this bill lies in the excessive charges of electric-power companies for light and power and energy which they are developing.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say to the gentleman that that sounds to me like a confession that the existing governmental bodies cannot regulate the price of securities or scrutinize securities and see that they are sound.

Mr. PIERCE. How much have they been regulated in the last 12 years?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Is it not a confession, then, that this Government is not equal to the job of regulation and that Uncle Sam is helpless? And now you come here and ask for another 50 million—for what? Merely to establish another governmental body, and you confess in the same breath the Government's helplessness.

Mr. PIERCE. The proper way to regulate is by the development of this power by the Government.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The development of power in that particular locality of the Nation, or of fertilizer, for that matter, can be of no general good, as I see it. Not one single advocate of the bill has established the need for the measure, and I gladly await the presentation of some affirmative evidence to show that the Muscle Shoals project is needed. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, 9 years ago last month, as a Member of the Sixty-eighth Congress, I had the opportunity to speak for and to hear arguments for and against a bill entitled "A bill to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to sell to Henry Ford Nitrate Plant No. 1, at Sheffield, Ala.; nitrate plant no. 2, at Muscle Shoals, Ala.; Waco Quarry, near Russellsville, Ala.; and to lease to the corporation to be incorporated by him Dam No. 2 and Dam No. 3, including power stations when constructed as provided herein, and for other purposes."

At that time, although this House was composed of a strong Republican majority, the need for some action to be taken on behalf of the public in connection with Muscle Shoals was recognized by a substantial majority in the House, and we heard on one side of the House the remark that "Muscle Shoals in Alabam' without Henry Ford is not worth a damn", and we heard on the other side emphasized again and again "Muscle Shoals in Alabam' with Henry Ford ain't worth a damn."

The result as to that bill was that after full debate and a full understanding of its provisions, the House passed it by a vote of 227 to 143. Later on, before becoming law, owing to the opposition of united fertilizer companies and for other obvious reasons, it failed to pass the Senate. Since the defeat of the Ford bill in 1924, two bills in many ways similar to the legislation which is proposed here today have been passed by both the House and the Senate and have gone to the White House. One of them was given a pocket veto by Calvin Coolidge and the other a direct veto by Herbert Hoover, one in 1928 and the other in 1930. Today, acting as representatives of the people of this country, we have a solemn obligation to vote for this legislation, knowing as we do that when it passes the Senate and goes to the White House it will receive, not a pocket veto, not a direct veto, but the approval of the great leader of the American Republic, Franklin D. Roosevelt. [Applause.]

In this connection let me call your attention to his language in connection with the necessity for this legislation. In his message to Congress on April 10 the President said:

> The continued idleness of a great national investment in the Tennessee Valley leads me to ask the Congress for legislation necessary to enlist this project in the service of the people. It is clear that the Muscle Shoals development is but a small part of the potentional public usefulness of the entire Tennessee River. Such use, if envisioned in its entirety, transcends mere power development; it enters the wide fields of flood control, soil erosion, afforestation, elimination from agricultural use of marginal lands, and distribution and diversification of industry. In short, this power development of war days leads logically to national planning for a complete river watershed involving many States and the future lives and welfare of millions. It touches and gives life to all forms of human concerns.

In considering the continued necessity of this legislation I look back to the remarks I made in this House 9 years ago and repeat in substance what I then said:

For more than a generation we have seen a steady decline in American agriculture, rapid deterioration of the fertility of the soil, gradual decline in agricultural communities, a drift of the rural population to the cities, lured by higher wages, greater opportunities, and better living conditions. In order to attempt to thwart that movement we developed the cry "Back to the farm." We can shout "Back to the farm" from the mountain tops to the valleys below but we cannot get men who come off the farm to go back to the farm, or, better still, not to leave the farm, until we give the farmer a decent, fair, and reasonable opportunity to make a living for himself and his family.

I had the honor of being born and brought up on a farm and I realize something of the obligations, the trials, and tribulations which beset not only the farmer in New Hampshire and New England, but the farmers throughout the length and breadth of this Nation. We do not have the weapons with which to fight, to maintain the standards of quality which both labor and capital have today throughout the Nation. Capital and labor are today both highly organized. Labor may secure its demands by strikes and boycotts. Capital may fight its battles by lockouts and combinations. The American farmer cannot avail himself of either of these remedies, for if the farmer should strike the Nation itself would perish. In other words, the farmer does not have the opportunity for strikes and lockouts that labor and capital have, because the very existence of the American people depends upon the welfare of the agriculture of this Nation.

What is the remedy? The American Nation cannot exist without agricultural prosperity. It is necessary to the return of our great industrial and commercial activities, and it is necessary to the continued health, happiness, and prosperity of all our people. As for the remedy, let me call your attention to the testimony delivered before the Committee on Military Affairs by Edward O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation. He said this:

> The farmers are using in an increasing percentage, year after year, more of the highly concentrated fertilizers, such as can be best made at Muscle Shoals. Freight by water from Muscle Shoals on fertilizers of high concentration will be much less a factor in the total cost to the farmers than is now possible under the present system of manufacturing low-content fertilizers with shipment by rail. The costs of Muscle Shoals fertilizers will be materially lower than are now paid by farmers, first, because of the low price of the power; second, because of water transportation; third, because of high-concentrate material; and, fourth, because of distribution largely through farmers' cooperative purchasing organizations; also, because of low-cost raw materials in the valley.
>
> I might say on one of those points here that I have a list which I should like to show you gentlemen to what extent cooperative farmer service organizations are operating in this country. The first one listed is the Aroostook Federation of Farmers, who purchased in 1932 a million dollars' worth of fertilizer. Right next to that, in New England, is the Eastern States Farmers' Exchange. They handle feed, fertilizer, and seed to the extent of $10,000,000 worth. The largest in the United States is the Cooperative Grange League Federation Exchange, Inc., in New England, which handled $24,000,000 worth. There are a number of groups of those cooperative service organizations scattered throughout the country, and their total business in 1932 was $94,000,000.

So this is what we will do for the interest of the American people through providing cheap fertilizer. Although agriculture may be down in the depths today, I have the confidence to believe it is going to come back and that the country is coming back. In order to secure a return to prosperity, let us give the farmers of this country reasonable logical benefits of this bill so they may enjoy the prosperity to which they are entitled.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. May I speak for a moment, Mr. Speaker, on the power development involved in this bill? I shall now refer to the committee report. It appears in the report of the majority of the committee, after full hearings—

> That all electric power not used in navigation projects, in the production of fertilizers, and in the conducting of fertilizer experiments shall be sold, and in such sale preference shall be given to States, counties, municipalities, and nonprofit cooperative associations.

In connection with this feature of the bill there appeared before our committee the Honorable HOMER T. BONE, United States Senator from the State of Washington, and as to what benefit this will give the American public I want to call your attention for just a moment to his testimony that in the municipally owned power system the city of Tacoma, in the State of Washington, where he resides, charged him $16.55 for what the Insull-controlled plant, the Commonwealth Edison of Chicago, charges today the sum of $98. Here is his own testimony before our committee:

> In my home in 1 month I used, for all purposes, 2,249 kilowatt-hours of current. For that amount I paid my city $16.55. I went to the city of Chicago in 1931 to speak before a public body there on the power question, and I checked that charge with the Commonwealth Edison of Chicago to see what their charge would be for the same service. I not only checked it with them but I checked it up and compared it with the records of the department of that State which regulates the service charges of that utility, and also with the records available to me in my own office. For the service which my city charged me $16.55 Sam Insull's company would have charged me $98 in Chicago. The difference between $16.55 and $98 represents the reason the Insull Co. went on the rocks. It represents flagrant racketeering in the power business. It makes it easily understood why Insull could give $20,000,000 to build a fine opera house in Chicago. The people there thought the charges were perfectly proper, because some department of the State had said that that was a perfectly proper charge.

Why, Mr. Speaker, if we pass this bill, as stated by the majority leader on the floor of this House last Saturday, it will provide what the United States needs, which is a yardstick by which the public-utility commissions of this Nation may know by true and accurate figures the real cost of the production and distribution of power, and thus be able to fix reasonable and fair rates all over this Nation for the protection of the common people.

As a continuation of the administration's policy of giving the American people a new deal and a square deal, I do not hesitate to ask each and every one of you to support and vote for this bill, because it gives us assurance in this country of continuing to live under a government of the people, for the people, and by the people. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the statements just made in reference to the fact that all men in this Chamber have made up their minds on how they expect to vote on this bill. I feel that anyone who comes here to serve his country best should give consideration at any and all times to what is the best thing for the greatest number of the American people. I do not believe that any man who comes here with the idea that somebody else is his boss and expects to tell him how he is to vote on particular subjects that come up here is a fit subject to be in the House of Representatives. I think it is time we have men who are able and willing to think for themselves in order that they may be able to do what is best for their country.

So far as I am concerned, I am a Republican, and I want to stand by the Republican principles, but when the Republican principles are detrimental to the best interests of our country, I am opposed to the Republican principles, but will stand by and with the party to show them they are wrong and help make the Republican Party better, if that is possible. I think this is a principle that should be inherent in all of us so far as our legislative duties are concerned.

We speak today of Muscle Shoals as being the Norris bill, and it was suggested here that it ought to be designated as the "Norris bill." If I were to designate the bill, I would call it the "Norris folly", and I think probably this would be the best interpretation we could give to it, because if we are going to start out today on this gigantic plan of putting the Government in business, I believe it is the opening wedge for the greatest piece of socialistic legislation that has come up before the House of Representatives in the past 2 years that I have been here. It is socialism and Russianism on a gigantic scale.

I am opposed to the Government being in business. I think it is absolutely wrong for the Government to go into any kind of business except that which the Constitution provides for. I think we should have Government supervision and Government regulation but not Government operation. When we have Government supervision and Government regulation we can put the screws on men who are dishonest and are doing things that are detrimental to the welfare of this country a whole lot better than we can if we have the Government in business, putting it in the hands of politicians, because I am telling you that too many men are here for their own selfish interests. Business and politics do not mix well. I have seen this, and I know this is the case. If you want efficient business, it must not be controlled by politicians.

We stand up before the House here and say that we are for the best interests of the country, when I question very much if some Members of Congress have not had orders from somebody else as to how he will have to vote.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I do not care to yield at the present time. I am not a politician or a speechmaker, and I have to keep all the wits I have together if I am going to try to get across anything I want to say.

We talk of the Insulls in the power business and we talk of the Mitchells in the banking business. If what the papers say is true, they should all go behind the bars. We do not want any operation of that kind, whether it is in the power business, the banking business, or any other kind of business; but we stand here before the House of Representatives and we talk about the banker and the business men, and one would naturally think from the talk in this Hall that they are all crooked. I want to tell you that the business men of this country and the bankers of this country are just as honest as any man who sits here in the House of Representatives—95 percent of them—yet we stand up here and damn the business interests of this country. I am a business man and I am proud of it, and I do not want to sit back and take any insult from any Member of Congress that I am crooked.

I tell you we are doing the wrong thing here in Washington if we want to put men back at work, and this is our greatest object, and it ought to be the ambition and the desire of every Member of Congress; yet when you talk about business interests and interests of all kinds as being crooked you destroy the thought and the idea of the average man or woman who is not able to think for himself to any great degree. You destroy their confidence, and then you destroy and disobey the greatest of all laws—the golden rule—and when you do that then you destroy all the laws of our country. To put men back to work you must encourage business, not kill it; business and labor are inseparable and must work hand in hand. You cannot have one without the other.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. RICH. We have an investment of $150,000,000 in Muscle Shoals. Any man in business today, if he has a poor investment and finds that the original investment is going to go, he will not put good money after bad money; he will stop right away and consider the first loss the best loss.

We have an investment of $150,000,000 there as a war measure. The war was over 13 years ago, and we should have never gotten into the war or Muscle Shoals. But because we have that investment down there at Muscle Shoals is no reason why we should say we are going to spend millions of dollars more on that project and then lose it also; that is mighty poor business and poor reasoning, yet we have some that reason that way.

You come back and say that the bill does not provide for additional funds from the Treasury. The system of bookkeeping that we have under Federal control is such that we do not know what things do cost here in the House of Representatives.

There is not 1 Member out of 25, as a rule, when they make statements in reference to the cost, who knows actually what they do mean. We have a system in the House of Representatives and our Government that camouflages the American people; we have a system dealing with appropriations, but you do not know what the actual cost is.

I do hope that we are going to have sometime a system of bookkeeping under every branch of the Government where it will readily appear what the expenditures are, where the money comes from, and where it is going to, showing the assets and liabilities and making proper charges for depreciation, interest on money invested, and all expenses that any legitimate business enterprise would adopt.

If you want to, turn back and look at the barge lines or Inland Waterways Corporation, which, Major Ashburn says, are making money for the Government. This is Government operation.

That is a deviation from the truth or misstatement of good business principles. If you invest capital in the operation of a project today any sane, sensible man knows that capital costs money. If we invest some money in a Federal operation we are going to add to the national debt. Do you think if we are adding to the national debt it does not cost money? Do our Government bonds bear interest? It is absurd to state otherwise. Therefore all business, whether operated by Government or private individuals, must count their costs and count it accurately.

Now, if we would add in the operation of the barge line the cost of operation, the depreciation and the interest on the money invested, you would see that the statement of Major Ashburn that it operates at a profit is untrue if we add all expenses to operation.

Under the terms of this bill we are going into the development of Muscle Shoals. We are going to develop it on $150,000,000 of money already spent, and I will bet any man within reason that we will spend millions and millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money within the next 10 years developing that proposition.

You must count the money invested, the interest on the investment, and you will find it will cost the taxpayers of the country, especially my State—and I do not believe in being selfish—but if the people want to develop it, it belongs to Alabama and Tennessee; let us give it to them. I will vote this minute to turn it over to those States if they want it and save the taxpayers of my State who are already overburdened with a great amount of taxes from still further taxation. I say again our first loss is the best loss. Let the Government get rid of it now.

These men who want it want to build up that territory at the expense of the Nation. I think I am safe in saying that we will try to build up industry down there, and when you build that up in that vicinity you are going to take it from other sections of the country at the expense of all taxpayers. Who will you rob? People in that vicinity have invested $450,000,000 in capital in power plants and fertilizer plants. They have sold bonds and they have paid out millions of dollars of interest, and now it is proposed to set up this Government project and kill them. You are proposing to set up this socialistic, Russianized project on the Nation's money. I am against the proposition, because it is not right, it is not justifiable, it is not honest, and no business in the country would project it at this time.

Not one of you Congressmen would invest $100 in any proposition if you thought you would lose it. Do you know of any person who would? I say, No, no; a thousand times no! Yet you are going to invest the money of the American taxpayers in such a project as you would not foster yourself. This I call politics and not business.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. Does the gentleman not recognize that there are certain lines of business that are pure monopolies, which should be handled by the people, like water, gas, electricity? There is no such thing as competition and there is no regulation of the private corporation.

Mr. RICH. If the States of Alabama and Tennessee have this natural resource, let them develop it. Let us give it to them. Why should we in Pennsylvania take it away from them, and why should the people in Pennsylvania be taxed to develop it? If you gentlemen in Oregon want to develop the Columbia River, develop it, and God be with you. We wish you all success in it, but I do not want the Pennsylvania taxpayers to be called upon to give you something out in Oregon that you ought to have yourself, and that ought to be yours and be developed by the people of Oregon. [Applause.]

Mr. PIERCE. Does the gentleman not realize that this will require millions and millions of dollars and that no State or community can undertake it by itself?

Mr. RICH. Very well, but do not come to our State and tax our people for it. We cannot stand it; that is one reason why I object to it. They do not need the additional power down there at Muscle Shoals. They do not need it in Tennessee or Alabama, or in any of those places. They have their own companies down there and they have their own power plants that can develop 30 percent more than they can now use. Why project more at this time? Why do you want to kill them? Give them an opportunity. If they are charging too much for power, have your States regulate them or the public service commission.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman remembers that on December 14, 1931, he himself introduced into this House the bill, H.R. 5622, to regulate the Muscle Shoals proposition?

Mr. RICH. I do, and I wanted to put it in such position as it ought to be in at that time. I made the statement before the gentleman's committee that we would give it to you gentlemen down there in Tennessee and Alabama if you would only take it from the Government. I think this is the best bill so far proposed, but this bill is far from being a perfect one. My first bill proposed to give it to Alabama and Tennessee; this the gentleman knows.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. Is not the position which the gentleman assumes in direct violation or contradiction of the position assumed in this Capitol by Daniel Webster in his immortal reply to Haine with regard to Federal control of the interior industries of the land?

Mr. RICH. I take it——

Mr. FOCHT. Is it or is it not?

Mr. RICH. Yes and no. I am not as well versed as my colleague on history and I would have to refresh my memory to give a definite reply.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, coming as I do from one of the greatest industrial sections of the world, namely, the Monongahela Valley in Pennsylvania, and realizing that that section of the country owes in its industrial development a great debt to that which our friends of the opposition are pleased to call Government subsidies, I call the attention of the House to the fact that most of the development of this character throughout the United States has been more or less in the nature of Government subsidies. In the section from which I come this subsidy is to such an extent that it amounts, in fact, to a gift, a gift of free navigation to a few large steel companies. I wish to say one of the greatest streams that has ever flowed from the great Republican pork barrel of the United States is the Monongahela River. During the last 12 years Andrew Mellon has pleased to move locks and dams up or down that river a thousand yards or so to give employment to that Dravo Construction Co., and has any voice ever been raised in this House in protest against that? There have been no protests, at least not sufficient to stop that kind of manipulation, because it has been to the financial interests of those in this country who are in the front ranks of big business. Now that we have proposed a measure intended to promote the interests of the little man, loud is the protest from the high priests of special interests for a special few.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I have not the time to yield. My time is short. A great deal of opposition has been raised to this measure because it has been stated that we are overdeveloped in the United States. Are we in this country today of so little faith that we must look backward for our industrial inspiration? If so, then beyond a doubt we are lost. This Nation owes its industrial development to the fact that we have always looked forward and not backward. The wants of the American people are as great or even greater today than they were 5 or 10 years ago. The most important factor which has influenced the evolution of the human race is the fact that it is one of the determinations of mankind that his posterity shall enjoy more comforts, advantages, and pleasures than he himself enjoyed. Are we, the descendants of those pioneers who in such a short space of time carved a Nation out of the wilderness, to throw up our hands in abject surrender and say, "The sun of opportunity has set; therefore let us rest." A nation which does not look forward must go backward.

All we need to start industry moving in this country is to allow the people to be able to buy what they desire. That is the solution to our industrial stagnation. If the people of the United States have the means to buy they will buy.

and if they can buy, our industries will start up, and we will have employment and its inevitable prosperity and happiness. Here is one measure designed to further this industrial program by which we are trying to provide employment for the people of the United States. Here is a measure which takes into consideration the largest class of people in this Nation—the ultimate consumers.

Coming from the section I do, I would not consider myself a good American citizen if I could stand on the floor of this House and oppose this measure simply because it is liable to benefit a certain section. It is true that it will benefit this one section more directly than any other. However, it will benefit the whole country indirectly, because of this fact: As one gentleman of the opposition stated a few minutes ago, a measure must be viewed from the viewpoint of the Nation as a whole. Let us therefore lay aside our sectional viewpoint and consider the Nation. It is a well-known fact of economics that money spent in one part of the country eventually gets around and helps all of the country.

In the Monongahela Valley the Government maintains a free river for the transportation of a very few big steel companies, and each bank of the river is paralleled by railroads. Because of the fact that the traffic of the steel and coal companies passes through those locks without even the cost of a postage stamp, the Government has been compelled to furnish the money to pay the interest on the bonds of these practically bankrupt railroads. Is not that Government competition with industry, I would ask you, and who is paying the bill?

During the past few years there has developed in this country a gigantic industry—that of furnishing electric refrigeration. So far it has been limited mainly to refrigeration concerning foodstuffs. I can see in the near future that industry reaching out and engaging in refrigeration to cool the habitations of the citizens of the Nation. Where in our national boundaries is there more demand for electricity for this purpose than in the section of country where this project is proposed?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. When we have hearings before a committee and cannot get time as we desire, and we have debate on the floor and cannot get the time we want to discuss these questions of national importance, what kind of legislation should we call that?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GREEN). Under the rules of the House the gentleman in charge of the bill, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, controls the time.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield ½ minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GILLESPIE].

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD a short article by Dr. Beard in Harpers Magazine, 1931, which illustrates and catalogs briefly all of the different enterprises in which the Government is engaged.

Mr. GOSS. Reserving the right to object, how long is the article?

Mr. GILLESPIE. It would occupy about two pages, I believe, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or perhaps two and a half pages.

Mr. GOSS. Cannot the gentleman reduce that?

Mr. GILLESPIE. Yes. I can cut out the first two pages of it and that will shorten the article.

Mr. GOSS. If it will make a short article, I will not object.

Mr. BRITTEN. Reserving the right to object, how many pages of the volume which the gentleman now has does he intend to insert in the RECORD under leave to print?

Mr. GILLESPIE. It is about 4 or 5 of these pages. It would make about 2 pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. BRITTEN. What is the volume which the gentleman has in his hand?

Mr. GILLESPIE. It is Harpers Magazine, which I got from the Library.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I object to that being inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN].

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill providing for the development of the Tennessee River does violence to fundamental principles of government, practices inequality among the people, violates horse-sense business, and places upon the American people an intolerable financial and tax burden.

In the first instance I say it does violence to government. I point to section 2. Here is created a board which is to be responsible for the expending of tens of millions of dollars, and will be spending hundreds of millions of dollars before we are through with it. By the terms of the bill this board of three men is to be appointed, each for a term of 9 years. Once this thing is in operation it means that no President of the United States, during one term, will have an opportunity to appoint more than one member of this board. The creation of this board, to have charge of the expenditure of this vast sum of money and given terms of 9 years, has but one obvious purpose, and that is to build up something which is above and beyond the control of the President of the United States, whoever he may be, and the Congress of the United States. [Applause.] It flies in the teeth of the fundamental principles of democracy and of the Constitution of our country.

In this bill again you Democrats are destroying the civil-service provisions of our law. I have no desire to be partisan. I wish only success for the administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Failure means more than personal failure to him. It may mean failure to the country; but certainly, my Democratic friends, you owe more to your country than to bring in bills such as this and make patronage measures out of them. [Applause.] Down to the stenographers who work for this institution the civil service is not applicable. Then, to add insult to injury and to practice deception, you place section 7 in this bill, in which you make the hypocritical statement that no appointment shall be subject to political qualification.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. No. I cannot yield until I have finished.

Now, what does that statement mean? Here is a board supposedly nonpartisan, two of one political party. Your President will naturally appoint two Democratic members, and I take no exception to that. You Democratic Congressmen and Senators, of course, can go down to this board, controlled by Democrats, and obtain appointments for stenographers, and what not, which should be under the Civil Service. You will say that your recommendations are on the basis of efficiency, and that will be sufficient to meet the qualifications of section 7. It is wrong to destroy the civil-service provisions in this bill; and last week, even in a relief measure, where the welfare of the hungry and the poorly clad and the unsheltered was involved, you made patronage of it by driving the Civil Service from its operation. It is wrong, and I appeal to you not to become drunk with your power of three-fourths majority and destroy the Civil Service.

Now, I want to get down to this bill. Section 6 pertains to fertilizer. I said a moment ago that this bill perpetrated inequalities among the people of this country. Assuming that this board operating this governmental adventure is going to manufacture fertilizer cheap, you know and I know that transportation will make it impossible to deliver that fertilizer to the great body of farmers of this country. It will take care of a few farmers within three or four hundred miles of Muscle Shoals; yet every farmer in the United States will be taxed to pay his proportionate share of the investment made in this institution. That is inequality.

Again we have as a part of the relief program farm legislation. Just two weeks ago we enacted legislation giving the cotton producers of this country a free gamble on the cotton market at the expense of the Government, and with the pledge that the cotton producer need only reduce his acreage. Yet now, at Government expense, it is attempted to produce fertilizer more cheaply, which, in the nature of things, can only be delivered to the cotton section; and cotton, of all crops, is the one outstanding crop of which we produce a surplus in this Nation. Still, at Government expense, we justify going into this wild experiment on the theory of producing fertilizer more cheaply.

Subsection (b), section 10, provides that during each fiscal year the General Accounting Office of the Government of the United States shall make a careful accounting and audit of the receipts and expenditures of this project. The same section provides that there is to be a complete duplication of this work by outside accountants and auditors. This provision is that the President shall employ a firm of certified public accountants to likewise make an annual audit. During this session of Congress we have given the President power and authority to consolidate duplicating bureaus and departments, yet, before the President has time to perform this task, we are here passing this act which makes it mandatory that once a year the same identical work will be duplicated. If we have no faith in the ability and integrity of the General Accounting Office and want outside accountants to do this work, then let us not make it necessary that the General Accounting Office carry a personnel to do work which the Government is not going to accept with confidence. If we have confidence in the General Accounting Office, then we should at least leave it optional with the President as to whether or not he wants an outside check-up on the General Accounting Office.

Now let us go to the power phase of it. When we consider this bill carefully, there is no doubt but that there will be expended untold millions. The bill itself provides for an appropriation of $10,000,000 and for a bond issue of $50,000,000. So far as the bill itself is concerned, we would say it only authorizes an expenditure of $60,000,000. Probably a casual reading would leave this inference, but this is a deception practiced upon the country. Carry out the mandates of this bill, and the man does not live who has a reasonable comprehension of how far this obligation will go against the people of the United States.

Very likely when this bill comes back to the House we will find the Senate has substituted for it the Norris bill. Under section 15 of that bill electric power is to be developed to the maximum, and bonds are authorized to be issued with no limitation on the amount of bonds which may be issued. It is estimated 5,000,000 potential horsepower is involved in this project. A reasonable estimate of the cost to develop such horsepower is $150 per horsepower. This would mean an expenditure in the end of about $650,000,000. Before this thing is through we are going to be into the billions, because once it is started we will be told we cannot stop.

Let me show you some more of the fallacious ideas set forth in this bill. Section 15 of the bill provides that the primary purpose is the development of power for domestic consumption on the farms and in the cities; that the secondary purpose is its use by industry. Well, this is only a dream. Anyone who knows enough about electricity to turn an electric button knows the plant does not operate that can produce electricity profitably except it has a constant industrial load. Unless a plant has a constant industrial load it cannot produce electricity cheap enough to be sold to advantage for domestic purposes.

I have no brief for the stock grafters who have been promoting electric light and power plants over the country the last 15 years. In many instances I have advocated municipal ownership of plants, but I have never yet undertaken to lead the people of any given community down a blind alley by recommending to them the establishment of a municipal light and power plant where there was not an industrial load at hand for them.

Municipal light plants are practical and are invariably operated at a profit in those towns and cities where they have access to a constant industrial load to equalize the demand with the capacity of the plant. I have never known of a successful municipal plant to be operated upon the theory that furnishing electricity to industries was a mere secondary purpose. My position in this matter is not a case of a greater interest in smokestacks than in lighting darkened homes. It is just a case of using a little horse sense and being practical. In the long run, it is a case of having a greater interest in the welfare of the homes. The people buy the electricity for domestic consumption when they are able to buy it from a plant which has a large, constant industrial load. When the people buy electricity from a plant which does not have a large constant industrial load, the cost of placing electricity upon the board to be used in the homes is so high that in turn the price paid by the homes for domestic use becomes prohibitive for many domestic uses. Those who operate municipal plants either know, or soon learn, this fact. Therefore, they soon operate their plant not with the idea that supplying electricity for industries is a mere secondary purpose but with the idea of supplying electricity for industries in order that they may be able to produce electricity in a quantity and at a cost which will permit the sale of it for domestic consumption at a cheap rate.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. McGUGIN. The distance power may be transmitted from this plant is limited to a radius of 400 miles from the place of generation. Why tax the people of the entire United States to provide electricity and power for industrial and domestic uses within a restricted area of 400 miles?

I do not admit for a moment this project is practicable; but, assuming for the purpose of the argument that it is, I ask you, How can I or any Member whose district lies more than 400 miles from Muscle Shoals justify his action in voting taxes upon the backs of his constituents to furnish electricity and power for those living within this golden circle with a radius of 400 miles from this portion of the Tennessee River? [Applause.]

I came in here a few weeks ago and stood squarely behind the President of the United States and voted for the economy bill. I personally believed, and I believed his statement when he said that a bill was necessary to preserve the faith and the credit of the Government of the United States; but here comes a proposition that is going to demand much of the people of the United States and drain the faith and credit of the United States for tens and tens of millions of dollars and ultimately hundreds of millions of dollars.

Having stood here a few weeks ago and voted to reduce the salaries of public employees, voted to give the President power to take certain pensions away from many of my comrades who were the defenders of this country in time of war, I am not now ready to vote to pour public money and credit by the millions into the Tennessee River. [Applause.]

In this connection, I want to ask any Congressman who stands upon this floor and votes for this bill, who likewise voted for the economy bill, if he thinks he even deserves the good will of the veterans of his district and of the public employees of his district and of the taxpayers of his district, much less deserving their confidence and support.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. I cannot yield.

Mr. RANKIN. What about those who voted against the economy bill?

Mr. McGUGIN. They are in pretty good shape; they are consistent. In this connection I may say we have almost come to the point where there may as well be but two kinds of Congressmen—consistent Treasury raiders all the time and those consistently in favor of some economy in government.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. My time is very limited.

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman was a member of the Economy Committee, was he not?

Mr. McGUGIN. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. I am sorry but I have not the time to yield.

This is a case where it is purely a proposition of heads the Government loses and tails somebody else wins. Obviously, all losses must be made up by the Government, but here again, in section 14, we practice some more fraud and deceit upon the Congress and the country. By this section we leave the inference that the net profits shall go into the Treasury of the United States. But before there are any net profits the Board must first deduct the cost of operation, maintenance, depreciation, and amortization.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. Not yet.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question about his own record? I wish to ask him about his own consistency as shown by his votes in the RECORD.

Mr. McGUGIN. I have not yet yielded. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield.

Let us see what else there is to it. Mr. Speaker, under this section before one dollar can get into the Public Treasury this board must be satisfied that it is not needed for future operating capital or needed for construction. This will be worse than the Federal Reserve System. Supposedly the Treasury was to obtain some profit from the Federal Reserve System, but before any profit will be turned back to the Treasury from the Federal Reserve they must pay for the great buildings they have built all over the Nation, buildings that were not needed. The same thing will apply in this enterprise. Not one penny can get into the Treasury except the board reaches the conclusion it is not needed for future operation or future construction. There will be no end to carrying on future construction rather than to turn any net profits into the United States Treasury.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. For a very short question.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman explain his vote against the administration measure which gives to the President the right to reduce the more than $200,000,000 annual postal deficit? In view of his speech today on the subject of economy, will he explain why he voted against the measure giving the President of the United States the power to reduce the postal deficit?

Mr. McGUGIN. My first answer to that is that I voted to reduce first-class postage from 3 cents to 2 cents, but I was voted down by the gentleman and his political colleagues. [Applause.] Next, I refused to vote for that bill because it carried a continuation of the iniquitous gasoline tax for another year. [Applause.]

I want to call the attention of the House to another section of this bill. It provides for going up to Cove Creek and building another dam over 100 miles from Muscle Shoals and not even on the Tennessee River.

After the war there were millions of dollars' worth of American Army supplies destroyed in France. We have heard much complaint about it. When it was destroyed, however, at least it was not used as an excuse or justification for spending millions of dollars more.

Muscle Shoals is not practical in and of itself as a place to produce electricity, and sections 16 and 17 frankly admit this, because you are insisting that the Government go 100 miles up the river and on another river and build another dam in order to have an even flow of water for 12 months of the year so that Muscle Shoals can be used for the production of electricity. As a matter of fact, after this is done and after this $60,000,000 is expended, again we are going to be told, as we are now told, the Government has this much money invested and we will have to go on and see this thing through and spend more and more money.

Now, let us assume that this proposed board can produce electricity and will produce it more cheaply for the use of manufacturing in the Tennessee Valley. If I am not mistaken, the thing that is hurting this country now is that the industry we already have is standing idle and not that we need more industries.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. McGUGIN. In considering this measure, the sponsors always throw reason and consideration to the four winds and intolerantly stick to the assumption that its success is not a matter of question. Now, for the sake of the argument, let us assume that their assumption is correct. Let us assume that the enterprise will be operated efficiently, that electricity is produced cheaply and sold advantageously to industry in the Tennessee Valley. Then the question arises, Is that advisable, and is it equality among the people of this country? I cannot subscribe to the proposition that all of the industries and all of the people of the United States should be taxed to provide cheap electricity for industry in one specific section of the country so that it may be favored and operated at an advantage over the industries of the rest of the United States.

I am not interested in taxing the people of Kansas or having the people of Kansas assist in providing their share of the public credit to generate cheap electricity in the Tennessee Valley so that industries located in that valley can operate at an advantage over industries located in Kansas. I am not interested in placing this burden upon the people of Kansas so that in the future industries seeking locations will pass by Kansas and go to the Tennessee Valley.

My honest judgment is that in the end this enterprise will not be successful and that the people will suffer a terrific loss which must be made up by the Federal Government picking the pockets of all of the people through the collection of taxes. Yet, assuming that it meets with all the success which its sponsors claim, still the fact remains that any Congressman who sits here and votes for it and represents a district more than a few hundred miles distant from the Tennessee Valley betrays the just interests of the people whom he serves. He will have voted to tax his own people for something which may destroy them and which certainly cannot benefit them.

We are forced into this situation very largely by the efforts of a grand old gentleman from McCook, Nebr., yet my judgment tells me that he is promoting something which is a mere obsession with him and which I am quite certain will never benefit the people of Nebraska. If it succeeds, it will provide economic discrimination against the people in Nebraska. If it produces cheap power, it will discriminate against Nebraska industries. If it produces cheap fertilizer, transportation charges will not permit the farmers of Nebraska to enjoy the benefits of that cheap fertilizer. It will only present economic discrimination against the farmers of Nebraska in that it will make it possible for their competitors in the vicinity of the Tennessee Valley to enjoy increased production to be sold in competition with the production of the Nebraska farmers. If it fails, every citizen in Nebraska will be obliged to contribute in taxes to help make up the loss. What is here said of Nebraska is true of every other State which is located at a distance of more than a few hundred miles from the Tennessee Valley. I am not going to vote for such discrimination against the people who sent me to Congress and whom I am trying to represent faithfully.

Under the rules, I cannot mention a Senator by name. I said, a few moments ago, that the Congress and the country were being forced into this situation very largely by the efforts of the distinguished citizen of McCook, Nebr. During the campaign, President Roosevelt stopped off at McCook especially to visit with this distinguished gentleman. This visit obtained for Mr. Roosevelt the votes of a host of followers of this gentleman. Then a political obligation was created, which the President should some time liquidate. I have no objection to the President's paying his political obligations. Due to my high regard and veneration for the distinguished citizen from McCook, I have no objection even to his obsessions' being gratified. However, I am not willing to vote to force my country into an enterprise which will cost the people of the United States millions of dollars, and which experience and reason tell me will most likely be a gigantic loss to the people in order to pay the political obligations of any man or gratify the obsessions of any man. This is true even though he be a President or a United States Senator.

If this enterprise proves successful, it is discrimination which the most of us are voting against our own people. If it proves unsuccessful, we have voted the loss of the experiment upon our own people. Others may do as they please, but, as for me, I will not so vote against the people of the Third District of Kansas. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MONTET], a member of the committee.

Mr. MONTET. Mr. Speaker, while this is my second journey with a Muscle Shoals bill since I have been a member of the Military Affairs Committee, it will not be my purpose to cover ground already covered. My only purpose in taking this time is to call to the attention of the House certain provisions of the bill which render this proposal immune from any successful charge that it is begotten of prejudice against any activity in the area it seeks to serve and develop.

While Muscle Shoals was first called to the attention of the Nation some 100 years ago, it was not until 17 years ago, in 1916, that Muscle Shoals really came into being. During the World War Congress passed the National Defense Act. In that act it is provided that in times of emergency Muscle Shoals shall be used for purposes of national defense, and in times of peace for the promotion of agriculture by producing cheaper fertilizer and more fertilizer for the farmers of the country.

In this proposal we seek to effectuate this purpose. We have written into the bill provisions which insure, under all circumstances, the production of fertilizer at Muscle Shoals. It is provided that the authority shall have the power to lease this project for the production of nitrogenous plant foods and other fertilizers or fertilizer ingredients. It provides that if the authority itself operates this project, it shall be bound—and this is made mandatory—to produce fertilizer at Muscle Shoals under all conditions and circumstances. The bill insures a minimum production and that this production shall be increased as the market demands shall require.

So in this respect we are carrying out the provisions of the National Defense Act of 1916, which brought Muscle Shoals into being.

It is my purpose to not only call your attention to certain provisions of this bill but to also refer to statements by our President and other leaders of public thought with reference to public utilities of this and kindred kinds.

I want to call your attention to section 13, which provides that—> in the event the board is unable to make satisfactory contracts with persons, firms, or corporations engaged in the distribution and resale of electricity as in this act provided, or for the use or purchase of such transmission lines, it is hereby expressly authorized, either from appropriations—

And so forth, to construct lines for the distribution of electricity. On page 24 of this bill, section 16, the first proviso also has a like provision with reference to the construction of a transmission line from Cove Creek to Muscle Shoals.

These provisions are founded upon sound business principles, and it is my hope that under any and all circumstances, whatever bill is eventually passed by the Congress, these same sound principles will be contained in the measure.

This is in line with the testimony adduced before our committee. Every witness testifying before the Military Affairs Committee in support of this legislation said it was either his or her opinion that if the Government entered into this field of activity and constructed dams and electricity generating facilities at Muscle Shoals, before engaging in the construction of transmission lines, the Government should first make every effort possible to avail itself of now existing transmission facilities in that territory. Every witness who testified before the committee admitted that that was the proper way for the Government to enter into this field, that it should first attempt to use existing facilities now in that area and owned by private companies. In other words, the Government should only go into the transmission and resale of power as a last resort.

We have written this principle in the bill. This is in line with what our President said to the New York Legislature in 1931 when he was Governor of that State. It is in line with his public addresses and in his recent book, Looking Forward.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTET. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. I want to say to the gentleman that I consider that the most constructive amendment that has been written into the bill.

Mr. MONTET. I thank the gentleman. I want to call attention to statements made by President Roosevelt. I am calling this to your attention for the purpose of showing that these provisions are in line with what the President has said.

In July 1931, at a conference of governors at French Lick, he said:

> We hope this new commission will be able in order to prevent duplication of existing lines to make a fair contract with existing utility companies, under which contract the utility companies will receive the actual cost of transmission, the actual cost of distribution, plus a reasonable profit on that transmission and distribution.

The provisions of this bill are in direct line with that statement.

In a radio address on the New York State water-power issues in April 1933 President Roosevelt, discussing the bill creating the New York State Power Authority, said:

> The bill further distinctly provides that if the power trustees are unable to bring about a contract or contracts satisfactory to them and to the governor with private companies for transmission and distribution, then the trustees must report to the legislature some other plan, if practicable, for either transmission or distribution, or both, which may involve the erection of transmission lines by the authority itself.

We went a step further than did Governor Roosevelt in 1931. He said, if the board is unable to effect an agreement with private companies for the transmission of power, it shall report back to the legislature for further instructions.

There was written in this bill a provision which goes beyond the instructions contained in the New York Power Act, because we do not provide that the authority must come back to Congress. We provide that if it is unable to make a contract with private companies for the resale of power, or for the use or purchase of these lines, instead of coming back to Congress, the authority can go ahead and construct distributing lines without coming back to us. This is a more liberal provision than was put forth by President Roosevelt in his New York Power Authority Act.

No one, I believe, would attempt to justify the construction of unnecessary competing services. I notice that on the 15th of this month our own Speaker, Mr. RAINEY, in a speech to the American Highway Freight Association Convention in this city, while discussing the question of a system of railroad trunk lines paralleling each other and serving the same areas, said:

> We have the spectacle in this country now of parallel tracks extending sometimes for 2,000 miles, serving the same terminals, and the same points where passenger and freight traffic originate.

It would be just as ridiculous for this Government to build transmission lines without making some effort to use the system already in existence as it would be to build two competing railroad trunk lines serving the same terminals and the same area. It is for this reason that we wrote the provisions here referred to in this bill. These, I believe, are sound economically and represent good business sense. The Government cannot justify going into this Muscle Shoals project with a view of destroying existing facilities. It must first make every effort possible to close satisfactory contracts for the resale of power, and to show you that that would accomplish the same purpose as the construction of transmission lines, we also provide in the bill that the rates to be charged for the redistribution of this power shall be fixed by the Federal Power Commission.

Mr. KVALE. That applies only to maximum rates.

Mr. MONTET. That is true. It applies only to maximum rates, but the point I am driving at is that the purposes of this Muscle Shoals legislation is to establish a yardstick, and we maintain that by these provisions of the bill we can establish the yardstick without causing the Government to put the distributing system now in existence out of business, because, at all times the Government will have its thumb on the rate-making power, the Federal Power Commission. It is therefore important that whenever any provision is made for the construction of transmission lines by the Federal Government, these provisions of this bill should be maintained, for they are economically sound, good business principles and refute the charge of time made that this is a deliberate effort to destroy power facilities now serving the Tennessee Valley. [Applause.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, my interest in this bill so far as conversation on the floor of the House is concerned has been directed very largely to the repeated suggestions on the Democratic side of the aisle about this proposed yardstick that the Government is to construct at an expense of 1,000 million dollars. Surely you gentlemen on the other side of the aisle are not going to convey to the people of the country that the administration is ready to spend a billion dollars in order to ascertain what it costs to make fertilizer or to generate power? That to a large degree has been the basis for your support of this socialistic proposal. Your administration has very little confidence in you gentlemen on that side of the aisle when it promotes the presentation of a rule to hamstring every one of you and prevent you from offering amendments to the bill.

The rule provides that no amendment shall be in order. Why is that done? It is done because your President has no confidence in you and your tremendous voting majority. You might offer amendments to this bill that would perfect it and make it desirable in the eyes of the public, but that is not what your administration wants. Let us see what your administration requested last week. Your President requested Congress to—> create a Tennessee Valley authority, a corporation clothed with the power of Government but possessed of the flexibility and initiative of a private enterprise, whose duty should be the rehabilitation of the Muscle Shoals development, together with the conservation and development of the natural resources of the Tennessee River Drainage Basin.

When he requested that, few people had an idea that he was going to embark on an orgy of expenditure to the extent of a thousand million dollars. They little thought that he was intent upon promoting a gigantic governmental undertaking that would cost the Federal Treasury more than a billion of dollars and would in turn put the Federal Government in direct competition with two of its largest private commercial enterprises.

Let us see what the bill provides in section 27. It provides that money appropriated may be used for the—> general purpose of fostering the proper physical, economic, and social development of the people of said areas.

Think of it! A rule is brought into the House objecting to your amendment, and I am referring to you gentlemen over there who have the majority and who are responsible for this legislation, which rule will prevent your amendment of language like that which I have just quoted. It is so broad that the President could establish breweries down there if he wanted to, or hospitals, or schools, playgrounds, insane asylums, or military barracks. He could spend that money for almost any purpose under the sun. The language of the bill permits it, and you gentlemen are hamstrung and tied so that you cannot even offer a limiting amendment. Nothing like this has ever been presented to the House, I venture to say, in the history of this Government. This Muscle Shoals legislation is not new to Congress. It is new to some of you gentlemen on the other side, a hundred or more of you, who are trying to make yourselves believe that the President will not take advantage of the power granted him; but I agree with the very distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. RAGON], who said the other day, when the postal legislation was under consideration, that legislation is always brought into the House for the purpose of putting it into effect, and I agree with him.

So it is with this Roosevelt Muscle Shoals bill. It is brought in here for action. The administration is going to pay the South a debt that the Democratic Party has owed it for many, many years.

Mr. Speaker, when carried into effect, the Roosevelt Muscle Shoals bill will destroy the fertilizer industry of America, which now comprises a capital investment of some $400,000,000, with a manufacturing capacity of 12,000,000 tons of fertilizer per annum.

In the year 1932 the farmer tonnage of fertilizer requirement was 4,300,000 tons, and it is probable that the requirements this year may reach 5,500,000 tons, because of governmental stimulation, cash subsidies, farm-relief legislation, and other panaceas being formulated by the socialistic "brain trust" surrounding the President.

The Roosevelt "new deal" proposes to put the Government into the fertilizer business at a time when the private industries are running at 50 percent of their capacity and losing in actual money nearly a million dollars a month to their respective stockholders who are scattered throughout the United States.

Fertilizer industries are today selling their product to the farmer at much less than actual manufacturing costs.

The suggested sale of surplus electric power carried in the Roosevelt bill is mythical, because the several private power and light corporations now operating in that section already have a surplus of a billion kilowatt-hours, with no customers for it.

The bill puts the Government into the power and fertilizer business in competition with private enterprise at a time and place when this costly action is as unnecessary as would be the continuance of building war-time wood and concrete ships, the manufacture of shells and ammunition or the mining of our harbors against an unknown aggressor.

The political football of the Wilson, Harding, Coolidge, Hoover administrations is now scheduled to kick the balanced Budget into a cocked hat.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] has expired.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BRITTEN. Years ago it was sought as a power project for the development of the Tennessee River area. Then the war came along and it was changed into a war chemical manufacturing plant for the manufacture of nitrogen, and, forsooth, for fertilizer purposes. There is no need, there is no demand for this great military power plant today. There certainly is no demand for it for military purposes. It is no different from other costly military ventures of the Government. We spent for the Hog Island shipbuilding yards $70,000,000. Would anyone suggest in seriousness that we ought to carry on that tremendous enterprise and construct ships? Of course not. We spent $390,000,000, almost three times as much as was spent at Muscle Shoals, for the building of wooden and concrete ships during the war. Would anyone seriously suggest that we continue that activity? We spent $2,000,000,000 for commercial ships to carry our supplies to and from Europe. Would anyone suggest that we continue our shipbuilding activities, just because we were capable of doing so? We spent $23,000,000 in the erection of another enterprise down here in West Virginia, for the manufacture of armor plate. It was another one of your Democratic "yardsticks" to regulate the cost of armor. It was a fizzle and a complete loss to the Treasury.

The Muscle Shoals plant was built during the war for the manufacture of nitrogen for military explosives. Today that plant is obsolete and of no value to the national defense, which in an emergency would require less than 150,000 tons of nitrogen annually for military purposes. Private enterprise today could manufacture 550,000 tons of nitrogen per annum. An amount quite sufficient for war, industry, and agriculture. There is no need for this enterprise. It is not an emergency measure. We are not required to spend a thousand million dollars for a yardstick by which to measure the cost of fertilizer or the cost of power. We know what that is. As the gentleman said a moment ago, tomatoes may cost more to grow in Minnesota than in Florida. You gentlemen on the Democratic side of the aisle will rue the day you brought this bill into this House. It has been promoted by the so-called "socialistic brain trust" now surrounding your distinguished President. It is an unnecessary piece of legislation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] has again expired.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] such time as he may desire.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, for more than 100 years the Muscle Shoals question has been recognized by the United States Government as a Federal problem.

In the year of 1824 President Monroe submitted to the Congress a report of his Secretary of War, John C. Calhoun, recommending a survey of the Tennessee River in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals for the purpose of improving navigation and aiding commerce and military operations.

In almost every administration from President Monroe to that of President Wilson, some 90 years later, the Muscle Shoals problem has engaged the attention of the country.

In the year 1916 a provision was inserted in the National Defense Act, section 124, authorizing the President of the United States to make an investigation to determine the best, cheapest, and most available means of producing nitrates and other valuable products for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizer; looking to the building of dams, locks, and improvements to navigation, power houses, plants, and equipment for generation of electrical power.

This survey resulted in the Government's investment of more than $150,000,000 in Muscle Shoals as a war-time project.

Muscle Shoals was only one of many war-time enterprises but is the only one, so far as I can recall, that emerged from the World War with any appreciable peace-time value.

Twice since I have been a Member of this House, in the years of 1928 and 1930, both Houses of Congress have passed a Muscle Shoals bill by an overwhelming majority, similar to the bill now pending, and both times they were vetoed by the President.

In the Seventy-second Congress the House passed another Muscle Shoals bill, similar to this one, but it failed of passage in the Senate. I was a member of the subcommittee that wrote the last bill that passed this House, so am somewhat familiar with this legislation.

It has been amusing to hear some of the arguments that have been raised against the pending measure. For example, there are a few Members of this House who are insisting that they want nothing but the original Norris bill, whatever that may mean. Let me say here that I yield to no one in my respect for the great progressive Senator from Nebraska. His great heart beats in sympathy with the toiling masses. His zeal is unsurpassed in either House of Congress for the enactment of legislation to harness the Tennessee River in the interest of mankind. The fact is, however, that the so-called "Norris bill" that some of you gentlemen are so insistent upon passing without the changing of the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t", was, in part, written by a House subcommittee back in the Seventieth Congress. Senate Joint Resolution No. 49 by Senator Norris passed the Senate, but when it reached the House a subcommittee redrafted the Norris bill. The House passed the measure as redrafted and the conference between the two Houses adopted much of the redrafted bill, and it has since become known as "the Norris bill."

As a member of the Committee on Military Affairs that wrote the pending measure, I have no hesitancy in saying that, in my humble judgment, it is a much more complete and practical measure than the so-called "Norris bill."

For example, the Norris measure only has fertilizer in it as an experimental proposition, while the pending measure guarantees a reasonable production of cheap fertilizer for the farmers of the United States.

The Norris bill contains no plans providing for amortization, while this bill provides for complete amortization within a period of 50 years.

It has been whispered around the corridors of the Capitol that the President of the United States does not want the passage of this bill. I have never posed as a White House spokesman but will say that I have discussed Muscle Shoals with the President of the United States and I am fully convinced that in the pending measure have been written the fundamentals of this legislation desired by our great Chief Executive.

A few Members of this House, who are bitterly opposed to any kind of Muscle Shoals legislation, are ridiculing the whole project as an impractical dream, but may I remind you that when Columbus dreamed of a new world he was ridiculed by many of the high and mighty? When Robert Fulton conceived the idea of a steam engine he was scoffed at as an idle dreamer? When the Wright brothers made their first crude contraption, in an effort to build what they hoped to be a flying machine, their efforts were laughed at by the so-called "sane conservatives" as silly and impractical? No great outstanding achievement has been accomplished, in any age, by any people, without a vision.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt, who pledged to the people in the last campaign that he would harness the Tennessee River and put to use for the benefit of humanity the great God-given powers of that region, and who is religiously endeavoring to carry out that promise, as well as all other campaign promises, is also scoffed at as a dreamer. Because he seeks to unshackle that great giant at Muscle Shoals that will revolutionize the power problem and permit the humblest family to avail itself of electricity at a reasonable rate, he is being held up by the representatives of the power monopoly as an impractical dreamer. Because he has visions of securing fertilizer for the American farmers in the reach of the small home owner and tenant farmer, he is being scoffed at today by scores of lobbyists and representatives of the fertilizer trusts as an idle dreamer.

Another argument raised by enemies of this measure is that the machinery and equipment at Muscle Shoals is antiquated and of no value for practical use. Representatives of the Power and Fertilizer Trusts who have appeared from time to time before the House Military Affairs Committee have all stressed and stretched this argument to the breaking point.

Mr. Speaker, when I went with several members of the House Military Affairs Committee on an inspection tour of these plants a few months ago, at the time Mr. Roosevelt visited this region, I had fully expected to see very little but old, out-of-date machinery, good for little of anything but junk. But, to my amazement, our committee found the opposite to be true. The machinery has been well kept and shining like new money. A greater part of it can be put to practical use within a very short time.

So, in spite of the insidious propaganda that Government properties now at Muscle Shoals are only a junk heap, as has been insinuated time and again since this discussion began, a visit to Muscle Shoals will convince any fair-minded person that there is absolutely no foundation for any such argument.

Time does not permit a detailed discussion of the pending measure. Other members of the committee have already dealt more or less in detail in discussing the bill, and no doubt Chairman McSWAIN, who has spent much time and energy on this legislation for the past several years, will probably explain the features of this bill at some length when he speaks later.

I am not one of those who claim this is a perfect bill. The fact is, I did not support all of its provisions in the committee. However, any weaknesses in this measure can be ironed out in conference between the House and Senate later. Inasmuch as the people of Oklahoma, whom I have the honor to represent in part, are 800 to 1,000 miles distant from Muscle Shoals, they will not secure the benefit as will the people of the Tennessee Valley. So I cannot be charged with being selfish in my support of this measure. And yet, because the completion of Muscle Shoals holds out to the farmers of America cheap fertilizer and to all our citizens power at a more reasonable rate, I predict that the passage of this measure and the construction of Cold Creek and other dams as provided in the bill and construction and improvements at Muscle Shoals will mean a distinct blessing to the entire country, not only for this generation but for posterity. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX.]

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I wish to consider this bill as a fertilizer measure to help the farmers of this country. I would remind my friend on the minority side of the aisle, when he said this was a bill to pay back to the South a debt that the Democratic Party owed it, that this bill will help pay off the debt to the farmers of this Nation which the Republican Party owed it for 12 years and failed to pay. [Applause.]

We hear much from our friends across the aisle about the socialistic "brain trust" that is sponsoring the President's program. I would remind them that when one billion or two billion dollars was being doled out to the bankers and railroads, insurance companies, and mortgage-loan companies of this country, we heard no such statements emanating from them. I like the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN], but continually the gentleman seeks to tell the new Members on the Democratic side how they should vote and what the reaction will be back home should they vote this way or that way. I wish to say to the gentleman I am thinking when I vote for this bill of one and one quarter million people back in Ohio who voted for me. I am voting for those seven million people in Ohio who are held in the grip of and being strangled by the Power Trust of this country. I am voting for the one and a quarter million farmers in my State who are being robbed and plundered by the Fertilizer Trust of this country. I say to you that I voted against the so-called "Economy Act", and when I did that I voted against the National Economy League and the rich income-tax payers of this country, and today when I vote for this bill I am voting against the Power Trust, against the Fertilizer Trust, and voting for all the people of this great country of ours.

Mention has been made that the President is assuming dictatorial power. He is, my friends, and the country is with him, and whenever he uses those dictatorial powers for the benefit of all the people, as he has, and not for the benefit of the privileged few, I shall continue to vote with him on each and every one of those measures which he sponsors. [Applause.]

The enactment into law of this bill, H.R. 5081, marks a milestone in the progress of Government activities for the benefit of the American farmer. The many advantages of using commercial fertilizers in connection with the production of grain crops in this country are too well known to warrant enumeration or analysis at this time. For decades large and liberal applications of nitrogenous and phosphoric fertilizers have been used by farmers in the Middle West, in the South, and in the New England States. Quite liberal use has also been made of these plant foods in the Southwest, Far West, and Northwest in recent years for the intensive production of certain specialized crops. Two decades ago and even three decades ago the net returns to farmers for their various crops was such as to warrant the use of commercial fertilizers upon the stable grain crops, including wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, and to use much larger quantities upon such specialized crops as tobacco, cotton, potatoes, garden truck, and fruits.

For the past 2 years selling prices of farm commodities have stood at such ruinously low levels that the farmer who used fertilizers has not been able to break even but has actually lost money on this transaction. Because of this condition and because of his inability in many regions to obtain fertilizer on credit, the total amount used shows a marked decrease. It is an axiomatic fact that when prices are low production is greatest. In order to pay taxes and interest charges, farmers must work every last tillable acre, which means soil depletion year after year. Add to this the natural soil erosion that takes place each year together with the cutting down of leguminous nitrogen creating crops because of high-priced seed, and we must admit that even in a 5-year period a decided impoverishment of soil plant food has occurred.

With each succeeding year of farm depression, beginning in 1921, it has been increasingly difficult for farmers to use fertilizer. They carried on year after year without keeping accurate account of the cost of fertilizer, the excess yield produced thereby, and the gross selling price as compared with the net cost. Then a little later, with many private dealers handling fertilizers and the farm cooperative buying associations forging to the front, these commercial plant foods became the easiest thing in the world for the farmer to buy—and the most difficult to pay for in the end. With competition growing keener day by day, the farmer learned that his fertilizers would be delivered at his door; that he would be given ample time in which to pay for it upon giving his note bearing a seemingly reasonable rate of interest. The rub was that each succeeding year, with few exceptions, in this 12-year downward slide, selling prices of the farmer's grain crops, fruits, vegetables, and livestock showing a diminution each year. Fertilizer costs did not show a corresponding diminution, keen as the competition was. Hence, during the past several years farmers find they can buy fertilizer but cannot pay for it out of the meager receipts of their farm commodities; hence, the provisions of this bill that we are debating today offers an opportunity unequaled and unprecedented in all history for the farmers of a great nation to be furnished at the lowest possible cost the plant food so necessary and vital to the conservation of our soil, hence to the conservation of the greatest agricultural nation the sun ever shone upon.

The farmers of America look upon the Muscle Shoals project as a fertilizer project. They insist that all the power necessary shall be used in the making of fertilizer. They say that the surplus power should be used for the common good of the residents and industrialists living and operating in the adjoining territory, and that a marked reduction in price over present rates should be effected.

A word about the enormity of the plant itself would not be amiss at this moment.

There are three distinct Government operations at Muscle Shoals: United States nitrate plant no. 1; United States nitrate plant no. 2, with its steam plant and limestone quarry; and Wilson Dam, with its generating plant and navigation facilities and its cheap hydroelectric power, and Waco Quarry, with its almost unlimited amount of limestone, are essential to the successful operation of nitrate plant no. 2. The cost of construction was $69,000,000. Two thousand three hundred and six acres of land are covered. The plant has a production capacity of nitrogen, 500,000 tons; phosphoric acid, 1,000,000 tons. Normal mixed fertilizers, 12,000,000 tons; ammonium nitrate, 110,000 tons. Raw materials necessary to the process are limestone, coke, air, and water. Two of these—limestone and coke—are shipped to the plant by rail. Lime and coke are mixed together and fused in electric furnaces to form calcium carbide. Nitrogen is separated from the atmosphere by first cleansing the air, then compressing it, where the separation of the nitrogen gas is accomplished by the Claude process. Carbide and nitrogen are brought together in electrically heated ovens and fused into cyanamide, a crude fertilizer having a nitrogen content of over 20 percent. The cyanamide is ground to a fine powder and the acetylene gas removed by hydrators. At this point cyanamide is placed in large steel tanks with a solution of caustic soda. Live steam is then turned in, and the subsequent reaction produces ammonia gas, which in turn produces nitric acid and nitrates for fertilizer and explosives.

The production of fertilizer, however, is only one of several gigantic projects proposed. The bill provides:

For the common defense; to aid interstate commerce by navigation; to provide flood control; to promote the general welfare by creating the Tennessee Valley Authority; to operate the Muscle Shoals properties; and to encourage agricultural, industrial, and economic development.

Four distinct fields of usefulness are recognized: First, nitrate manufacture for national defense; second, fertilizer production; third, power development; fourth, navigation improvement.

The bill is opposed by two organized groups—namely, the Electric Power Trust and the Fertilizer Trusts. It would appear on the surface that the opposition of these two groups is wholly selfish, since they produce and sell power and fertilizer, respectively.

That this gigantic Government plant, instead of being allowed to disintegrate, as it has for the past 13 years, should be put to immediate use and work for the farmers and electric-power users of the country no fair-minded person seriously doubts. The United States is not self-sufficient either in peace or war in its nitrogen supply. The soils of our fields are depleted from erosion and crop production many times faster than they are being replenished. Nitrogen and phosphates can be produced cheaply at the Muscle Shoals plants. One great national use can be obtained by selling power in the form of fertilizer; another national use secured by selling the surplus power at reduced rates. Cost of fertilizer to farmers will be much less than now: First, because of low-priced power; second, because of water transportation; third, because of high concentrate material; fourth, because of distribution through cooperative organizations and other local associations. Admitting that fertilizer prices have dropped sharply, yet the disparity between selling prices of farm commodities and fertilizer cost prices is greater now than it was 10 years ago. More pounds of pork, more bushels of corn, more bushels of wheat are required today to buy a ton of fertilizer than was the case in 1923.

Farmers and farm organizations will be given first opportunity to use the new forms of fertilizers at a low cost; to lease the existing plants, if necessary, for the benefit of the farmer and agricultural conservation, except that there shall be no lease of power dams, power plants, and power-generating facilities. Fertilizers produced shall be sold to farmers or their authorized purchasing agents at cost, plus 4 percent. The plants must be maintained for the production of explosives in the event of war and nitrogenous explosives supplied to the Government at cost. No products shall be sold to foreign nations except to allies of the United States in case of war. Surplus electric power will be sold to States, counties, municipalities, corporations, partnerships, or individuals at low rates, with preference given to such municipalities or farmers or organizations of farmers or parties not organized for profit. One of the most valuable accomplishments of the plant will be the fixing of a standard rate for electric power all over the United States. This rate will be based upon actual cost of production, plus a reasonable profit. In case of war the Government takes possession of the entire plant immediately. Under the bill the President is given broad dictatorial powers which are vitally necessary to the successful administration of the act. The enactment into law will be a glorious victory for the consumers of electric power and a distinct defeat for the Power Trust. It will mean the freeing of the American farmer from the oppression of the Fertilizer Trust.

As we view American agriculture in the broadest manner possible, looking to the East with its many diversified crops, then turning to the West with its great Corn Belt, the Northwest where wheat is grown that the people may have bread, the Southwest and South with its cotton plantations, we cannot do otherwise than realize that the Muscle Shoals project, if operated to capacity or near capacity as a fertilizer project, can be made of personal and direct benefit to every farmer in this great Nation of ours.

I am supporting the bill 100 percent and am herewith submitting tables that will fully prove all of the contentions made for the bill by its proponents. (Tables furnished through the courtesy of the American Farm Bureau Federation.)

Principal ingredients used annually in manufacture of fertilizer in the United States

[Source: Fertilizer and Fixed Nitrogen Investigations, by Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, U.S. Department of Agriculture, p. 2]

	Tons
Phosphates	4,100,000
Nitrogenous	2,100,000
Potash	900,000
Filler and conditioner	800,000
Total	7,900,000

Fertilizer consumption by crops in the United States, 1930

[Source: Fertilizer and Fixed Nitrogen Investigations, Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, U.S. Department of Agriculture, Jan. 1, 1933]

	Percent
Percentage of total fertilizer consumption utilized for various crops:
Cotton	35
Corn	21
Vegetables and fruit	10
Wheat	9
Potatoes	9
Tobacco	7
Oats	4
Hay	2
Miscellaneous	3
Total	100

Production, imports, and consumption of nitrogen in United States

[Source: Fertilizer and Fixed Nitrogen Investigations, Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, U.S. Department of Agriculture, p. 2]

Item	1913	1926	1929	1930	1931
Production:	Tons	Tons	Tons	Tons	Tons
Byproduct	39,330	170,000	187,600	164,000	122,900
Air fixation [1]		26,000	84,000	140,000	60,000
Imports	128,235	255,327	236,161	166,508	151,550
Total	167,565	451,327	507,761	470,508	334,450
Exports		36,000	55,500	33,840	34,200
Apparent consumption	167,565	415,327	452,261	436,668	300,250
Percent of total from domestic production	23.5	47.0	60.5	69.6	60.9

[1] Estimate.

Production, imports, and consumption of potash in United States

[Source: Fertilizer and Fixed Nitrogen Investigations, Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, U.S. Department of Agriculture, p. 26]

Year	Production	Imports	Total
	Short tons	Short tons	Short tons
1913		270,720	270,720
1926	23,366	238,000	261,366
1929	61,590	325,000	386,590
1930	61,270	318,900	380,170
1931	63,880	194,000	257,880

Estimated amount of concentrated phosphate which could be manufactured from surplus power at Muscle Shoals

[From data supplied by Office of Chief of Engineers, U.S. Army]

Year	Amount of concentrated phosphoric acid (95 per cent) which could be manufactured with surplus power		Equivalent amount of 16 percent acid phosphate
	Amount during entire year	Amount during peak period	Amount during entire year	Amount during peak period
	Tons	Tons	Tons	Tons
1928	283,500	164,200	1,701,000	985,000
1929	275,700	179,500	1,654,000	1,077,000
1930	170,700	171,800	1,024,000	1,030,000
1931	174,000	158,400	1,044,000	950,000
1932	236,100	196,400	1,416,000	1,178,000

Amount of power going to waste annually at Wilson Dam, Muscle Shoals, 1928–32

[Source: From data supplied by Office of Chief of Engineers, U.S. Army, War Department]

	Total energy available with present Wilson Dam installation	Total energy delivered to transmission line	Amount of power not used
	Kilowatt-hours	Kilowatt-hours	Kilowatt-hours
1928	1,776,199,000	216,859,000	1,559,340,000
1929	1,682,232,000	165,821,000	1,516,411,000
1930	1,238,251,000	299,260,000	938,991,000
1931	1,291,044,000	333,975,000	957,069,000
1932	1,578,900,000	280,220,000	1,298,680,000

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. RAGON].

Mr. RAGON. I should like to know the program for this afternoon. Is it expected to have a roll call on this bill, or what is the plan?

Mr. McSWAIN. I think it is best, from what I have heard from both sides, that we conclude the debate and go down to the point where the previous question will be ordered. We will adopt the committee amendments, about which there is no controversy, as I understand, and get to the point where the previous question will be ordered, and have the roll call tomorrow morning.

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman proposes that we act on the committee amendments?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; we will adopt the committee amendments this afternoon and get down to the ordering of the previous question.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DUNCAN], a member of the committee.

Mr. DUNCAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, the gentleman from Illinois a moment ago said this seemed to be a contest between the "brain trust" and the Power Trust. I come from back in north Missouri, where the people are not directly concerned with the question of Muscle Shoals. There nature has endowed us with soil so fertile that it needs little artificial enrichment; we are too far away to enjoy the benefits of the power to be generated at this project; but it does seem to me, in view of the things that have taken place during the past 10 years in this country, we ought to take advantage of the opportunities we have to develop this great project. It is a well-known fact that some of the agricultural communities of this country, particularly those growing cotton, must have large quantities of fertilizer to keep their soil sufficiently fertile to grow their products. Every man in this House who has had any experience with rate making knows that there has grown up in this country, with the consent of the courts and the regulatory bodies, a plan or system of valuing public utilities for rate-making purposes that has brought them into the present disrepute in which they find themselves and has shouldered upon the people the burden of paying excessive rates for their products, of paying exorbitant sums for fictitious values written into their rate structures. I have nothing in common with those who are upholding the rights of the utilities, nor have I any sympathy with those who are suffering from an exaggerated case of powerphobia. The necessity for this project has been repeatedly questioned by those who are against it and tell us that there is already an overabundance of electrical energy being generated by privately owned companies of the Tennessee Valley.

In determining the need for a thing we must take into consideration the efficiency of the methods in use, the price of the commodity, and its availability to all who want or need it. If your automobile is so expensive in its consumption of gasoline that you can not afford to use it, it would be good business to acquire one that you could operate. If the authority can manufacture electricity and fertilizer and develop these two commodities for the farmers and citizens of the South at a reduced cost to them consistent with good business methods, it is a worthy project, aside from the elements of national defense, flood control, and other uses to which it may be put to.

We are told that by one act of this body we intend to curtail the production of the farmer and by another act we intend to increase that production. I say to you that one of the problems of the farmer today is to produce the thing that he is now producing with a minimum effort. If he can raise the same amount of products on 1 acre of land by the use of fertilizer and with the same effort which he now produces on 2 acres, the opportunity ought to be given to him. This is the only bill I have ever seen providing for a Government-controlled agency which safeguards that project by permitting it to operate in accordance with recognized business methods unhampered by political red tape. Under the Democratic leadership and plans now being formulated I feel confident that the farmers are going to be able to buy fertilizers and use electricity to minimize their labors. You are going to be able to develop business not only in the vicinity of this project but in your own communities.

It is provided in this act that the authority may sell the electrical energy generated to be distributed by the purchaser to consumers at a price to be agreed upon by the authority and the distributor, and if no satisfactory agreement can be reached by which this commodity can be sold to the consumer at a fair price, the authority itself can build transmission lines for its distribution. This is a proposition to furnish the people needed products at a price they can afford to pay for them. It is worthy of consideration for the purpose of creating an institution which may be used as an example throughout this land. Its cost is small compared to the benefits to be derived from it.

The Republicans in 1924 in their platform recognized the duty of the Government to conserve national water power, and used these words:

> The natural resources of the country belong to all the people and are a part of the estate belonging to generations yet unborn. The Government's policy should be to safeguard, develop, and utilize these possessions.

Today they are backing up on an old policy of their party, and speakers attack the measure because its employees are exempt from the Civil Service. That is natural. They have long been strong for Civil Service. When they are in power they create many jobs under it and have so manipulated it as to keep their boys and girls in office regardless of the political complexion of the administration. Employees of this authority will hold their jobs if they are efficient and if they are not they may be relieved just like the employees of any other business institution.

The most gratifying thing I have heard on the floor of the House coming from the Republican side is their apparent interest in the taxpayers' money. I say to you that it is high time they were thinking about it because, so long, they completely forgot the taxpayers, creating a deficit of hundreds of millions of dollars. Yet they advance the "saving" question as one of the reasons for defeating this measure, although it is the only project created under Government authority providing for a return to the Government whatever money is appropriated for its use.

Electrical energy has become one of the necessities of life and is used by all classes of people. It can be cheaply made and it ought to be available to every man and women at a price they can afford to pay for it.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALLGOOD].

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Speaker, this question has been before Congress for years and years and, as the gentleman from Illinois said a while ago, it has been a political football. With the Republicans in control of the White House and Congress since 1920 this question has been made a political football, but now with the Democrats in power we expect to make it a prosperity ball. I am happy to say that today we have a President in the White House who is playing ball with us. He has thrown the ball to Congress. Mr. McSWAIN, of South Carolina, Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, is now on first base. Mr. HILL of Alabama, is on second base; Mr. ALMON, of Alabama, is on third base. When this ball gets over to the other end of the Capitol Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska, will knock a home run. The bill is going to pass and there is going to be rejoicing throughout the length and breadth of this country. [Applause.] In February of this year President Roosevelt went to Muscle Shoals to inspect the properties there and I was fortunate in being invited to go with him on this trip. I will never forget the great throngs of people who gathered at Tuscumbia, Sheffield, Florence, Decatur, Birmingham, and Montgomery, Ala., to hear President-elect Roosevelt speak or to catch a glimpse of him. The long-continued depression had left its effects on the appearance of our people and, although thousands of them were poorly clad and have not had sufficient food, yet I could see a spirit of new hope and encouragement in their faces as we passed through the immense crowds. At each place when President Roosevelt said that he was going to put Muscle Shoals to work there was loud cheering and clapping of hands. Our people realized that when he puts Muscle Shoals to work this means that men will be put to work.

When Henry Ford made his offer for the development of Muscle Shoals properties it would have meant a great deal to Muscle Shoals and the immediate section around it. The development of the Muscle Shoals properties by President Roosevelt has an even more far-reaching effect. It means the operation of the nitrate plants for the development of nitrate in time of war and fertilizer in time of peace. It carries with it the idea of reforestation, the reclamation of lands, and embraces the building of Cove Creek Dam, which will double the primary power at Muscle Shoals, thereby virtually doubling the value of Wilson Dam and the nitrate plants. It involves the development of all the power possibilities of the Tennessee. Engineers have estimated that between four and five millions of horsepower can be developed in this area. This will mean cheaper power for several million of people in 7 or 8 Southeastern States. It also means the restoration of farm values in these States, which means the return of prosperity. It will bring new industries into these States, which will give employment to hundreds of thousands of people and create pay rolls. The people employed in these industries will in turn be able to buy the farmers' products.

There are those who criticize this measure because they say it places the Government in business, and I will answer this criticism by replying that the Government is already in business. Millions of dollars have been spent by the Government for carrying air mail, millions more have been loaned to the railroads, to the banks, and even the farmers to help them buy seed and equipment to make a crop. Therefore it can truly be said that the Government is interested and engaged in the airplane business, the banking industry, the railroad industry, and in agriculture.

Another criticism is raised to this bill by saying that it will destroy the properties of the power companies. I do not think that it will do this. The consumers of hydro-electric power and electricity have greatly decreased in the past 3 years, and if prosperity does not return to our section, it will continue to decrease. I think the development of Muscle Shoals will restore prosperity and enable our people to buy and use the power from the private power companies, whose rights have to a large extent been protected by the bill as amended, in regard to transmission lines. It may be that there will be some losses in stocks and dividends, but practically all stockholders throughout the Nation and world have suffered severe losses in the past 3 years.

I look upon the power in the rivers as I do the sunshine, air, and the water of the seas and oceans. It is a right that is inherent to our people and should be used for the welfare of all the people and not in the interest of a few.

The merchant, the school teacher, the preacher, the lawyer, the doctor, county, municipal, and Government workers have all had to take lower prices for their products, goods, and services during the past 3 years; and they have had to pay practically the same thing for their gas bills, their telephone bills, their electric bills, their railroad fares, interest on money, and for most manufactured products.

The Hydro-Electric Power Co. of Ontario sells power at 1½ cents per kilowatt-hour, while the people of Alabama are paying 4½ cents per kilowatt-hour for power. Eighty-five percent of the farmers of the Nation do not have electric power on their farms. No one can deny that if power was cheaper thousands of farmers throughout the Nation would be using it. The rural sections offer the greatest need for the development of hydroelectric power. The towns and cities are fairly well developed along this line. The production of cheap hydroelectricity will extend development into these rural sections. Business at this time is practically at a standstill, for the farmer is receiving less than cost-of-production for his cotton, corn, wheat, livestock, and other products. This means that the factories throughout the Nation are either shut down or running only part time. Either one of two things is going to happen: We are either going to have to receive a better price for our farm products, and labor will have to get better pay and more employment given, or our gas rates, electric rates, hydro-electric rates, freight rates, telephone rates, and most of our manufactured products and city, county, State, and National taxes must be cut in half. The passage of this bill will cheapen power rates. The passage of the farm-relief bill will increase the price of the farmers' products and at the same time cause inflation, which will cheapen money. I am, therefore, supporting these measures with the hope that they will aid in restoring prosperity to our Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, last week we considered a farm relief bill that had been sent to us by brain trust no. 1. That bill provided for restriction of production of agricultural commodities of which there is a surplus.

Today we are considering a bill that has been sent to us by brain trust no. 2. The purpose of this bill is to stimulate production.

Do you gentleman realize that if this legislation is carried through to fruition you are going to impose a burden upon the American people that will run into the hundreds of millions of dollars, not tens of millions as has been stated?

What right have you to assess the people of Minnesota in order to provide the people of Alabama and Tennessee with cheap power? [Applause.]

Do you wonder we have had but three Democratic administrations in 72 years? We always have such ill-advised extravagances as these when we have a Democratic administration.

We have already put over $120,000,000 into Muscle Shoals and now you want us to put in another two or three hundred million dollars. I want to ask you if it is honest to assess the people of the North to develop a project that is purely local. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DUNCAN] says his community will not benefit one iota from this legislation and yet he lives within 500 miles of Muscle Shoals.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Tell us about Boulder Dam. Did the gentleman vote for that?

Mr. KNUTSON. I voted against Boulder Dam.

Mr. ALLGOOD. But the Republican Party was in power when that legislation was passed.

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not care whether it was or not, it was dishonest, just as dishonest as this. Why should Uncle Sam assess all the people to do for localities the things they should do for themselves? Why do you not come in here and ask us to give you Muscle Shoals? We will gladly give it to you, lock, stock, and barrel. We will give you a quit-claim deed to it and turn over to you every dollar that we have already put into it. [Applause.] That would be the cheapest and best way out of a foolish, wasteful, and expensive venture.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill has some good features and I should like to support it, of course, in the hope that when it got over in the Senate the Norris bill would be substituted to carry out the program of the President for the operation of Muscle Shoals and the development of the Tennessee Valley. But the bill is not acceptable in its present form. Senator NORRIS is opposed to it, and I expect to offer a motion to recommit and substitute the Norris bill.

I live closer to Muscle Shoals than any other man in Congress, with the exception of two. This great project is capable of producing hydroelectric power that will exceed in amount the physical strength of all the slaves freed by the Civil War. This may give you some idea of its vast magnitude.

My idea is to use this power to experiment in the production of fertilizer, and to send the balance of it pulsing through this country to give the American people hydroelectric power at something like what it costs to produce it and to free this great project from the implacable grip of the Power Trust that has prevented the development and operation of Muscle Shoals for, lo, these many years.

Since my time is limited I want to point out one or two instances where I think this bill is faulty, if not vicious.

In the first place, it limits the President in his great program to develop the hydroelectric possibilities of the Tennessee Valley, in throwing about the building of future dams restrictions that will enable the Power Trust to step in with injunctions and other interferences and hamper the development of these projects in the years to come.

Again, this bill, instead of giving the Government the outright privilege and power to build power lines to deliver this hydroelectric power to the ultimate consumer at something like what it costs to produce it, will hamper, and greatly hamper, the Government in this particular by bringing into the matter the provision relative to purchasing or leasing hydroelectric-power lines from these companies on whose watered stock we are now paying exorbitant light and power rates. They have sold this watered stock to news papers throughout the country for propaganda purposes. They have sold it to lawyers, bankers, and business men who were formerly highly in favor of the Norris bill in order to develop a wave of propaganda against government operation of Muscle Shoals.

I introduced the Norris bill in the House and am offering it in my motion to recommit in the hope that we can get it substituted for the present measure.

Let me lay down now, once for all, my policy on the hydroelectric power of this country. I regard it as a natural and a national resource, just as much as the surface of the seas or the navigation of our rivers. I believe it should be used for the benefit of all the people.

If the Norris bill is enacted, I believe it will be the greatest step ever taken in this direction. It will be the beginning of a new national policy—the Roosevelt policy—that will give us hydroelectric power to turn the wheels of industry to transform our raw materials into the finished products, give us hydroelectric lights in every home, and will permit the installation of machinery to lift the burden of toil from every man and every woman, from the laborer in the factory to the housewife who now bends down over the washtub doing the most menial work, almost, known to man. Besides, the Norris-Rankin bill is in accordance with the President's views, and the President's views cannot be reconciled between these two bills. If he is for this bill, he can hardly be for the Norris bill. If he is for the Norris bill, as I understand he is, then the provisions of this measure must be unacceptable to him. I am sorry the Rules Committee gave this rule to shut off debate and deny the Members of Congress the right to offer amendments. [Applause.] Under this rule I could not offer the Norris bill as an amendment, but I am going to offer to substitute it on a motion to recommit. I hope you will all support that motion and help to substitute the Norris bill. Then the Senate will pass it and the administration will get behind it and help to give us this great piece of constructive, progressive legislation, which will be worth more to the American people than any other measure of its kind ever passed by the American Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GOSS].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, in my own time I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] if he can really inform the House as to whether the administration is backing the Norris bill or the so-called "Hill bill"?

Mr. RANKIN. My information is that the administration is backing the Norris bill. I do know that Senator NORRIS is opposed to the bill now before the House, and I understand Senator NORRIS and the President are in thorough accord.

Mr. GOSS. There is no doubt in the gentleman's mind about that and the gentleman introduced a companion bill to the Norris bill in the House?

Mr. RANKIN. I introduce the Norris bill "verbatim, spellatim, punctuatim." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. I do not know whether the gentleman from Mississippi has talked with the President or not, but I talked with him for 4 hours before we wrote one line of the bill, and his secretary telephoned me Saturday afternoon that he relied upon us to work it out for the best interests of the country. When the bill comes from the conference the gentleman will see who represents the views of the President.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN].

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, when I came to Congress in 1915 the lobby which is responsible for the Muscle Shoals project was working hard. They took advantage of the war situation, and, greatly to my surprise, one morning I found that the chief farm leader from my State was advocating Muscle Shoals development as an aid to the farmers in the United States. Up to that time it had been nothing but a power proposition.

The lobby became aware of the fact that they could not get that as purely a power promotion, so they sold the idea to the farmers to insure cheap nitrates for the manufacture of fertilizer. The farmers have been farmed on Muscle Shoals. [Laughter.]

I want to say to you Members who may not have been here at that time that this proposition has been a creation of the lobbyists, and I want to ask now the chairman of this committee whether or not he can assure me and other Members that this power project created with Uncle Sam's money and transmitted to the consumer at his expense is not going to be sold to Henry Ford and the Du Pont interests and the Canadian power interests?

They are the people who have been lobbying for the development of this power proposition, and I want to know definitely in regard to it. They are supposed to be shut out under this bill, but I want to know if they are shut out, because if they are not, if they are behind this and are getting now in this bill what they have so long been working for this legislation should be stopped.

Mr. McSWAIN. I want to say that the authority will be in the hands of three citizens appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. They will administer the duties provided in the bill. Nobody can say that the power will not be sold to Henry Ford or the Du Pont interests or anybody else.

Mr. McFADDEN. That is just it. The gentleman has been here long enough to know how members of these boards are appointed. The power interests of this country always get what they want. I want to know if they are going to get it in this bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. I know how they were created during the previous administration, but we are going to have a new deal now.

Mr. McFADDEN. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that it is a new deal. Up to this time it is not in evidence that there is a new deal. Now, these are vital things in connection with this legislation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I have served in Congress a little bit over 16 years, and during that time various measures have been brought before Congress for the purpose of dealing with this problem.

But I want to say to the House that never have I seen a measure brought in here that dealt with it on its merits. The first bill that was brought in suggested a lease to Henry Ford and had no provision in it which could be enforced as to anything required to be done by the lessee. From that time on various bills have been brought in, and all of them have been tied up with such restrictions that the property could not possibly be leased, or else they were on such a basis that it could not possibly be operated properly. What do we do when we reach a situation in industry or anything else when we have a surplus of factory space or a surplus of power? Do we go ahead and build more, or do we stop? This bill can result in an expenditure of $1,200,000,000. Is that why we cut our employees and the veterans $600,000,000? Is that why we started out on our economy program? Is that why we laid out a structure upon which to get a return to prosperity, only to smite it down and cut the legs from under it with some such bill as this?

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. RANSLEY. The gentleman from New York was a member of the Economy Committee, was he not?

Mr. TABER. Yes. I supported the President's policy, believing that he was in good faith in his desire to cut down the expenses of the Government, but frankly I am terribly disappointed here on the authority of the gentleman from Mississippi, as I understand it, this afternoon, that the President is in favor of the bill which has been introduced in the Senate by the Senator from Nebraska, which goes twice as far as this bill goes in that it authorizes the issuance of more bonds and more construction than this does, without further action by Congress. There is not the least bit of evidence anywhere from anybody that there is a need for more power or that there is a need for more fertilizer. On the contrary, there is evidence absolutely undisputed that we have a surplus of fertilizer at this time and a surplus of power in that territory. It is the height of folly to go ahead with a Government operation at such a time and in such a place. The thing to do is to stop foolish construction now and get to the point where we are not putting any more burdens upon our taxpayers. Why should we, contrary to all economic law, go ahead and create new facilities at a time when there is no need for them and no reason for them? Why should we not intelligently lease that property to somebody to develop power and sell the power and not go ahead with further construction of a power plant when there is no demand for it, and when, if we draw industry down there, we simply destroy industry somewhere else. I beseech the Members of the House to use common sense on this program and not go ahead with the issuance of a lot of bonds and a lot of expenditure for construction which is not needed and which will be an absolutely unbearable burden upon the taxpayer. And do we propose to pay for it with dollars—and what kind of dollars—gold or printed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS].

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, for the past 10 years there has been no legislation coming before this House in which I was more interested than I have been in the proper disposition of Muscle Shoals and in the development of the great natural resources of the Tennessee Valley. Many times have I appeared on the floor of this House in behalf of different measures of this character, and also before the Military Affairs Committee of the House and the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House. I now come feeling that we will during this Congress reach our goal, and that this will probably be the last time that we will have this for consideration, because I am sure before this Congress adjourns we shall have enacted into law proper legislation which will mean one of the greatest developments in this country. I want to congratulate you members of the Military Affairs Committee, and especially your chairman, Mr. McSWAIN, Mr. HILL of Alabama, and Mr. JAMES, of Michigan, who have been on this committee so long and who have been so vitally interested in this great question, and who have given so much time and study for its proper solution. To you should be given great credit, and the people should be very thankful for the great services that you have rendered to our section of the country.

I want to express to you my appreciation, and, I know, the appreciation of the House, of the most wonderful report that you have given accompanying this bill. You go back many years, giving the history of the different character of legislation that has been offered at various terms of Congress, the result of that offered legislation, and you cite the various planks in the different political parties which placed the Democratic as well as the Republican Party as pledged for the conservation and the development and for the use of all the people of the natural resources of the country, and that these natural resources were more likely conserved and utilized for the general welfare if held in the public hands.

The bill that is before us today for consideration, and which will be passed, is in my opinion one of the most far-reaching and wisest bills that has ever been offered for the solution of this Muscle Shoals proposition and for the development of the great natural resources of the Tennessee Valley. I say this regardless of the fact that there are some provisions in this bill to which I do not entirely agree, and there are other provisions that I would have placed in the bill if it had been my privilege to dictate the same. But I realize that all legislation involving so many great questions as this legislation does involve must be a matter of compromise. This bill provides, among other things, for the manufacture of fertilizer, which is so necessary for the farmers of the country; and if the Government is successful in manufacturing fertilizer, as provided in this bill, it will mean the saving of millions of dollars to the farmers of this country. Everyone knows their needs, and everyone knows that we can have no real prosperity in this country until we can restore the farmer to a prosperous basis.

It provides for immediate building of Cove Creek Dam and Dam No. 3, which are so necessary to the development of this section, and further gives the board, which is created under the provisions of this bill, called "the authority", the right to build other dams for the purpose of flood control or navigation, and also to build high dams, which is a combination of navigation and power dams, whenever there is a reasonable market demand for so much of the power as will yield a reasonable return on that part of the investment representing the cost of power production. Under this last provision it is very probable that the great power and navigation dam at Aurora will be built, which would give us navigation of 9 feet of water across the State of Tennessee to Pickwick Landing. Under the terms of this bill, reclamation and reforestation are included and the general development of this great section of our country. But the greatest feature of this bill is the use of the power and further development of the power at Muscle Shoals and Cove Creek Dam. The people of our section of the country are extremely fortunate that we are in a position for this great development, and we are in this position because of the fact that from 1922 to 1930, during different years, we spent as a whole something like $1,000,000 in a complete survey of the Tennessee River and its tributaries. This survey is the most complete that has been made in any section of our country. It includes the various dam sites and the possibility of such dam sites for electricity throughout this section. It includes a general survey of all of our natural resources, such as minerals and timber. It includes the losses that are occurring on account of the flood situation. It shows what constructive work is necessary to be done to give us navigation of 9 feet of water from Knoxville to the Ohio River. It shows the number of people that live in the different sections, also railroads and public highways. It shows that all these developments along the lines of electricity might be manufactured to the extent of some 4,000,000 horsepower, and the figured growth of our section of the country as to utilization of this power. I say that on account of our having procured appropriations from the Federal Government for many years we are able to lay this picture of the possibilities of our Government before Congress and before the President of the United States and ask for its development. The power at Muscle Shoals, insofar as its complete use, has been lying idle for many years. Only part of the power that is now produced at that great dam has been sold to the Alabama Power Co. at the rate of 2 mills per kilowatt, and every attempt of legislation for many years to put this dam to its full use, and thereby give the people of the South the benefit of cheap fertilizer and cheap power, has met with stubborn opposition which has been fatal to our legislation up to this time.

I have always advocated before the committee, or before this House, or wherever I might be, the building of Cove Creek Dam, because I felt that it was the key to the development of the great natural resources of the Tennessee Valley. I am delighted that this bill provides for the building of Cove Creek Dam and that it will be commenced at once. It is important, first, on account of navigation; secondly, on account of the increase of the horsepower and making many dams available and the decrease in the cost of horsepower; and, third, flood control; and I might add further, in the language of the Chief Executive, fourth, reclamation; and, fifth, reforestation. I shall discuss briefly these first three propositions.

The people of my section are greatly interested in the navigation of the Tennessee River. The proposed Cove Creek Dam is situated some 350 miles above Muscle Shoals in east Tennessee, some 150 miles above Chattanooga on the Clinch River. The building of Cove Creek Dam will amount to a storage of something like 3,000,000 acre-feet of water. The building of this reservoir alone will increase in navigation at various sections of the main stream 150 percent of its natural flow during low water. From Clinch River to Chattanooga the increase will be 1.5 feet; from Chattanooga to Hales Bar, 6 feet, as it now is; Hales Bar to Widows Bar, 1.6 feet; from Widows Bar to Guntersville, over 2 feet; and this increase is carried on down from Rivington to Paducah of 2 feet. This may seem a small amount, but considered in connection with the dams that will have to be built under the navigation project, to make the stream 9 feet of water, it is an immense saving in cost and makes our possibilities of navigation more certain. I might add right here that General Brown, Chief Engineer of the War Department, has already recommended the navigation of the Tennessee River to 9 feet of water from Knoxville to the Ohio River, and the estimated cost at $75,000,000. This provision has been endorsed by Congress, and with the dams that have been built and that are being built, we hope some day to see the project completed. So from this you can see the great benefit to be derived to navigation from the building of this dam. The engineer's report shows that the increase in horsepower of all dams below Cove Creek would be from 100 to 110 percent; and if I remember correctly, the Government will get the benefit of horsepower at Muscle Shoals of 124 percent, which will not only increase the horsepower of these various dams but will decrease the cost of horsepower which will make the dam more inviting and shall give the public the benefit of cheaper electricity, which would mean the rapid growth and the development of our section of the country. As an illustration of the decrease in the cost of horsepower, let me cite the figures of the Government engineer for two places below Cove Creek Dam to construction cost per horsepower without benefit of storage at Cove Creek: At Whites Creek, $1,464; with storage, $366; dam site of Chickamauga, just 4 miles above Chattanooga, Tenn., construction without storage, Chickamauga, $777; with storage, $262. This not only increases the horsepower and decreases the cost of the horsepower but makes other dam sites available along this river. Anyone who makes any study of this whatsoever can see the importance of Cove Creek Dam construction, and the Government will hereafter reap great revenue from the increase of horsepower on the various dam sites along this river and from the decrease in the cost of the same. Heretofore the Tennessee River project, from Muscle Shoals to Cove Creek, has been considered as one project, and the report of our numerous dam sites and the development of power to be had was based on the construction of Cove Creek Dam, and I might add that $180,000 has been spent on the survey and borings at Cove Creek.

I am glad that this bill considers all these projects from Muscle Shoals to Cove Creek as one project and one great development to be made by the Government. No private interest could or would make this great development, and these great natural resources should always be held and controlled by the Government of this country for the best interest of its people.

The third proposition in connection with the importance of building Cove Creek Dam is flood control, which affects all of the Tennessee Basin below Cove Creek and even into the Mississippi River. It is estimated that the damages caused by the December 1926 flood along this river was approximately $2,650,000, and engineers further state that the total damages caused by 500-year floods on main streams and navigable tributaries are approximately $14,350,000, but that the average annual damage from all floods is $1,780,000. This does not include indirect damages such as loss due to interrupted travel and business, insanitary conditions, and spread of disease due to overflow of towns, depreciation of land due to overflow which is difficult to assess. The estimated damages to Chattanooga, my home city, in 1926, were $600,000, so much so that the city of Chattanooga has figured on levees for its protection, which would mean an expenditure of millions of dollars. The engineer's report shows that the building of Cove Creek Dam will decrease the high-water mark in my city 15 percent. In other words, if a flood should reach the height of 40 feet under present conditions, with this dam built it would only reach the height of 34 feet, and it is this extra 6 feet that usually does the damage to our city. If the two dams above Chattanooga, on the Tennessee River, were built with 10 feet surcharge, there would be no floods in our city. I cite this to show the specific instance wherein this Cove Creek Dam would be of great benefit and save millions of dollars. I think you can see from this brief statement the great and vital interest that the people in our section have in securing the building of Cove Creek Dam for navigation purposes, for the development of our power dams, and for flood control. Consequently, I am happy over the fact that this bill provides for the building of Cove Creek Dam and for the immediate beginning of the construction of the same. It will mean much also in its construction at this time to the relief of thousands of those people who are unemployed.

This bill also provides for the building of transmission lines from Cove Creek to Muscle Shoals in case proper arrangements cannot be made with the power companies for the transmission of the power or if it does become necessary for them to condemn power lines.

I am very much surprised at the many letters I have received from my section wherein stockholders of the Tennessee Power Co. are very much disturbed over the building of these power lines, or the leasing of these power lines, with the fear that it will work detriment to their holdings. If the power companies of our section will cooperate with the Federal Government in the development of these great projects as they should, I predict that private property will not in any wise be injured, but their holdings will be improved; that thousands of people will come into our section on account of this great development; that new industries and new factories will spread throughout the Tennessee Valley, which will more than use the developments not only made by the Government but by the power companies themselves.

We are wonderfully blessed with our natural resources and with the great people who are interested in the development of our section of the country, and I am glad to say and to know that we have in the White House at this time a great President, who looks at matters of this character from a national viewpoint and who has approved of the development, the growth, and protection of the natural resources of the great Tennessee Valley, and it is the duty of the people of this great section to render him every cooperation within their power toward carrying out this program and reaping the benefits of this great development. The people of the South should be duly grateful, and, as the representative of the people from my section, I know that they are appreciative. I know that they are ready and anxious to render every aid in carrying out this great program, feeling that it will mean more to our section than any legislation that has ever occurred in the history of this Government. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a letter I received from the Secretary of State regarding the recent press censorship bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GOSS. I reserve the right to object. Is the gentleman going to get any more letters?

Mr. BLACK. Oh, the gentleman expects to get many more letters and to make many more inquiries.

Mr. GOSS. I mean from other departments.

Mr. BLACK. Only time can tell about that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter addressed to me by the Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, relative to censorship of the press:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, April 21, 1933.

Hon. LORING M. BLACK, JR.,
House of Representatives, Washington.

MY DEAR SIR: Answering your letter of the 12th instant, requesting information as to the genesis of H.R. 4220 to the extent that any person in the State Department was connected therewith, I would say in reply: When I assumed my present official position at the State Department, I soon learned that certain individual acts of interference with secret governmental code information in process of transmission between this and other countries, or like information in process of transmission between a government and its diplomatic mission in the United States, and the threat to make the results public imperatively called for immediate action making such publication unlawful.

I thereupon telephoned a ranking member of the appropriate committee of the House of Representatives, calling attention to this state of facts and suggesting appropriate legislation to make unauthorized publication of the particular kind of code information just described unlawful. I think I suggested to one of the attorneys in the State Department that he might well have a similar telephone conversation with a member or members of the appropriate committee of the House of Representatives, which he later informed me he had immediately proceeded to do. Some days later I was informed that a number of officials in two or three branches of the public service collaborated in the preparation of the measure against which you complain, and also that certain of its provisions were being objected to upon the ground that they infringed upon the freedom of the press.

Such effects as to the press, of course, were not remotely contemplated by myself in telephoning, nor, I am sure, were they contemplated by those responsible for the final draft of the bill in question. At any rate, I at once urged that any provisions that could possibly be construed as to the least extent affecting the freedom of the press be stricken out of the bill. There is not the slightest relationship between the protection of code information as aforesaid and the utmost freedom of the press. And, besides, my individual view is that the American public should suffer incalculable injuries in other respects before the freedom of the press should be injuriously affected to any material extent whatever. I think I have a consistent public record of 40 years in support of this doctrine.

If it is desired to ascertain in detail the genesis of the measure referred to, it would, of course, be necessary to confer with the different persons in the various branches of the Government who participated to a more or less extent in its drafting. There should be no difficulty about locating each of such persons and securing a statement based upon first-hand knowledge.

Very truly,

CORDELL HULL.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I am for this bill because I see in it much relief for the farmer, the laborer, and the little business man. I am somewhat startled here today in listening to the remarks of those on the opposite side of the aisle relative to the Government's spending $150,000,000 on the Muscle Shoals project. I do not see why they should get so excited. I did not hear of any excitement or read about any in the newspapers along about 1924, when that side of the House made it possible to give back some $4,000,000,000 in refunds and rebates to certain individuals and interests. I did not hear of any excitement on that side of the House when the Ship of State, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, dropped off something like $80,000,000 or $90,000,000 in front of Mr. Dawes' bank in Chicago.

Up in Pennsylvania we saw the big interests come in, some 60 years ago, and cut down our forests and leave our hills barren. Some 40 or 50 years ago we saw similar interests enter our State and bore holes in the ground, taking away our coal and oil and gas, leaving the State almost bankrupt. Now we find the same type of organization taking over our utilities such as water and power facilities.

I am not opposed to corporations or big interests as such. They are necessary in our industrial activities. However, since the set-up necessary to run corporations and big business must always be made up of men—just human beings—it is necessary to have such organizations operate within certain specific limitations.

It seems to me that the banking interests and other big industrial interests are assuming unsolicited recognition when they come in here at this time to give us advice on the Muscle Shoals proposition. Most of them proved beyond a shadow of a doubt that they themselves cannot run efficiently and effectively the institutions that they set up. In other words, from 1920 to 1930 the banking interests and other big interests of the country had at their command all the money, all the equipment, and all the facilities in the Nation necessary to build a social and economic fabric that would function for generations to come. But what happened? Most of them failed! They failed to manage their own business successfully, and as a result their institutions went to wreck and ruin.

Now, ladies and gentlemen, when the people are asking the Congress of the United States to take over Muscle Shoals under the provisions of this bill and operate it in the interests of the farmer, the laborer, and the little business man, they step in and say, "Hold, Macduff!"

As I said a moment ago, I am in sympathy with big interests—especially the railroads—but until they themselves can govern themselves and operate for the common good of all humanity, I question their right to interfere with such humanitarian legislation as this bill proposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from New Jersey begins, will he yield to me?

Mr. EATON. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. Apropos of the previous speaker's remarks, the gentleman must remember when the Government sold the Old Hickory plant at Nashville, Tenn., which cost $90,000,000, for three and a half million dollars. I rose to tell the House that today the pay roll of that plant amounts to three and a half millions per year and that they employ 3,500 people and pay taxes of about $75,000 a year. That is the way we disposed of that plant, and this might be disposed of in the same way to equal advantage.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, there is one ray of hope in this situation, and that is that in the dispute to which we have just listened as to which bill the President is for we may not have to vote for the Norris bill. If we have to swallow this legislation at all, I am strong for the McSwain-Hill bill as against the other, because I have never seen a Muscle Shoals bill bearing that other name which was not like the human heart, "deceitful above all things and desperately wicked."

My objections to this bill have been presented before. We have thrashed this out and got all the facts ad nauseam. We are tired. It would take a thousand volts to awaken much interest here today. There is nobody here and nobody seems to care; but I want the record straight as far as I am concerned, and as far as the party to which I belong is concerned.

In the first place, this bill is sectional legislation. The Muscle Shoals project was not built with money from those five States nor from the Tennessee Valley alone. It was built with money from New Jersey, California, Minnesota, and every State in the Union. It belongs to us all. Now, it is proposed to tax all of us in the interests of this immediate neighborhood and for the advantage of those immediate people.

The sting of this bill is in its tail, and I should like to unfold that tail to you in just a word:

SEC. 28. The President shall, from time to time, as the work provided for in this act progresses, recommend to Congress such legislation as he deems proper to carry out the general purposes stated in said section and for the especial purpose of bringing about in said Tennessee drainage basin and adjoining territory in conformity with said general purposes (1) the maximum amount of flood control.

That is according to the Constitution.

(2) The maximum development of said Tennessee River and its tributaries for navigation purposes.

That is good under the Constitution.

(3) The maximum generation of electric power consistent with flood control and navigation; (4) the proper use of marginal lands; (5) the proper method of reforestation of all lands in said drainage basin suitable for reforestation; (6) the most practical method of improving agricultural conditions in the valleys of said drainage basin; and (7) the economic and social well-being of the people living in said river basin and all adjacent territory.

SEC. 29. That all appropriations necessary to carry out the provisions of this act are hereby authorized.

This grandiose program will involve at least a billion dollars of the taxpayers' money, used for the profit of a small section of our country, and constitutes sectional and class legislation of the most harmful character.

I congratulate the gentlemen who come from that district over their success, not from the point of view of the Nation, but from the point of view of their electorate. When you go home, your electors will say to you, "Blessed art thou, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast brought home the bacon. Enter thou into a second term, and during your second term we hope you will be able to bring home a little gravy to go along with the bacon."

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON. I cannot stop now, because I want to get this thing before you.

Mr. McFARLANE. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if he was in the employ of the General Electric Co. as one of their welfare workers?

Mr. EATON. Oh, I resent that contemptible kind of attempt to hold a man up here and pry into his personal business. Nobody would do it unless he were saturated with that miserable, abominable personal-attack stuff which has been the Democratic policy and practice for the past 3 years, and especially during the recent campaign.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman answer the question of Mr. McFARLANE?

Mr. EATON. Why, yes. What size shoe does the gentleman wear?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. No. 9, and I am proud of it. It is a plain answer. I do not try to evade any question. What size do you wear?

Mr. EATON. No. 10, and I am proud of it. If the gentleman's head was as big as his feet he would amount to something.

Now, that the gentleman seems to think there is something wrong with my morals and my personal relationships, it may lift the discussion into a purer air if I present a statement from Mr. William Randolph Hearst. He is the king maker of the Democratic Party. He very nearly made our distinguished and honored Speaker President of the United States, and would have done so if he had not found another man he thought was better. Mr. Hearst has an article in his Washington paper this morning entitled "A Supine Congress." This is what he thinks about you Democrats that he has helped to put here. Mr. Hearst says:

To the EDITOR OF THE WASHINGTON HERALD:

I think we should have a series of editorials insisting that Congress resign and allow the people to elect a Congress which has the capacity and the disposition to perform its functions under the Constitution.

The people admire Mr. Roosevelt very much, but they admire him as a President, not as a dictator.

Congress is going contrary to the registered vote of the people, and contrary to the spirit of the Constitution, and contrary to the purposes of the founders of this republican form of Government when it shirks its own duties, abandons its functions, and turns its powers over to the President.

Mr. Roosevelt is a good President, and he might not abuse these powers; but the wisdom of the founders contemplated the possibility of a bad President, who would misuse powers which were too largely entrusted to him.

They created a Government of three coequal branches: The executive branch, the legislative branch, and the judicial branch.

They defined the powers of each, and they took pains to see that one branch should not encroach upon the powers of another.

There is nothing in the character of the present Congress to lead anyone to suppose that they have more wisdom than the founders of this Government.

In fact, the abandonment of the powers of Congress, who are the most direct representatives of the people, is not based on any worthy motive.

It is due in the main to cowardice as well as incompetence. If there is anything to be done which obviously ought to be done in the interests of the whole country, but which nevertheless might jeoparidize the seat of some Congressman, these Congressmen can almost certainly be found regarding the situation from the point of view of their own interests and not from the point of view of the Nation's interests.

Consequently these Congressmen decline to do the rightful thing, and prefer instead to turn the powers of Congress over to the President, with the purpose of letting him do it and take the consequences.

A Congress of such cowardly and incompetent character is unworthy to represent the people of the United States.

It is willing, in order to save itself some onerous obligations, to try to make a dictator out of the Executive, to upset the balance of the coequal branches of government which the fathers of the Republic provided for in the Constitution of the Nation, and to establish evil precedents which may return to plague us, and possibly to destroy the democratic character of our Government, if at some future time a less worthy and less unselfish Executive should occupy the Presidential chair.

We have, in fact, the singular spectacle and the disturbing situation of a Democratic Congress which does not believe in democracy, and which furthermore does not apparently believe in the fundamental principles of republican government on which this Nation is founded.

It is idle to hope that this Congress will resign; but an amendment to the Constitution should be offered which would enable the voters to recall Congressmen who are incapable of performing properly and constitutionally the duties of their office.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

That is no partisan Republican talk. That is the sincere milk of the word of public opinion, delivered in person for consideration of the American people by the unmitigated and spotlessly pure guide and governor of the Democratic Party, William Randolph Hearst.

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON. I yield.

Mr. BECK. I want to say, although I hold no brief for the Democratic side, it is well known that long before Mr. Hearst wrote this, every Democratic Member at night is haunted by the ghost of Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. EATON. Well, I did not know what haunted them. I am glad it is so respectable a ghost.

While I am on this painful subject, I might as well complete the picture by adding a statement from a brilliant and penetrating critic, Mr. Arthur Krock, which appeared yesterday in that greatest of all Democratic organs, the New York Times. Mr. Krock says:

A poetic statistician has estimated that, after 49½ days in office, Franklin D. Roosevelt possesses, is seeking, and has been offered more absolute power than the sum of arbitrary authority exercised at various times in history by Generals Washington, Lee, Grant, and Sherman, Presidents Jackson, Lincoln, and Wilson and all the Emperors of the Ming dynasty. What power has been and will be granted is all technically within the framework of the Constitution. If that document has not been put on the shelf, as Alfred E. Smith recommended, it has been republished on Indian rubber to meet these unusual tests of its flexibility.

These two statements from such widely divergent sources within the Democratic ranks take on a new significance when considered in connection with the principles embodied in this Muscle Shoals bill. I have full sympathy for the devoted group of gentlemen representing the regions in and about the Tennessee Valley in their long-sustained effort to secure from the Federal Government what they believe will be of advantage to the people they represent in their home communities; but the American people as a whole are entitled to have this question lifted up out of its local relationships and considered as a symbol of a great fundamental national policy adopted by the Democratic Party now in control of our Government.

The end of the civilizing process is the freedom of man. The long struggle of the masses of men to achieve liberty has now reached its climax in what we call an economic age. It is no longer an idle dream to hope that the blighting curse of economic poverty can be lifted from the masses of men. Science has placed the scepter of dominion in the hands of man over the forces and resources of nature so that every normal human need of a material kind can easily be supplied for every human being, provided we can discover a workable method for achieving this result.

In this new age I have believed for years that organized industry is the chief instrument of modern civilization. By organized industry I mean all the activities of man in connection with the production and distribution of wealth, either as commodities or services, I have for many years been working in the great industries of this country, representing the employees. My objective has been to make American industry a real clinic in civilization. To this end I have worked to raise the wages of labor, to reduce the hours of toil, to improve working conditions, to create conditions in which the masses of workers can secure not only an American standard of living but a surplus enabling them to become part owners in American industry. In other words, my objective has been to cure the recognized evils of the capitalistic system by making more capitalists.

Up to the beginning of this depression this program was making tremendous strides in America. Now, all has been swept into the abyss of unemployment, bankruptcy, and economic and social uncertainty.

But notwithstanding the enormous difficulties apparently still beyond the power of man to solve, I am firm in the faith that the American idea of making its privately owned and operated industries the chief organ of civilization is the best idea yet conceived by man for this purpose. For this reason I am compelled to oppose in every way within my power every attempt to substitute for this American principle the Russian idea of making the Government everything and the individual nothing. Because this Muscle Shoals proposal is to this extent un-American and Russian, I shall vote against it.

A few moments ago a gentleman asked me if I was a representative of the employees of the General Electric Co. The inference implied in his question was that there was something reprehensible in holding such an office. I am proud to say that for many years I have represented the employees of the General Electric Co. and of other industrial organizations. And I am happy further to state that the General Electric Co., beyond any other institution within my knowledge, has put into practice the principles I have just outlined. In spite of the terrible conditions of unemployment affecting every industry in the land the employees of the General Electric Co. at this moment own nearly 40 millions of 8-percent bonds which they have purchased out of the savings from their daily wage. The employees of the General Electric Co. are carrying $149,000,000 of insurance paid for partly out of the earnings of the company and the savings of the wage earners. During the past 9 years, under the company's policy, employees of the General Electric Co. have acquired 2,723 homes, representing a present value of over $20,000,000. During 1932 company pensions and life-retirement payments of $2,237,000 were made to retired employees, and they now hold in their pension trust assets of over $21,000,000. And this, gentlemen, is the kind of thing that legislation like the present Muscle Shoals bill proposes to put out of business and substitute therefor a government bureaucracy controlled by the lifeless letter of an act of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK] 2 minutes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of speaking upon this question, but after hearing the opponents of the bill deliberately filling the RECORD with the private power companies' propaganda I felt impelled to state a few undisputed facts that our publicly owned and operated utility of the Northwest has proven beyond a question of a doubt. Before going into those figures I want to quote from yesterday's New York Times, page 12, entitled "Utilities to Resist Political Critics", wherein they carefully set forth that they had nothing whatsoever to do with the collapse of the Insull empire and the small bankruptcies, stating that—

> Due to the importance and prestige of the Insulls it was not possible to organize rigid opposition to such practices until last year.

Inferentially propagandizing the public into the belief that every privately owned utility company is as sweet, fragrant, and pure as the lily from yon valley, except for the little speckle created by the Insull affair. The article goes on to say—

> In substance, the utility leaders are not alarmed over any prospects facing them from the standpoint of earnings, rates, regulation, or any other factor, excepting Government competition.

This last statement is a very significant one, for by it they recognize that regulation is of little effect inasmuch as they can regulate the regulators. Let me give you a concrete example of why they really fear publicly owned competition:

In the city of Seattle we have one of the greatest publicly owned light and power plants in the United States. Before the city plant was started in 1902 consumers were paying 20 cents per kilowatt-hour for current. When it became evident that the city was actually going to build a municipal plant the private company reduced its rates to 12 cents per kilowatt-hour. In 1905 the city of Seattle began taking contracts under rates for residence service as follows: 8½ cents for the first 20 kilowatt-hours; 7½ cents for the second 20 kilowatt-hours; 6½ cents for the third 20 kilowatt-hours; 4½ cents for all over 60 kilowatt-hours per month.

Some weeks later the private power company reduced its rates to 10 cents for the first 20 kilowatt-hours, 9 cents for the second 20 kilowatt-hours, 8 cents for the third 20 kilowatt-hours, and 5 cents for all over 60 kilowatt-hours per month.

On July 1, 1911, our municipal plant reduced its rates to 7 cents for the first 60 kilowatt-hours and 4 cents for all over 60 kilowatt-hours, and this reduction was met by the private power company in November of the same year.

On July 1, 1912, the city again reduced the rate to 6 cents for the first 60 kilowatt-hours and 4 cents for all over 60 kilowatt-hours, and reduced the minimum monthly bill, which had been $1, to 50 cents. The private power company met this reduction 1 month later.

On April 1, 1915, the city established the rate of 5½ cents for the first 45 kilowatt-hours and 2 cents for all over 45 kilowatt-hours, which rate the private power company met soon thereafter.

Effective since June 1, 1923, the present residence rates are 5½ cents for the first 40 kilowatt-hours, 2 cents for the next 200 kilowatt-hours, and 1 cent for all over 240 kilowatt-hours, and in conformity with the wishes of the people of the city of Seattle our municipal plant gave very marked reductions to industrial plants building their factories in our city, which was subsequently met by the private power company. Today the average domestic rate for the Seattle municipal plant is 2.83 cents per kilowatt-hour, which is 48.21 percent of the Nation's average of the domestic current used in the United States, which is 5.87 cents per kilowatt used in 1930 according to the Electrical World (Jan. 3, 1932). If the domestic electric light and power consumers of the city of Seattle paid the average domestic rate effective throughout the Nation for the power which they use, they would pay $10,525,000 more than they now pay. It is indisputable that this amount is an absolute saving to the Seattle citizens on account of their City Light plant of a sum equal to their total city taxes. To preclude any question about the good faith of the private power company, allow me to state that the light and power rates outside of the city limits of the city of Seattle are 50 percent higher than the rates within the city limits, and this for the reason that City Light has been precluded until recently from selling beyond its municipal boundaries.

In the city of Tacoma, which is located 30 miles from the city of Seatle, they own their own light and power utilities and have no private power company within the city with which to compete, thus avoiding duplications of distributing systems and other incidentals. Because of this publicly owned monopoly Tacoma is able to sell its electricity to its consumers for approximately 33⅓ percent less than that of Seattle. Here are the city of Tacoma's residence rates for lighting, cooking, and heating: 4½ cents for the first 20 kilowatt-hours, 1 cent for the next 800 kilowatt-hours, one half of 1 cent for all over 820 kilowatt-hours.

I think that the foregoing figures speak for themselves and do not require any further comment.

It has been stated that the private power companies in Alabama and in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals have a vast surplus of power which they are unable to dispose of. The answer to this is that their rates are so high that the people are unable to buy the power which they produce. Reliable figures show that the average domestic consumer in that territory uses on an average of 50 kilowatt-hours per month, whereas in the city of Seattle the average is 116 kilowatt-hours per month, and in the city of Tacoma, with its lower rate, the average consumer uses 122 kilowatt-hours per month. I only bring these figures in to show the fallacy of the arguments against this measure.

It is rather amusing to hear the onslaught of the opposition on the so-called "socialistic brain trust" of President Roosevelt, who sponsored this plan, for one is immediately impelled to ask who constituted the "brain trust" of the Hoover administration that created the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Yesterday's Washington Herald carried a small article about a poor man in Brooklyn, N.Y., who requested a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the sum of $100—

> So that he and his truck could go to work again. He agreed to repay the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in monthly installments, which made his offer self-liquidating, and he pointed out that the $100 loan would put at least one man—himself—to work, thereby relieving the unemployment situation. And it would give an impetus to trade and commerce, for he would have to buy gasoline and supplies. But the request was much too unusual, and therefore will be ignored.

The reason that this was unusual was because all the loans made by this corporation heretofore have been made to banks, railroads, and insurance companies, which loans were made without a tremor. It is my humble belief that if the policy of this corporation would honor such $100 requests and ignore the million-dollar requests all would be better today—at least, it could not be as bad as it is now. For the sake of argument, assume that these $100 loans were made to workingmen, the $3,000,000,000 fund at this institution's disposal could have created employment for 30,000,000 people, and if the loans were made in the sum of $300 to each person they would have created employment for at least 10,000,000 people. Let us see what has actually happened. At the time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was launched there were approximately 9,000,000 people out of employment.

They have now made loans in the sum of approximately $2,000,000,000 "to create employment" and today we have 14,000,000 unemployed. This is a perfect example of the manner in which the capitalistic communism of the Hoover regime works. Why even Russia would not stand for such a thing, and yet the opponents of the Muscle Shoals bill almost to a man voted for that measure.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I shall be glad to.

Mr. McGUGIN. I did not vote for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Is Mr. Roosevelt using it?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Then the gentleman must have been absent when the measure came up, because he usually votes for every reactionary measure.

Mr. McGUGIN. Is Mr. Roosevelt still operating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation? Is he still taking advantage of that loan?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. We will try to fix that very soon. Anyone will recognize that you cannot make an abrupt change and it is always easier to keep a horse from falling into a well than pulling him out after he has fallen in.

I am not in full accord with the provisions of the bill before the House, and were it not for the very strict gag rule under which it was introduced I would offer amendments to this measure which would conform more closely to Senator NORRIS' plan for Muscle Shoals, but in view of the parliamentary situation I shall vote for the measure in the hopes of expediting matters and getting it over to the Senate where I hope it will be made a more perfect bill. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEIDEMAN] such time as he desires.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, we have heard this bill opposed and attacked on the ground of sectionalism. I am from a district which cannot be helped at all by this bill. I am also interested in removing the tentacles of the Power Trust from the natural resources of the country; and knowing this to be a step in that direction, I shall vote for it.

For over 100 years there has been a movement to secure the natural resources of Muscle Shoals for the benefit of the Nation. I firmly believe that all natural resources of this country should be protected and developed for the people at large and kept under their immediate control. The Power Trust of this country has too long held the great mass of the people in subjugation.

I am not so interested in what becomes of the Alabama Power Co. or any other power company, but I am interested in preserving for the Government those resources that naturally belong to it. We have been under the control and domination of the Power Trust, which, in turn, is controlled by the international bankers, for too long a time. Now is the time to remove those shackles of control from our Government so that the people will benefit from the operation of Muscle Shoals and other natural resources, rather than a few coupon clippers of Wall Street.

I want to compliment at this time the valiant fight made by the gray-haired Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON], who have been unrelenting in their determination to secure the passage of this bill.

In addition to the war-time value of this project, providing for the manufacture of nitrogen, another great benefit will be production of fertilizer at a cheap rate to be used by the farmers throughout the country.

In 1928 a bill concerning Muscle Shoals was passed by Congress and it received a pocket veto at the White House. In 1930 a similar bill received the veto of President Hoover, and it is with extreme gratitude that I am sure our Democratic Congress and Democratic President will now give to the country the control of part of its natural resources they have so long fought for.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. KNUTE HILL] 2 minutes.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Mr. Speaker, they say that Muscle Shoals is a dream. What a magnificent dream it is! Thank God for dreamers! Had we not had dreamers we would have had neither music nor art, invention or discovery, development nor progress, no civilization at all.

The dreamer Columbus made possible the New World. The dreamers, the Wright brothers, made possible the conquest of the air.

At the beginning of the last century there sat in the White House a dreamer, Thomas Jefferson. He was also a practical statesman. He had a dream about the Louisiana Territory. He purchased it, and we have carved out of this territory the splendid States between the Mississippi Valley and the Rocky Mountains, a domain worth thousands of times more than the purchase price. He had another dream and saw the possibilities of the Oregon country. He sent Lewis and Clark to explore this region, and as a result we own the great Northwest, from which I have the honor to come. Even so great a statesman as Webster was blind to the possibilities of this region, designating it as the "American desert" and declaring that representation in the Congress from across the mountains would be an impossibility.

In 1867 another dreamer, Secretary of State William H. Seward, purchased Alaska. He was ridiculed far and wide, and this region was called "Seward's ice box." It has already paid for itself tenfold. You Members of Congress do not know what is stored in this "ice box" in the shape of coal and other minerals, valuable timber and fisheries, agricultural lands and limitless power resources. Some day the empire of Alaska will be understood and its wonderful possibilities become a reality.

We have another dreamer and practical statesman in the White House today, Franklin D. Roosevelt. He has a dream contemplating the development of the stupendous water-power resources of our country for the benefit of all of its citizens. We are living in the electrical age and its blessings should be distributed equitably among all of the people, as they are all common inheritors of this great resource provided us by a bountiful nature.

His plan is fourfold. He is going to complete the Muscle Shoals project to serve the great Southeast. Then on to Boulder Dam to serve the great Southwest and parenthetically I want to emphasize that it is Boulder Dam. I refuse to attach to this great project the name of one who has fought Government ownership and operation for a decade or more. Thirdly, the Government will develop the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes waterway to serve the great Northeast. Lastly, will come the the great Columbia River in which, according to reclamation and Army engineers, reposes the greatest potential water power of all of the great valleys of the United States. I am proud that I come from that valley, and I am proud that I come from a State which contains one sixth of the potential water power of the whole United States within its borders.

We are vitally interested in the President's plan of developing all this water power, also for the purpose of flood control, irrigation, and navigation.

The statement has been made here that there is an overproduction. This has not been the case nor is it the case today. It is a matter of underconsumption. There will never be too much food until all the starving are fed. There will never be too much wool and cotton until all are comfortably clothed. There will never be too much fertilizers until all the worn-out farms are restored to normal fertility. There will never be too much power until every cottage in every hamlet and on every hillside has electric power and electric lights. The trouble has been and is that the purchasing power of the farmers and laborers has been destroyed. Restore this as the President proposes to do and bring down the prices of fertilizers and power to a cost-plus basis and all the proposed power and fertilizers will be consumed.

We know full well the sinister activities of the Power Trust in our State. They are on a par with Insull of Illinois. They spread propaganda against public ownership in our schools from the grammar grades up. They bribed college professors at $25,000 per year—in addition to their salaries—to spread their poison in universities all over the country. They subsidized the public press, especially the country newspapers, throughout the United States to carry their syndicated articles. This has been exposed by the Federal Trade Commission. Another trick of the industry has been to have their valuation for rate-making purposes about 10 times the valuation for taxing purposes.

The great purpose of this Muscle Shoals development is to establish a yardstick for the cost of production which will serve throughout the United States. Of course, it will be competition, and that is what we need. In Seattle and Tacoma municipal ownership has brought the prices down from 20 cents per kilowatt, when municipal ownership started, to about 2 cents per kilowatt. The private companies can sell at that price in those cities and still make a profit. But over in the Yakima Valley, where they have no competition, they have charged us from 8 cents to 12 cents per kilowatt. They have reduced their prices now, because the people enacted by initiative a power bill permitting the organization of power districts throughout the State, and the legislature enacted a law permitting Seattle and Tacoma to sell outside of the city limits. J. D. Ross, of Seattle, told me a week ago that Seattle could and would consider the proposition to sell in the Yakima Valley. Regulation has never brought down rates. Competition will. You are all familiar with the rates in Ontario, Canada, and those in New York across the Niagara. Power is developed from the same river. In Ontario, under public ownership, it costs about 2 cents per kilowatt, and in New York, under private ownership, it costs about 7 cents per kilowatt. Naturally the residents of Ontario use many times more electricity than those in New York. The voters of the State of Washington knew Governor Roosevelt's record on power in the State of New York. They knew his stand on the question from his speech at Portland. This explains the tremendous vote he received in that State last November. We rejoice that we have a dreamer and a practical statesman again at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue who not only knows what the people want but has the courage to make his dreams come true.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LEE.]

Mr. LEE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I was considerably amazed at the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON]. I do not know why he would not answer the question of the gentleman who asked him whether he was in the employ of the Power Trust. I do know, however, that the Power Trust has employed every crook in this country, including ministers of the gospel; and, besides, I know they have gone into the colleges and public schools of our country and put their own poison propaganda in them, had our own textbooks taken out, textbooks which gave both sides of the subject and let the student draw his own conclusions. [Applause.]

Now, to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON], who talks about sectionalism, may I say, you Yankees over in New Jersey and Massachusetts have post-office buildings worth $200,000. Down South we have cities with five times the population of your cities renting little buildings for $10 a month for post-office purposes. For 12 years the South has suffered from your party's having everything its own way. You have drained out everything we had. But today your numbers are few and you will be mighty lucky if you can maintain your numbers in the next election. That is what is going to happen to you. [Applause.]

You come from districts that are solidly Republican, and you think you have to vote for the big interests of this country; but, I thank God, every decent progressive in this country has left you, and even HAROLD McGUGIN only votes with you occasionally, and one of your own Members told me they would trade him off for a gingersnap [laughter], but I would not give him for the whole darned caboodle of you. Ordinarily, he has more intelligence and more integrity than most of you who sit over there. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SHOEMAKER].

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Speaker, I am very much interested in this bill. I am very much interested in preserving what little we have left of our various natural resources, and Muscle Shoals is one of them.

We have heard much said here this afternoon about what this bill will do to private industry and especially to the Power Trust. I simply call your attention to this fact. For about 3 years we have been investigating the Power Trust, and we find that this trust has practically destroyed government in the United States of America. They have bought up our halls of legislation and corrupted our judges throughout the country until they have robbed the people blind. They have taken from us everything.

We have right in my State, in the city of St. Paul, a dam built by the United States Government known as the "Ford Dam." For 49 years Ford has leased this power to the Northern States Power Co. for the small and insignificant sum of 2 mills per kilowatt. The power is being sold to the people of the State of Minnesota in some places as high as 17 cents per kilowatt—and this dam was built by the people's money.

If Congress wants to do something real it should protect our natural resources. We must quit turning over these natural resources to these money grabbers and to the Power Trust to be used forever as a means of extortion of generations yet to come.

We must also wake up to this fact: We have this water, the last of our natural resources—these rivers, God-given, running down hill, ready and willing always to turn out energy and electric power to give the people modern equipment in their homes—and we must protect these resources.

I hope this bill will receive the support not only of the House but of the Senate, so that we can once and for all dispose of this question and take the Power Trust out of the politics of the United States of America and make this a government of and by and for the people with respect to our natural resources. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POLK] such time as he may desire.

Mr. POLK. Mr. Speaker, this measure providing for the use of the Muscle Shoals properties for flood control and to encourage agricultural, industrial, and economic development in the Tennessee Valley should be speedily passed. Since the cutting down of our forests, one of the greatest menaces to the happiness and prosperity of those who live along our great rivers are the constantly recurring floods. Every year in some part and often in many parts of the United States floods cause tremendous property damage, much suffering, and some loss of life.

Heretofore the efforts of the Government along the lines of flood control have largely been centered on the lower Mississippi River. For years we have poured millions upon millions of dollars into the fund for the purpose of controlling the Mississippi River floods. Most of this money has been spent in endeavoring to confine the bounds of the Mississippi River from St. Louis to the Gulf. It has evidently not been realized by those planning flood-control work that the surest way to prevent a flood in the Mississippi River is to prevent floods in the tributaries of this great river. They have apparently given no thought to the proposition that if floods are prevented in the Ohio, the Tennessee, the Missouri, the Arkansas, and the other large tributaries of the Mississippi River that the flood problem on that river will be solved.

As provided in this measure we are now approaching this problem from the proper angle, namely, that of controlling the rapidity of run-off from the headwaters of the tributary rivers. This method of building dams and reforesting areas which are suitable for reforestation is the most practical and best flood-control method that has been suggested.

I wish to assure my colleagues from the Tennessee Valley that we who live in that other great river valley to the north of you, the Ohio Valley, are much interested in this problem you have under consideration here today. We are faced with the same kind of flood problems as you are. During the past century at rather regular intervals the Ohio River has rushed through its course with floods which have caused great property damage, untold suffering, and much loss of life.

I do not believe anyone who lives away from a region which is menaced by floods can realize just what a flood means. They are unable to realize the feeling of one who helplessly watches the water gradually but swiftly rising at his doorstep with the knowledge that in a few hours it will be several feet deep in his home. They do not realize the tremendous force of such a torrent of waters which may carry away bridges and undermine roads and building foundations. They do not realize the amount of dirt and refuse which remains after the flood water has receded. Floors may be covered with an inch or more of sediment which must be quickly removed to avoid greater damage. Streets of towns and cities are littered with dirt.

We in the Ohio Valley are vitally interested in this problem. We hope that the next step in flood control will be the building of dams at proper places in the tributaries of the Ohio River, the building of retaining walls along the water fronts of our towns and cities, and the reforestation of marginal lands, thereby slowing down to some extent the rate at which rainfall runs off the land.

Surely there never has been a better time to do this flood-control work than now with millions of unemployed men and building costs at a lower level than usual.

I hope that our friends from the South and West and other parts of the country will join with those of us from the Ohio Valley States in the support of measures looking toward flood control on the Ohio and its tributaries. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, it seems strange that one who has been working on this measure as long as I have, and as long as the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] has, should have to explain to anybody under the sun that our views are uninfluenced and unaffected by any power under heaven, such as the Power Trust or the Fertilizer Trust, or any "brain trust" from anywhere.

Of course, it is a source of deep regret to me that my good personal friend, Mr. JAMES, for some reasons that he will doubtless explain, cannot go all the way on this measure, but I will not permit that to prevent me from repeating what I have often said as to this project—it is immaterial where it is located—as a project for national defense, for the development of a great national resource of power, and for the improvement of a great interstate highway for navigation and for the control of the flood waters of the Mississippi and of the Ohio and of the Tennessee Rivers; and this man FRANK JAMES has rendered service that I am proud to testify to, which has preserved to this Nation this Muscle Shoals project through all these years.

Why should a man apologize to anybody under the sun for having honest convictions about how business projects ought to be carried on? Why, I have introduced at this session of Congress two bills on Muscle Shoals. On the 9th of March I introduced the first bill that proposed to call the corporation that should be created the "Tennessee Valley Authority." I set up in that bill my individual views about how this project should be developed.

Then, after we had conferred with the President, I introduced another bill, which was H.R. 4559, identical with the bill introduced by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON]. These bills represented in principle, along with Senator NORRIS' bill, not identical as to words, the views of the President of the United States.

It is not improper for me to say that when my friend, Mr. NORRIS, and I conferred with the President he said to us, "You gentlemen draw the bills that you think represent our collective views that we have been expressing here"; and it was never understood or contemplated that the bill that would be introduced by myself or Mr. HILL and Mr. ALMON on this end of the Capitol would be identical in every particular respect with the bill to be introduced by Senator NORRIS.

Now some gentlemen come here and say that because this bill, which is the result of the work of 25 patriotic citizens, has not got the label of a certain distinguished gentleman at the other end of the Capitol they regretfully say they cannot support it with a whole heart, but must vote for it under what they describe as a "gag" rule.

This bill as worked out in committee, which received valuable suggestions from some able men who signed the minority report, is, in my judgment, the best bill ever brought here on Muscle Shoals or the Tennessee Valley.

Why do I say it? Because the whole project in this bill is on a business basis. It says that after the Cove Creek Dam and Dam No. 3 shall have been built—and here let me say parenthetically that everybody admits that the Cove Creek Dam not only ought to be built but it ought to be built by the United States Government in the aid of navigation and flood control. Even the gentlemen who appeared before the committee representing the interests of the power companies themselves said that when there should be a demand for power the Cove Creek Dam ought to be built and ought to be built by the Government, as a great governmental project, because private interests would never be able to build that and because private interests ought not to control it.

And when the 2 dams are built the Cove Creek Dam will double the primary power of every dam on the Tennessee River, and there are 11 or 12 of them. So when the other power projects are to be built, the President of the United States, on the advice of the Engineer Corps, will say how much of the dam is to be allocated to flood control, and how much to navigation, and the remainder represents power. I say that in building these dams and selling the power to be produced by them, would not business men dealing with their own affairs go about it in a businesslike way? I am Scotchman enough to believe that when gentlemen are doing business for the Government they ought to do it in a businesslike way.

Then as to the transmission lines. What is wrong with the provision in this bill that before the Government shall contract for the erection of transmission lines, at a cost of perhaps eight or twelve thousand dollars per mile, it shall say to the power companies owning parallel lines, "Now, Mr. Power Company, it is not the design that this investment shall be duplicated; if you will let us have your power line, for which we are willing to pay rent, or if you will sell us the power line at a fair price, we will take it off your hands." That is all that part of the bill means. Is not that business? Would the United States Government build one canal right alongside of an existing canal, or would it build one railroad alongside of an existing railroad or establish a ship route right alongside of an existing ship route? No. This bill putting the power into the hands of three men, who constitute the board of directors of the authority, is so reasonable that it will appeal to the commonsense of the Congress, and to all the country, and will finally and ultimately justify me in saying now, after some familiarity with this subject for more than 10 years intimately associated with it, that it is the best bill that has ever been presented to Congress on this subject.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. WEARIN. There is no provision in this bill, is there, to bring additional agricultural lands under cultivation?

Mr. McSWAIN. There is no provision in this bill that will authorize the taking of marginal lands out of agricultural use, except by additional legislation. The President could recommend it without the authority contained in section 28 of the bill. The President, by virtual suggestion, is authorized after studying the subject to recommend additional legislation on all those subjects. He can do it without that, but that is merely a provision put in there just like a signboard on the road, which does not say that you have to travel a certain way, but says in effect: "If you want to go to Pittsburgh, you ought to take this road." [Applause.]

I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, many men who have spoken from the floor of the House on this legislation now before us, have said that if this bill would be enacted into law, it would signify we were becoming socialistic. In other words, everything we undertake to do that is progressive is called, by some, either socialism or communism. What difference does it make whether it is Socialism, Communism, Protestantism, Catholicism, Judaism, Confucianism, Mohammedanism, Buddhism, Brahmanism, or any other kind of "ism", as long as the masses will be the ones who will derive the benefit?

Mr. Speaker, I come from a district where there are many utility companies, and may I say, without any hesitation, these companies are not paying taxes in proportion to their valuation. As I stated in a previous address, if the utility companies could be compelled to pay a just tax, as the small business man and home owner is compelled to pay, we would always be able to balance our Budget. In fact, we would have a surplus which could be used to provide adequate pensions for the aged, widows, the blind, and all others who are physically incapacitated. There would be no necessity for such a thing as poorhouses, or unfortunates being compelled to beg on the highways for a livelihood.

The natural resources of the earth were not created for a privileged few. They belong to the people of the earth. Therefore, the people as a class should own them. There are many States and towns in the United States that own, control, and operate electric power and water systems, and it has been proved, under municipal ownership, the citizens of these communities have much lower rates than those who reside in cities and towns where the electric power and water are owned by private corporations.

We do not hear any person criticizing the Government because it has a postal system, or because we have a public-school system; we do not hear criticism because the States and counties own the roads and bridges. Why, then, take exception to the Government's going into the electric-power business? Let us be progressive and a little more humane. In fact, it is my opinion this world could be turned into a paradise if we men who are in power would legislate in behalf of the masses instead of the privileged few.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, first I desire to publicly acknowledge the courteous and fair treatment accorded the minority members of the Committee on Military Affairs by its distinguished chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN]. [Applause.]

I shall vote against this resolution, and I ask your respectful attention while I detail some of the reasons for arriving at that conclusion. For more than a century and a quarter the people of the Tennessee Valley have sought the development of the power sites of the river and of the natural resources of the valley. Organizations were formed and glittering proposals were made to capital, but capital could not be interested. In 1906 the movement took concrete form in the organization of the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Power Co. for the purpose of the development of the power site on the river, known as "Mussel Shoals", though now termed Muscle Shoals; and renewed efforts were made to induce capital to invest, but capital makes no investment except the project present a reasonable chance for profit. That corporation continued its efforts until 1913, when the lobby mentioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] came into action. The engineers of the War Department were approached, and navigation upon the Tennessee was discussed, and flood control; but nothing was accomplished until 1916, and then only under the urge and stress of the World War. The National Defense Act was passed on the 3d of June of that year.

Nitrogen is an essential ingredient of explosives, and our source of supply theretofore was Germany and Chile. Further supplies from the former were barred by the war, and war-time hazards of ocean transportation rendered importations from the latter impractical.

A process for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen had been perfected, and it required power. The Government, to secure an independent source of nitrogen, determined to construct such a plant and sought a hydroelectric power site, which of war-time necessity must needs be situate remote from the coast to avoid possible attack by an airplane of an enemy. Neither the power sites on the river nor the natural resources of its valley had warranted their development by private capital, but the additional factor of remoteness rendered the Muscle Shoals power site admirable for the purely military purposes of the Government.

The reports of the hydraulic engineers up to that time were to the effect that the Tennessee River is what is termed a very "flashy" stream, because the water flow varied from 7,000 second-feet in certain seasons of the year to 400,000 and 500,000 second-feet in other seasons of the year. It is that fact that makes necessary the building of Cove Creek Dam; principally for storage purposes.

I beg your indulgence while I read section 124 of the National Defense Act. This section is the pole star that should guide us in arriving at a solution of this question. It is national defense that I want to keep before you at all times.

The President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to make, or cause to be made, such investigation as in his judgment is necessary to determine the best, cheapest, and most available means for the production of nitrates and other products for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products by water power or any other power as in his judgment is the best and cheapest to use; and is also hereby authorized and empowered to designate for the exclusive use of the United States, if in his judgment such means is best and cheapest, such site or sites upon any navigable or nonnavigable river or rivers or upon the public lands as in his opinion will be necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act; and is further authorized to construct, maintain, and operate, at or on any site or sites so designated, dams, locks, improvements to navigation, power houses, and other plants and equipment or other means than water power as in his judgment is the best and cheapest, necessary or convenient for the generation of electrical or other power and for the production of nitrates or other products needed for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products.

I shall omit the next paragraph and read the succeeding:

The products of such plants shall be used by the President for military and naval purposes to the extent that he may deem necessary, and any surplus which he shall determine is not required shall be sold and disposed of by him under such regulations as he may prescribe.

That is, that the products of this plant, constructed for national-defense purposes, shall be used in time of war for war purposes, and the products in time of peace shall be "sold and disposed of", using the very words of the act. The products of Muscle Shoals are, first, power, and, second, nitrates; and those are the things that are to be "sold and disposed of." The manufacture of fertilizers was a later consideration, but the National Defense Act provided that those two products should be "sold and disposed of."

Under authority of that act the United States constructed the Wilson Dam and power plant at Muscle Shoals at a cost of $47,000,000, at a time when a responsible contracting firm offered to construct it for a price of $25,000,000. The greatest argument against the Government in business at Muscle Shoals is the experience already had there.

It not only built the Wilson Dam at an expense of $47,000,000 but because this was a very "flashy" river, it had to build a steam plant in order to supplement the hydro power at low-water time. Twelve million dollars were spent in the construction of the steam plant. The Government then constructed nitrate plant no. 1 at a cost of $13,000,000. It sought to make nitrogen by the Haber process, which we thought we had in some way taken from Germany, but one step was missing, and that plant was a failure and its entire cost a loss.

We next constructed nitrate plant no. 2 at an expense of $55,000,000. Now, I come to a very controversial point, namely, whether nitrate plant no. 2 is obsolete and antiquated, as claimed by some, or is an up-to-date nitrate-producing plant. The bill itself bears evidence that it is obsolete, because it speaks of modernizing the plant. In another place it admits its obsolescence when it states that in the manufacture of fertilizer the capital investment or the charge against capital as regards nitrate plant no. 2, shall be not $55,000,000 nor the half of it nor the quarter of it, but shall be considered to be not to exceed $6,000,000. It may be any insignificant sum if it is desired to reduce the cost of fertilizer in order to shorten the mythical "yardstick."

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COCHRAN of Pennsylvania. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman remembers, of course, that not the entire property constituting nitrate plant no. 2 would be employed in the production of nitrogen for fertilizer purposes; the entire plant would not be used for the production of nitrogenous plant food, but that in the process of making fertilizer you cut out at a certain point. You do not use that part of the plant used for nitric acid nor for the making of ammonium nitrate, and that the break-down for that part of the plant which would be used in the making of fertilizer would be shown at a cost of $18,000,000 and that 33⅓-percent salvage of the original war-time investment would be a pretty fair figure. Is that not so?

Mr. COCHRAN of Pennsylvania. In answer, I would say, respectfully, that no 33⅓ percent capital charge is provided, in the bill, because the wording is "not to exceed $6,000,000." It may be a mere nominal sum, and I venture the opinion that it will be a mere nominal sum if it becomes necessary to reduce the cost of fertilizer in order to shorten the mythical yardstick.

I ask your indulgence again while I read from the hearings excerpts from the testimony of Judson C. Dickerman, who stated he is a public-utility investigator, an engineer-investigator for the Federal Trade Commission.

Asked by the chairman to detail his study and experience, he replied:

Originally I am a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in chemical engineering, in which I gave a great deal of consideration to power engineering. Since then I have had manufacturing experience in chemical plants; I have had charge of a utility; I have been the principal engineer in charge and supervision of all the utilities, except railroads, for the State of Virginia; have been connected with the Wisconsin Railroad Commission in the utility investigations; was assistant director of the giant power survey in Pennsylvania and a staff member of the public-service commission there; and I have been for 4 years traveling over the country investigating the physical properties and the operating conditions of the power plants in this country.

Dr. Dickerman stated his familiarity with nitrate plant no. 2 and that that plant was antiquated; yet this is the plant this bill would seek to modernize by spending the money of the taxpayers, at a time when they are already overburdened, in order to make fertilizer. The existing fertilizer plants in the United States have a present production capacity three times present consumption.

There is great controversy here as to the most economical method of developing electrical energy, whether by the hydro method or by the steam method.

I make the statement after considerable study and mature thought that the cost of electric energy in a given locality cannot be used as a yardstick to determine what should be the cost in another locality. The factors entering into such cost are never identical. Nature has favored some localities over others. If a power site can be found upon a river with an ample, steady flow of water in all seasons, at a point where the dam can be constructed at low cost and large storage can be had at low cost and near a large industrial market, the price at which such power can be sold will be far below that at a site where one or more of these factors are lacking. Likewise, if it is sought to develop electric energy by a steam plant, and the plant can be located near a large supply of low-priced coal and near a steady industrial market, the price to the consumer will be far below that of power from a plant less favorably located. There will thus be a wide difference between the cost of electric energy generated at Muscle Shoals and the cost of electric energy generated at any point, we will say in the State of Nebraska, where there are few, if any, power sites and where freight rates increase the cost of coal. Thus the cost at Muscle Shoals cannot be used as a yardstick to determine what should be the cost in Nebraska.

Further testimony of Dr. Dickerman upon this subject, when his attention was directed to it by the chairman and he was asked to make a comparison of costs between these two sources of energy, is as follows:

I am continually making those comparisons in reports which I have been making for the last 4 years. I have had occasion to find out what both the installation and operating costs of various hydro and steam electric power plants have been, so that I have gathered a considerable knowledge of such matters.

Now, when it comes to comparison of hydro as against steam production, it appears to me that there are at least three groups or factors which must be considered as regards any particular place in which you wish to develop power. One very obvious one is the probable cost of coal over a period of years. At the present time we are all aware that coal is being sold at the mines at a cost which represents practically no return on investments; a dollar a ton or less is a prevailing price. How long that will last we do not know. It is bound to last for a while, but it does not seem conceivable that that can remain as the fundamental price for coal over a period of years.

The cost of coal includes, at the point of use, the railroad or freight charges to deliver it. There are power plants in this country which, in the last few years, have been charging coal into their plants at $2 a ton. Those are located in the coal-mining States. The companies which are operating in such sections as New England and New York State are having to charge in from $4 to $5. In the interior of New England they have to charge in practically $6 a ton for their coal. So the coal price, regardless of what it is at the mine, will vary according to the transportation charges to different parts of the country.

Another factor is, What sort of service do you expect to supply? If you are going to supply a community or a group of communities that are commercial, residential, and only moderate in their industrial development—a few factories employing 50 or a hundred people—you will find that what we call the load factor—that is, the percentage of the total time that the equipment will be operated at full capacity—is apt to be only between 30 and 40 percent. If you are going into a highly industrialized community, where there are large factories that are likely to have continuous operations throughout the year, you may get your load factor built up to around 50 percent. If you can operate a lot of electrochemical or electrometallurgical industries, such as are clustered around Niagara Falls, you may get a load factor of approximately 80 percent.

I have wondered whether the residents of Nebraska honestly expect electric energy at the price at which it can be produced at Muscle Shoals.

Comparisons have been drawn between the cost of electric energy in the State of Washington and its cost elsewhere. Nature has been bountiful in her gifts to the State of Washington, for there, it is stated, are found 20 percent of the power sites of the United States, an unlimited source of power at the lowest possible production cost. So I repeat that no "yardstick" is possible to be made at Muscle Shoals which will honestly measure the cost of electric energy at any considerable distance therefrom.

At Muscle Shoals I saw a deserted city of perhaps a hundred modern, well-constructed homes, many of them of brick, with fine improved streets. This city is unoccupied. These buildings are unoccupied because there is no demand for the electric energy that can be produced there. That cheap energy has not succeeded in attracting any industries; and I foresee if this great construction program goes forward, as it doubtless will, to produce additional surpluses of electric energy for which there is no demand, that the ghosts will play around those plants as they are nightly playing around that deserted city.

Saturday it was asserted by one of the persons favoring this bill that the Government is selling power at Muscle Shoals at 2 mills a kilowatt. This statement, like many others with reference to the cost of electric energy in different localities of the country, is startling in the absence of an explanation. The six Southern States are served by six utility corporations, and the common stock of these operating utilities is held by the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation. These operating utilities today sell only two thirds of the power they produce. Representatives of the War Department besought them to buy Muscle Shoals power. These utilities had their hydro plants and their steam plants. They wanted to cooperate. They did not need the power. So the engineers of the War Department and those of these utilities got together. The utilities agreed to take annually a minimum of $560,000 worth of energy at 2 mills a kilowatt-hour; but this price was based upon the savings the utilities could achieve by shutting down steam plants—that is, the saving in wages and coal. The capital charges continued against these steam plants, and the net result was that these utilities made no more money than they would had they generated a like amount of power in their steam plants, while the United States receives $560,000 or more annually.

I have listened to glittering generalities here and invectives against electric utilities as a class. I do not know whether there is a foundation for these charges, because only conclusions are stated, not facts upon which we might judge the soundness of the conclusions. It ought not to be necessary for a Member of this House to preface any remarks he has to make with reference to utilities with the statement that he is not financially interested in them. I hold no brief for any utility. I am a lawyer. I fight them when they do wrong; but I do want to direct your attention to the utilities in the six Southern States.

The uncontradicted testimony before the committee is that every issue of stock or bonds for capital purposes has first been approved and authorized by the utility commissions of the respective States, and that after this authorization has been secured every dollar received from the sale of stock or bonds has been expended under the direction of these utility commissions.

I am speaking rather in behalf of the owners of the $500,000,000 of invested capital in these utilities. The uncontradicted evidence is that there is not a cent of water, that there has not been a cent of write-up in order to boost rates. It may be that inequalities exist in matters of rates, but if they do the fault lies with the rate-making bodies. I may state that insofar as my knowledge goes there is not a single stockholder of any of these utilities within my congressional district.

The further evidence is that if the Government goes into the business of either building or acquiring transmission lines within transmission distance of Muscle Shoals, this entire investment will be lost. This is the fear of the people who have invested their money. I desire to read at this point a letter received a few days ago:

TALLADEGA COLLEGE,
UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION,
Talladega, Ala., April 19, 1933.

MR. THOMAS COCHRAN,
Congressman from Pennsylvania, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. COCHRAN: I am a holder of preferred stock in the Alabama Power Co. I know of many others like myself who have put their small savings in this stock. For this reason I object to the Federal Government building transmission lines for the distribution of electric current, as it would cause a hardship on all these people. I come from Grove City, Pa., but my work calls me here.

Yours sincerely,

E. C. MEYERS.

The letter indicates that Mr. Myers is the controller of Talladega College.

It is not an idle statement that the acquisition by the governmental agency of the existing transmission lines, or its construction of competing lines, would destroy the entire investments of the people of the six Southern States and elsewhere, in the bonds and preferred stocks of the operating utilities.

It grieved me to hear one of the supporters of this resolution say that the governmental agency should have legislative authority to construct transmission lines, so that it would be armed with a club which would compel the utilities to sell at the agent's arbitrary price. In other words, it is sought to have the Government enact the role of a highwayman and bludgeon its citizens out of their property.

An electric utility is composed essentially of three units, namely: First, the generating or power unit; second, the transmission lines or transportation unit; and, thirdly, the sales unit or municipal distribution plant. If the governmental agency takes the transmission lines at its arbitrary price, or constructs competing lines, it follows as night the day that the generating unit and distribution units are valueless. Under this scheme the governmental agency proposes to generate electric current at Muscle Shoals and 11 other plants authorized to be constructed on the river, to take over existing transmission lines at its price or construct others, and seize without any compensation whatever the entire markets that have been built up by the existing utilities, such action rendering valueless the generating units of the existing utilities. It should be noted here that no evidence whatever was presented to the committee that the services of the utilities are, or have been, inadequate or that their rates are, or have been, other than just, fair, and reasonable. To those who advocate that our Government should engage in such an undertaking, I will say that, by way of comparison, banditry is an honorable profession.

The governmental agency can and will sell electricity below the actual cost of production, for it pays no taxes, and will reduce charges against capital investment to a nominal figure to justify its continued existence. The history of such governmental agencies is that they perpetuate themselves, without regard to the cost to the taxpayers.

Many of the arguments advanced above apply with equal force against the Government's engaging in the production of fertilizer at Muscle Shoals. The Government nitrate plant cost $55,000,000, and the pending resolution provides that in ascertaining the cost of production the capital charges shall be made against a sum not in excess of $6,000,000, which means that there will be no capital charges. The agency is obligated to produce fertilizer below the cost at which it can be produced by modern methods at the most efficient plant in the United States.

Fertilizer produced at Muscle Shoals will be sold within a very limited area, for the sales area of such a heavy, bulky commodity, defined by freight rates, is necessarily small. Owing to the controlled items of cost in its manufacture at Muscle Shoals its cost there affords no "yardstick of price" elsewhere. The whole proposition is simply to establish another subsidy, which would benefit nobody, not even those who would purchase the cheap fertilizer. It would only add to the present surplus of cotton. The hidden costs of the fertilizer, not reflected in the sale price, would be borne by the taxpayers of the country, including the wheat farmer and the dairyman.

The final argument in favor of the resolution is that the development of the power sites of the Tennessee River and of the natural resources of its valley would give employment to the jobless. But the proposition is to produce those things for which there is no present or prospective demand, and of which the country now has and for years has had a great surplus.

I will remark that there is in existing industries today a job for every person unemployed and willing to work, and that the efforts of the Congress would be more beneficially employed if directed toward starting those industries. When they are started, the masses will be restored to their old purchasing power, agriculture will again flourish, and the depression will be a matter of history.

Pennsylvania is the greatest industrial State of the Union, and for this reason feels the direst effects of the depression. Thousands of her citizens are unemployed. Revival of industry will necessarily commence within her borders. Such revival would be greatly stimulated by the Government's immediately adopting the Allegheny River-French Creek route as the route for the Ohio River-Lake Erie ship canal, and connecting with it at the same time the canalization of the Beaver, Shenango, and Mahoning Rivers. Sixty-three miles of this route is now completed. George Washington advocated a ship canal connecting the Ohio River and Lake Erie. A recent economic survey of the territory contiguous to such route has shown the project self-liquidating. Ships would travel north with cheap coal and oil and its products for the Northwest and return with that section's wheat and ore from the Lake Superior districts. The coal and oil industries of western Pennsylvania and the steel industries of Pittsburgh and the Shenango and Mahoning Valleys would flourish.

It may well be that this is the point at which we can pierce the lines of depression and start our country on its road to its accustomed prosperity. Its promise justifies the attempt.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, in connection with the matter of the watered stock, I call the attention of the House to the testimony of Mr. Willkie, who is the president of the holding company known as the Commonwealth & Southern. The testimony showed that there are several intermediate holding companies and that it finally heads up in the banking firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., and on page 238 of the hearings I asked Mr. Willkie these questions:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Willkie, do you say that all of this common stock that the holding company owns, which has a third-lien status upon the earnings of the company, represents cash investment in the physicial properties of these plants?

Mr. WILLKIE. I would not say that exactly; that is a rather difficult thing to measure. These companies are a growth of gradual consolidations. Take, for instance, the company that Mr. Arkwright told you about, one company going into another company.

I think it was claimed before the Federal Trade Commission in connection with the Georgia Power Co. that some increase in value was placed on the Georgia Power Co. in connection with lands it acquired in 1902. The consolidation took place in 1926, and the Georgia Power Co., in accordance with the well-established rule of law that you are entitled to increases in the value of real estate, claimed some value for that increase.

The CHAIRMAN. How did the Tennessee Power Co. pick up $10,000,000; that is, the difference between the $90,000,000 investment and $102,000,000, the present stock valuation?

Mr. WILLKIE. Mr. Guild can answer that question.

Mr. GUILD. I think, Mr. Chairman, that can be answered by the consolidation that took place when the Tennessee River Power Co. became a part of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. There was a loss of about $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 that was charged off, and the real value of Hales Bar stands on our books now at about $9,000,000, when the real value was about $12,000,000 or $13,000,000. That loss was sustained by the other company.

Then Mr. Dickerman, who is certainly an impartial witness, being employed by the Federal Trade Commission, testified, beginning on page 335 of the hearings, as follows:

Mr. Goss. Do you think those figures they have given me are accurate?

Mr. DICKERMAN. Well, let me say one thing about the rate of return, which I am not thoroughly impressed with. They may figure 6 percent, but there is not a utility company going that is trying to do business on 6 percent on their actual investment. They have included, as our Federal Trade Commission reports have shown, their capital charges in their investment accounts, and if they earn 6 percent on capital, they are earning 8 or 9 percent on the real investment.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. McSWAIN. Certainly.

Mr. GOSS. If my memory serves me correctly, Mr. Dickerman, of the Federal Trade Commission, admitted that out of the $600,000,000 invested in all of these companies there was a write-up of about $9,000,000. Is not that correct?

Mr. McSWAIN. That was in the case of the Tennessee Power Co.

Mr. GOSS. That was all they found in respect of all the properties, was it not?

Mr. McSWAIN. That is the only actual item that they were able to identify as to how it got in, but he states that the fact is it must be in there somehow, because when they figure 6 percent on their capital they are figuring enough to represent 8 or 9 percent on the actual physical value of the property. So this shows that Mr. Williams, of Mississippi, a son of the distinguished John Sharp Williams, and himself a consulting engineer, was right when he testified that the company that had employed him as consulting engineer had ascertained that they could go to Georgia and construct power plants and transmission lines and a distributing system through the city of Atlanta and make a reasonable profit on their investment by charging the consuming public only 52 percent of the rates now prevailing in Atlanta.

So I submit that these statements by Mr. Dickerman and Mr. Williams corroborate one another and indicate that the public impression that has grown up out of the experience of millions of people of the country, to the effect that the rates charged by the utility companies for both domestic and industrial use are unjustifiably high, is probably a correct impression.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I will yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman will agree that the exploitation of the power companies has been perpetrated by the banking houses?

Mr. McSWAIN. I do not know who the power is behind the throne. I have not been able to go into all the intricacies of the holding companies. Our time is limited, we have no funds to bring witnesses here, and no funds to pay them; but, as I said, it appears by the statement of Mr. Dickerman that the holding companies have exploited the utility companies and it has finally landed in the banking house of J. P. Morgan & Co.

Mr. McFADDEN. That is one of the reasons why I introduced the resolution calling for an investigation of the Treasury income-tax department, because these people have not paid their proper share of the taxes.

Mr. McSWAIN. If anybody has escaped the payment of his share of the taxes, I am in favor of an investigation.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. KVALE. I have in my hand a statement which shows that the Tennessee Power Co. has an assessed value of $59,000,000 for taxable purposes, and for rate-making purposes the same property is valued at $94,000,000.

Mr. McSWAIN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. KENNEY. I understand that some of these companies have underwritten the charges as capital. Does the gentleman know of any case where the underwriting charges are written off?

Mr. McSWAIN. I do not; I do not know very much about holding companies. I do not know how they came into existence or what they are for; but I have had a little experience in telephone concerns, and I have been convinced that a lot of these parent companies milk the local companies and make it appear that the local companies are not earning much of anything, whereas the earnings go into the coffers of the parent company.

It is difficult, therefore, to write legislation that will satisfy some of our friends. My amiable and delightful friend from Pennsylvania, Mr. RANSLEY, for instance.

Now, when Henry Ford wanted to acquire the Muscle Shoals property it would seem that the proposition ought to satisfy anybody who is in favor of private operation. Mr. Ford said that if the property was leased to him he would operate it as a private proposition and would manufacture fertilizer, and that his personal fortune would be behind it, and then all the rest of the power he would use for Henry Ford. What he was going to do with it nobody knows.

But what happened when the bill was brought out of the Military Affairs Committee? A report was signed by my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, and 4 or 5 others, who are not Members of Congress now, in which they said:

> A large amount of evidence was brought before the committee to show the wide-spread demand in the South for hydroelectric power and the concern which is felt in that section lest the Muscle Shoals power be entirely withdrawn from public service.

In other words, they were then much afraid that private industry—to wit, Henry Ford—would gobble up all the power generated at Muscle Shoals. The truth is the power companies wanted that power then and they want it now. They admit they will buy it now on a long-term contract and pay over $2,000,000 a year for it.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. RANSLEY. The gentleman also recalls that Henry Ford became frightened over the proposition and withdrew it.

Mr. McSWAIN. I remember that very well, but I believe that but for the opposition made by my distinguished friend and his associates and men of like mind at both ends of the Capitol Henry Ford today and through all these years would have been operating that property, turning out 2,000,000 tons of mixed fertilizer a year for the benefit of the farmer, and using all of that power, and not come into competition with a single one of these "precious power-utility companies."

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Several gentlemen on the other side of the aisle in the course of debate have stated that there are ample plants in existence to furnish fertilizers to the country. I ask the gentleman whether he is familiar with the fertilizer that was last year used on the Mount Vernon road, between Washington and Mount Vernon, and on other projects, which was shipped into this country from Germany?

Mr. McSWAIN. I have heard about that. I want to stick to the main track. As to the necessity of having additional power, when the then Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hoover, made a speech in Seattle on August 21, 1926, it then appeared to him that there was not only a demand for power at Muscle Shoals and in the Cumberland River and in the Columbia River but that there was a necessity for such power, and he expressed the hope in that address that there would be a devotion of a large part of the power which shall be created there to the development of the electrochemical industry as a "national necessity for industry, agriculture, and the national defense."

In 1926, therefore, it was all right. In 1930, sitting as President, when we offered a bill which would have accomplished, in large measure at least, the development of this property, the very object that appeared desirable when he made the speech in Seattle in 1926, it was met with the most vigorous veto. One provision that was in the bill as it passed both Houses of Congress and would have become a law except for the signature of the President in 1928, when it was met with a pocket veto, and in 1930, when it was met with a very positive veto, was the provision that if power was sold by the corporation operating the property to a public-utility company, reselling power for profit, that such power might be withdrawn upon 2 years' notice to the power utility company, that the power was needed either for States, municipalities, counties, or cooperative associations.

In this bill the time has been increased, so far as notice is concerned, from 2 years to 5 years. When the representatives of the power interests were before us and protested against that provision I said that the mere length of time was immaterial. We thought 2 years was fair enough for them to build another power plant, and I asked the question myself if they would tell us what they think is a fair limit of time. They declined to say, but after the committee got around the table and began to consider the matter, we decided to more than double it, and now, so far as this bill is concerned, it is 5 years. I think that surely ought to foreclose any criticism or complaint that this committee has been actuated by anything like prejudice or the spirit of unfairness toward these interests.

In conclusion, very briefly, this bill is in pursuance of the policy of conservation which has been proclaimed for 21 years by both the great parties of this Nation, representing at least 95 percent of the entire population of the country, beginning with the declaration of the Progressive Party in 1912, saying in effect that the power then in the public domain, or in the navigable waters, was a national asset and should be preserved in public hands for the benefit of all the people; and from that time to this day every single party platform has proclaimed that to be its policy. How can any of us say that this bill which carries that policy into effect is, as has been said, socialistic or communistic or sovietistic? This is the policy of 95 percent of the American people. It is that the power incidentally developed in pursuance of those projects of navigation and flood control is an asset of all the people. Great complaint was made before our committee by some representatives of the power companies that such legislation as this would deprive some women and children who have invested some money in these public-utility bonds and preferred stock, of their investment. In the first place I am satisfied it will not do it. The bill is as fair as it could be.

It says, "If you have a power-transmission line and we need it we will buy it from you and pay its reasonable price, and you can take that money and distribute it as a stock dividend among your stockholders and pay them back this money you are now grieving about." But in the next place, my friends, we have to direct our attention to some women and children who are not owners of stocks and bonds. I must assume that at least a large part of the women and children who have been able to put money into bonds and preferred stocks of public-utilities companies have some more money invested in some other stocks and bonds. I am thinking of the millions of women and children who have to earn their own bread by their daily toil.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] has again expired.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remainder of the time.

I am thinking of those millions of women and children who are compelled to have electric power for light and for other domestic purposes, and when they, out of their meager earnings, are compelled to pay more than a fair and reasonable return on the actual physical property employed in the production, transmission, and distribution of that power, then an unfair exaction is being made of them. Their money is unjustly taken from them. I summon before your mind all those millions of women and children struggling for a bare existence, against the few thousand who are stockholders and bondholders in the utility companies involved. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

All time has expired.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, by instruction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I offer two very brief committee amendments, which are on the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McSWAIN for the committee: On page 23, line 1, after the word "shall", strike out the word "by" and insert the following: "be voidable at the election of"; and beginning with and including the first word "be", strike out the remainder of the sentence.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the second amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McSWAIN for the committee: On page 23, in line 21, after the first word "from", insert the word "such", and after the word "bonds" and the comma following it, insert the following words: "as the Authority may make available to the Secretary of War for that purpose."

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask your indulgence. It has been agreed that the final vote on this bill will come tomorrow, and I do not now move the engrossment and third reading and final passage.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to serve notice on the House that I shall offer a motion to recommit to substitute the Norris bill. That may be done tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the bill may be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. McSWAIN. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit to substitute the Norris bill.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. I am.

The SPEAKER. Is there any member of the committee who is opposed to the bill who desires to offer a motion to recommit? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McSWAIN. I desire to reserve all points of order on the proposed motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANKIN moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs with instructions to report it back forthwith with the following amendment: "Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment referred to may be considered as read and be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That for the purpose of maintaining and operating the properties now owned by the United States in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala., in the interest of the national defense and for agricultural and industrial development, and to improve navigation in the Tennessee River and to control the destructive flood waters in the Tennessee River and Mississippi River Basins, there is hereby created a body corporate by the name of 'The Tennessee Valley Authority' (hereinafter referred to as the 'Corporation'). The board of directors first appointed shall be deemed the incorporators, and the incorporation shall be held to have been effected from the date of the first meeting of the board. This act may be cited as the 'Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933.'

"SEC. 2. (a) The board of directors of the Corporation (hereinafter referred to as the 'board') shall be composed of three members, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. In appointing the members of the board the President shall designate the chairman. All other officials, agents, and employees shall be designated and selected by the board.

"(b) The terms of office of the members first taking office after the approval of this act shall expire as designated by the President at the time of nomination, one at the end of the fifth year, one at the end of the tenth year, and one at the end of the fifteenth year, after the date of approval of this act. A successor to a member of the board shall be appointed in the same manner as the original members and shall have a term of office expiring 15 years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed.

"(c) Any member appointed to fill a vacancy in the Board occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term.

"(d) Vacancies in the board so long as there shall be two members in office shall not impair the powers of the board to execute the functions of the Corporation, and two of the members in office shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of the business of the board.

"(e) Each of the members of the board shall be a citizen of the United States. The chairman of the board shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year. Other members of the board shall receive salaries of $9,000 each per annum. Each member of the board, in addition to his salary, shall be permitted to occupy as his residence one of the dwelling houses now owned by the Government in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala., the same to be designated by the President of the United States. Members of the board shall be reimbursed by the Corporation for actual expenses while in the performance of the duties vested in the board by this act. No member of said board shall, during his continuance in office, be engaged in any other business, but shall give his entire time to the business of said Corporation.

"The board shall select a treasurer and as many assistant treasurers as it deems proper, which treasurer and assistant treasurers may be corporations and banking institutions and shall give such security for the safe-keeping of the securities and moneys of the said Corporation as the board may require: Provided, That any member of said board may be removed from office at any time by a concurrent resolution of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

"(f) No director shall have any financial interest in any public-utility corporation engaged in the business of distributing and selling power to the public nor in any corporation engaged in the manufacture, selling, or distribution of fixed nitrogen or fertilizer, or any ingredients thereof, nor shall any member have any interest in any business that may be adversely affected by the success of the Corporation as a producer of concentrated fertilizers or as a producer of electric power.

"(g) The board shall direct the exercise of all the powers of the Corporation.

"(h) All members of the board shall be persons who profess a belief in the feasibility and wisdom of this act."

SEC. 3. The board shall appoint such managers, assistant managers, officers, employees, attorneys, and agents, as are necessary for the transaction of its business, fix their compensation, define their duties, require bonds of such of them as the board may designate, and provide a system of organization to fix responsibility and promote efficiency. Any appointee of the board may be removed in the discretion of the board.

"SEC. 4. Except as otherwise specifically provided in this act, the Corporation—

"(a) Shall have succession in its corporate name.

"(b) May sue and be sued in its corporate name, but only for the enforcement of contracts and the defense of property.

"(c) May adopt and use a corporate seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

"(d) May make contracts as herein authorized.

"(e) May adopt, amend, and repeal bylaws.

"(f) May purchase or lease and hold such personal property as it deems necessary or convenient in the transaction of its business, and may dispose of any such personal property held by it.

"(g) Shall have such powers as may be necessary or appropriate for the exercise of the powers herein specifically conferred upon the Corporation.

"(h) In the name of the United States Government to exercise the right of eminent domain, and in the purchase of any real estate or the acquisition of real estate by condemnation proceedings, the title to such real estate shall be taken in the name of the United States Government.

"SEC. 5. The board is hereby authorized and directed—

"(a) To contract with commercial producers for the production of such fertilizers or fertilizer materials as may be needed in the Government's program of development and introduction in excess of that produced by Government plants. Such contracts may provide either for outright purchase by the Government or only for the payment of carrying charges on special materials manufactured at the Government's request for its program.

"(b) To arrange with farmers and farm organizations for large-scale practical use of the new forms of fertilizers under conditions permitting an accurate measure of the economic return they produce.

"(c) To cooperate with national, State, district, or county experimental stations or demonstration farms, for the use of new forms of fertilizer or fertilizer practices during the initial or experimental period of their introduction.

"(d) The board shall manufacture fixed nitrogen at Muscle Shoals by the employment of existing facilities by modernizing existing plants, or by any other process or processes that in its judgment shall appear wise and profitable for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen.

"(e) Under the authority of this act the board may make donations or sales of the total product of the plant or plants operated by it to be fairly and equitably distributed through the agency of county demonstration agents, agricultural colleges, or otherwise as the board may direct, for experimentation, education, and introduction of the use of such products in cooperation with practical farmers so as to obtain information as to the value, effect, and best methods of use of same.

"(f) The board is authorized to make alterations, modifications, or improvements in existing plants and facilities, and to construct new plants.

"(g) To establish, maintain, and operate laboratories and experimental plants, and to undertake experiments for the purpose of enabling the Corporation to furnish nitrogen products for military and agricultural purposes in the most economical manner and at the highest standard of efficiency.

"(h) The board shall have power to request the assistance and advice of any officer, agent, or employee of any executive department or of any independent office of the United States, to enable the Corporation the better to carry out its powers successfully, and the President shall, if in his opinion, the public interest, service, or economy so requires, direct that such assistance, advice, and service be rendered to the Corporation, and any individual that may be by the President directed to render such assistance, advice, and service shall be thereafter subject to the orders, rules, and regulations of the board.

"(i) Upon the requisition of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to manufacture for and sell at cost to the United States explosives or their nitrogenous content.

"(j) Upon the requisition of the Secretary of War the Corporation shall allot and deliver without charge to the War Department so much power as shall be necessary in the judgment of said Department for use in operation of all locks, lifts, or other facilities in aid of navigation.

"(k) To produce, distribute, and sell electric power, as herein particularly specified.

"(l) No products of the Corporation shall be sold for use outside of the United States, her Territories and possessions, except to the United States Government for the use of its Army and Navy or to its allies in case of war.

"SEC. 6. In the appointment of officials and the selection of employees for said Corporation, and in the promotion of any such employees or officials, no political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all such appointments and promotions shall be given and made on the basis of merit and efficiency. Any member of said board who is guilty of a violation of this section shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, and any appointee of said board who is guilty of a violation of this section shall be removed from office by said board.

"SEC. 7. In order to enable the Corporation to exercise the powers vested in it by this act—

"(a) The exclusive use, possession, and control of the United States nitrate plants nos. 1 and 2, including steam plants, located, respectively, at Sheffield, Ala., and Muscle Shoals, Ala., together with all real estate and buildings connected therewith, all tools and machinery, equipment, accessories, and materials belonging thereto, and all laboratories and plants used as auxiliaries thereto; the fixed-nitrogen research laboratory, the Waco limestone quarry, in Alabama, and Dam No. 2, located at Muscle Shoals, its power house, and all hydroelectric and operating appurtenances (except the locks), and all machinery, lands, and buildings in connection therewith, and all appurtenances thereof are hereby entrusted to the Corporation for the purposes of this act.

"(b) The President of the United States is authorized to provide for the transfer to the Corporation of the use, possession, and control of such other real or personal property of the United States as he may from time to time deem necessary and proper for the purposes of the Corporation as herein stated.

"SEC. 8. (a) The Corporation shall maintain its principal office in the immediate vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala. The Corporation shall be held to be an inhabitant and resident of the northern judicial district of Alabama within the meaning of the laws of the United States relating to the venue of civil suits.

"(b) The Corporation shall at all times maintain complete and accurate books of accounts.

"(c) Each member of the board before entering upon the duties of his office shall subscribe to an oath (or affirmation) to support the Constitution of the United States and to faithfully and impartially perform the duties imposed upon him by this act.

"SEC. 9. (a) The board shall file with the President and with the Congress in January of each year a financial statement and a complete report as to the business of the Corporation covering the preceding year. This report shall include the total number of employees and the names, salaries, and duties of those receiving compensation at the rate of more than $1,500 a year.

"(b) The board shall require a careful and scrutinizing audit and accounting by the General Accounting Office during each governmental fiscal year of operation under this act, and said audit shall be open to inspection to the public at all times and copies thereof shall be filed in the principal office of the Corporation at Muscle Shoals, in the State of Alabama. Once during each fiscal year the President of the United States shall have power, and it shall be his duty, upon the written request of at least two members of the board, to appoint a firm of certified public accountants of his own choice and selection, which shall have free and open access to all books, accounts, plants, warehouses, offices, and all other places, and records belonging to or under the control of or used by the Corporation in connection with the business authorized by this act. And the expenses of such audit so directed by the President shall be paid by the board and charged as part of the operating expenses of the Corporation.

"SEC. 10. The board is hereby empowered and authorized to sell the surplus power not used in its operations and for operation of locks and other works generated by it to States, counties, municipalities, corporations, partnerships, or individuals, according to the policies hereinafter set forth, and to carry out said authority, the board is authorized to enter into contracts for such sale for a term not exceeding 30 years and in the sale of such current by the board it shall give preference to States, counties, municipalities, and cooperative organizations of citizens or farmers, not organized or doing business for profit, but primarily for the purpose of supplying electricity to its own citizens or members: Provided, That all contracts made with private companies or individuals for the sale of power, which power is to be resold for a profit, shall contain a provision authorizing the board to cancel said contract upon 2 years' notice in writing, if the board needs said power to supply the demands of States, counties, or municipalities. In order to provide for the fullest possible use of electric light and power on farms, the board, in its discretion, shall have power within reasonable distance of any of its transmission lines to construct transmission lines to farms and small villages that are not otherwise supplied with electricity at reasonable rates and to make such rules and regulations governing such sale and distribution of electric power as in its judgment may be just and equitable.

"SEC. 11. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Government, so far as practical, to distribute the surplus power generated at Muscle Shoals equitably among the States, counties, and municipalities within transmission distance of Muscle Shoals.

"SEC. 12. In order to place the board upon a fair basis for making such contracts and for receiving bids for the sale of such power it is hereby expressly authorized, either from appropriations made by Congress or from funds secured from the sale of such power or from funds secured by the sale of bonds hereafter provided for, to construct, lease, or authorize the construction of transmission lines within transmission distance from the place where generated: Provided, That if any State, county, municipality, or other public or cooperative organization of citizens or farmers, not organized or doing business for profit, but primarily for the purpose of supplying electricity to its own citizens or members, or any two or more of such municipalities or organizations, shall construct or agree to construct a transmission line to the Government reservation upon which is located a Government generating plant, or to a main transmission line owned by the Government and under the control of the board, the board is hereby authorized and directed to contract with such State, county, municipality, or other organization, or two or more of them, for the sale of electricity for a term not exceeding 40 years, and in any such case the board shall give to such State, county, municipality, or other organization ample time to fully comply with any local law now in existence or hereafter enacted providing for the necessary legal authority for such State, county, municipality, or other organization to contract with the board for such power: Provided further, That all contracts entered into between the Corporation and any municipality or other political subdivision shall provide that the electric power shall be sold and distributed to the ultimate consumer without discrimination as between consumers of the same class, and such contract shall be void if a discriminatory rate, rebate, or other special concession is made or given to any consumer or user by the municipality or other political subdivision: And provided further, That any surplus power not so sold as above provided to States, counties, municipalities, or other said organizations, before the board shall sell the same to any person or corporation engaged in the distribution and resale of electricity for profit, it shall require said person or corporation to agree that any resale of such electric power by said person or corporation shall be sold to the ultimate consumer of such electric power at a price that shall not exceed an amount fixed as reasonable, just, and fair by the board; and in case of any such sale if an amount is charged the ultimate consumer which is in excess of the price so deemed to be just, reasonable, and fair by the board, the contract for such sale between the board and such distributor of electricity shall be declared null and void and the same shall be canceled by the board.

"SEC. 13. Five percent of the gross proceeds received by the board for the sale of power generated at Dam No. 2, or from the steam plant located in that vicinity, or from any other steam plant hereafter constructed in the State of Alabama, shall be paid to the State of Alabama; and 5 percent of the gross proceeds from the sale of power generated at Cove Creek Dam, hereinafter provided for, or any other dam or steam plant located in the State of Tennessee, shall be paid to the State of Tennessee. Upon the completion of said Cove Creek Dam the board shall ascertain how much excess power is thereby generated at Dam No. 2 and any other dam hereafter constructed by the Government of the United State of Tennessee, and from the gross proceeds of the sale of such State of Tennessee and from the gross proceeds of the sale of such excess power 2½ percent shall be paid to the State of Alabama and 2½ percent to the State of Tennessee. These provisions shall apply to any other dam that may hereafter be constructed and controlled and operated by the board on the Tennessee River or any of its tributaries, the main purpose of which is to control flood waters and where the development of electric power is only incidental in the operation of such flood-control dam. In ascertaining the gross proceeds from the sale of such power upon which a percentage is paid to the States of Alabama and Tennessee the board shall not take into consideration the proceeds of any power sold to the Government of the United States, or any department of the Government of the United States used in the operation of any locks on the Tennessee River, or for any experimental purpose, or for the manufacture of fertilizer or any of the ingredients thereof, or for any other governmental purpose.

"SEC. 14. The board shall make a thorough investigation as to the present value of Dam No. 2 and the steam plants at nitrate plant no. 1 and nitrate plant no. 2, and as to the cost of Cove Creek Dam, for the purpose of ascertaining how much of the value or the cost of said properties shall be allocated and charged up to (1) flood control, (2) navigation, (3) fertilizer, (4) national defense, and (5) the development of power. The findings thus made by the board, when approved by the President of the United States, shall be final, and such findings shall thereafter be used in all allocation of value for the purpose of keeping the book value of said properties. In like manner, the cost and book value of any dams, steam plants, or other similar improvements hereafter constructed and turned over to said board for the purpose of control and management shall be ascertained.

"SEC. 15. In the construction of any future dam, steam plant, or other facility, to be used in whole or in part for the generation of hydroelectric power, the board, if directed so to do by the President of the United States, shall issue its bonds for the payment in part or in full of that part of said development that is allocated to the production of hydroelectric power. Said bonds shall be in denominations and shall draw such interest and shall bear such maturity dates as shall be directed by the President, and the same shall be sold to the public in such manner and under such rules and regulations as the President may direct. The net proceeds of all moneys received for the sale of power to States, counties, municipalities, or farm organizations, as well as the net proceeds derived from any tonnage tax that may hereafter be provided for by Congress, are hereby pledged to the payment of said bonds and the interest thereon.

"SEC. 16. The Secretary of War, whenever the President deems it advisable, is hereby empowered and directed to complete Dam No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, Ala., and the steam plant at nitrate plant no. 2, in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, by installing in Dam No. 2 the additional power units according to the plans and specifications of said dam, and the additional power unit in the steam plant at nitrate plant no. 2.

"SEC. 17. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Government to utilize the Muscle Shoals properties so far as may be necessary to improve and cheapen the production of fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients by carrying out the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 18. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized, with appropriations hereafter to be made available by the Congress, to construct, either directly or by contract to the lowest responsible bidder, after due advertisement, a dam in and across Clinch River in the State of Tennessee, which has by long custom become known and designated as the Cove Creek Dam, together with a transmission line from Muscle Shoals, according to the latest and most approved designs of the Chief of Engineers, including power house and hydroelectric installations and equipment for the generation of at least 200,000 horsepower, in order that the waters of the said Clinch River may be impounded and stored above said dam for the purpose of increasing and regulating the flow of the Clinch River and the Tennessee River below, so that the maximum amount of primary power may be developed at Dam No. 2 and at any and all other dams below the said Cove Creek Dam.

"SEC. 19. In order to enable and empower the Secretary of War to carry out the authority hereby conferred, in the most economical and efficient manner, he is hereby authorized and empowered in the exercise of the powers of national defense in aid of navigation, and in the control of the flood waters of the Tennessee and Mississippi Rivers, constituting channels of interstate commerce, to exercise the right of eminent domain for all purposes of this act and to condemn all lands, easements, rights of way, and other area necessary in order to obtain a site for said Cove Creek Dam, and the flowage rights for the reservoir of water above said dam and to negotiate and conclude contracts with States, counties, municipalities, and all State agencies and with railroads, railroad corporations, common carriers, and all public-utility commissions and any other person, firm, or corporation, for the relocation of railroad tracks, highways, highway bridges, mills, ferries, electric-light plants, and any and all other properties, enterprises, and projects whose removal may be necessary in order to carry out the provisions of this act. When said Cove Creek Dam, transmission line, and power house shall have been completed, the possession, use, and control thereof shall be intrusted to the Corporation for use and operation in connection with the general Muscle Shoals project and to promote flood control and navigation in the Tennessee River.

"SEC. 20. The Corporation, as an instrumentality and agency of the Government of the United States for the purpose of executing its constitutional powers, shall have access to the Patent Office of the United States for the purpose of studying, ascertaining, and copying all methods, formulæ, and scientific information (not including access to pending applications for patents) necessary to enable the Corporation to use and employ the most efficacious and economical process for the production of fixed nitrogen, or any essential ingredient of fertilizer, or any method of improving and cheapening the production of hydroelectric power, and any patentee whose patent rights may have been thus in any way copied, used, or employed by the exercise of this authority by the Corporation, shall have as the exclusive remedy of a cause of action to be instituted and prosecuted on the equity side of the appropriate district court of the United States for the recovery of reasonable compensation. The Commissioner of Patents shall furnish to the Corporation, at its request and without payment of fees, copies of documents on file in his office.

"SEC. 21. The Government of the United States hereby reserves the right, in case of war or national emergency declared by Congress, to take possession of all or any part of the property described or referred to in this act for the purpose of manufacturing explosives or for other war purposes; but, if this right is exercised by the Government, it shall pay the reasonable and fair damages that may be suffered by any party whose contract for the purchase of electric power or fixed nitrogen or fertilizer ingredients is hereby violated, after the amount of the damages has been fixed by the United States Court of Claims in proceedings instituted and conducted for that purpose under rules prescribed by the court.

"SEC. 22. (a) All general penal statutes relating to the larceny, embezzlement, conversion, or to the improper handling, retention, use, or disposal of public moneys or property of the United States, shall apply to the moneys and property of the Corporation and to moneys and properties of the United States intrusted to the Corporation.

"(b) Any person who, with intent to defraud the Corporation, or to deceive any director, officer, or employee of the Corporation or any officer or employee of the United States, (1) makes any false entry in any book of the Corporation, or (2) makes any false report or statement for the Corporation, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"(c) Any person who shall receive any compensation, rebate, or reward, or shall enter into any conspiracy, collusion, or agreement, express or implied, with intent to defraud the Corporation or wrongfully and unlawfully to defeat its purposes, shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"SEC. 23. To aid further the proper use, conservation, and development of the natural resources of the Tennessee River drainage basin and of such adjoining territory as may be related to or materially affected by the development consequent of this act, and to provide for the general welfare of the citizens of said areas, the President is hereby authorized by such means or methods as he may deem proper within the limits of appropriations made therefor by Congress, to make such surveys of and general plans for said Tennessee Basin and adjoining territory as may be useful to the Congress and to the several States in guiding and controlling the extent, sequence, and nature of development that may be equitably and economically advanced through the expenditure of public funds or through the guidance or control of public authority, all for the general purpose of fostering an orderly and proper physical, economic, and social development of said areas; and the President is further authorized in making said surveys and plans to cooperate with the States affected thereby.

"SEC. 24. The President shall from time to time, as the work provided for in section 23 progresses, recommend to Congress such legislation as he deems proper to carry out the general purposes stated in said section and for the especial purpose of bringing about in said Tennessee drainage basin in conformity with said general purposes (1) the maximum amount of flood control; (2) the maximum development of said Tennessee River for navigation purposes; (3) the maximum generation of electric power consistent with flood control and navigation; (4) the proper use of marginal lands; (5) the proper method of reforestation of all lands in said drainage basin suitable for reforestation; and (6) the most practical method of improving agricultural conditions in the valleys of said drainage basin.

"SEC. 25. For the purpose of securing any rights of flowage, or obtaining title to or possession of any property, real or personal, that may be necessary or may become necessary, in the carrying out of any of the provisions of this act, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to enter into contracts with the owner or owners of such rights or such property, and to provide for the payment of same by delivery of hydroelectric, steam, or other power generated at any of the plants now owned or hereafter owned or constructed by the Government or by said Corporation. Any such contract made by the President of the United States, or under his direction and approved by him, shall be carried out by the board.

"SEC. 26. The Corporation may cause proceedings to be instituted for the acquisition by condemnation of any lands, easements, or rights of way which in the opinion of the Corporation are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. The proceedings shall be instituted in the United States district court for the district in which the land, easement, right of way, or other interest is located, and such court shall have full jurisdiction to divest the complete title to the property sought to be acquired out of all persons or claimants and vest the same in the United States in fee simple, and to enter a decree quieting the title thereto in the United States of America.

"Upon the filing of a petition for condemnation and for the purpose of ascertaining the value of the property to be acquired, and assessing the compensation to be paid, the court shall appoint three commissioners who shall be disinterested persons and who shall take and subscribe an oath that they do not own any lands, or interest or easement in any lands, which it may be desirable for the United States to acquire in the furtherance of said project, and such commissioners shall not be selected from the locality wherein the land sought to be condemned lies. Such commissioners shall receive a per diem of not to exceed $15 per day for their services, together with an additional amount of $5 per day for subsistence for time actually spent in performing their duties as commissioners.

"It shall be the duty of such commissioners to examine into the value of the lands sought to be condemned, to conduct hearings and receive evidence, and generally to take such appropriate steps as may be proper for the determination of the value of the said lands sought to be condemned, and for such purpose the commissioners are authorized to administer oaths and subpena witnesses, which said witnesses shall receive the same fees as are provided for witnesses in the Federal courts. The said commissioners shall thereupon file a report setting forth their conclusions as to the value of the said property sought to be condemned, making a separate award and valuation in the premises with respect to each separate parcel involved. Upon the filing of such award in court, the clerk of said court shall give notice of the filing of such award to the parties to said proceeding in manner and form as directed by the judge of said court.

"Either or both parties may file exceptions to the award of said commissioners within 20 days from the date of the filing of said award in court. Exceptions filed to such award shall be heard before three Federal district judges unless the parties, in writing, in person, or by their attorneys, stipulate that the exceptions may be heard before a lesser number of judges. On such hearing such judges shall pass de novo upon the proceedings had before the commissioners, may view the property, and may take additional evidence. Upon such hearings the said judges shall file their own award, fixing therein the value of the property sought to be condemned, regardless of the award previously made by the said commissioners.

"At any time within 30 days from the filing of the decision of the district judges upon the hearing on exceptions to the award made by the commissioners, either party may appeal from such decision of the said judges to the circuit court of appeals, and the said circuit court of appeals shall upon the hearing on said appeal dispose of the same upon the record, without regard to the awards or findings theretofore made by the commissioners or the district judges, and such circuit court of appeals shall thereupon fix the value of the said property sought to be condemned.

"SEC. 27. All appropriations necessary to carry out the provisions of this act are hereby authorized.

"SEC. 28. All acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 29. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly declared and reserved."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, that motion will be pending in the morning?

The SPEAKER. That will be the business pending.

CURRENCY INFLATION

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I will not take a great deal of time. There is no question but that we are off of the gold standard and we have embarked on a plan of temporary inflation. [Applause.]

I do not have any criticism of such procedure, but I am considerably concerned about what position we are to be in when we are called upon to consider the problem of going back onto the gold standard, and it is on that subject that I desire to address the House this afternoon.

There are price levels that cause depression and there are price levels that bring prosperity. America can have sound money under American control and can offset foreign manipulation of money values under the simple plan in H.R. 1577, quoted in full in these remarks.

It is now 4 years since our so-called "depression" started. Since that time more tragedy has been written into the affairs of man than in any like period during times of peace in the history of the world. More destruction has taken place than during many periods when the nations of the world were engaged in war. We have tried many relief measures without avail. Without a single exception, all these measures deal with the effects and not with the cause of the depression.

When Mr. MCCORMACK, of the Ways and Means Committee, on May 2, was questioning Mr. Janney, who is known to many of the Members of this House because of his testimony before the various committees and his published statements on economic affairs, Mr. Janney replied:

I would get the cause of the trouble firmly before my view, and then I would remedy the cause.

By reference to pages 726 and 727 of this hearing before the Ways and Means Committee can be found his analysis of the cause of this depression, which up to now, so far as I know, stands not only unchallenged and uncontradicted but fully supported by record evidence from everything that I have been able to gather on this subject.

Such legislation as we have passed in this Congress up to now will not cure this depression because it does not deal with the cause of the depression. Some small temporary aid was had by some at the expense of others of our citizenship from this legislation, but no cure was effected because the law of cause and effect has not been our guide.

The Congress of the United States must realize that there is an economic war going on in the world and the issue in this economic conflict is to fix the commodity price level. If the United States cannot find a remedy, or rather I should say if the United States cannot work out a strategy in this economic conflict, which gives us the power to fix the commodity price level at the point that will restore prosperity in the United States, then I warn you that foreign nations will fix it for us in an international conference. And we will not know until long afterward what we have done. And then all these so-called remedies that we are dealing with will fall like a house of cards and add to the wreckage that we now have when we come to restoring normal conditions in the United States.

In all previous depressions there has been a choice between two courses of action, one to allow liquidation to run its course with all the disastrous consequences it entails—the other course is to arrest the fall in the value of property by adding to the money volume and thus increasing the value of property, or, in other words, to lower the value of money.

The situation is different in this depression from what it has been in other depressions. Investigation of Congress, as I find from a study of its records, makes very clear, and the proof is uncontradicted, that this depression is the result of foreign nations passing laws to affect the value of our gold dollar combined with the fact that the United States of America has made no counter move to protect it in this situation. There is, therefore, present in this situation a third course of action, which is to adopt an American plan that will be defensive and will protect our position in the matter of the price level by defending gold values from manipulation.

If we continue to follow the course of liquidation we can expect the following results: Debts will have to be reduced or completely wiped out by bankruptcies or foreclosures. Such procedures will require at least 10 years to complete. As a result of such policy, farms, homes, and other property will be for sale at ridiculous prices. No building will take place during this period. All industries dependent on building operations will be closed or they will be run at low capacity. Public debt will increase because of decreased revenue. Some, if not all, political subdivisions will no doubt be compelled to default on their interest and sinking-fund charges. Bank deposits will decline from fear, low-interest rates, and so forth. More banks will fail, more businesses will fail because of lack of credit. Interest rates will be lower for safe securities but interest rates will be higher for business and agriculture—all because of the precarious business conditions.

Fire-insurance policies will be reduced and rates increased. Other prices and fees will fall, such as freight rates, telephone charges, newspapers, doctors, dentists, and attorney's fees. Large numbers of business concerns will pass out through bankruptcy. Capital investments in all forms will be written down.

We must either be prepared to endure this tragic situation with all of the unforseeable conditions it will entail or else we must adopt a movement in the counter direction which will be sane, sound, and effective—one that will treat with the cause of the difficulty.

Where does our wealth come from in this Nation? In the United States we produce $18,000,000,000 a year yielded up from our agriculture and other resources. In the last 3 years the profits from the production of this new wealth have been completely wiped out. Definite causes have produced this result, causes which have led to the closing of the markets of the world. Our exports of the surplus of these productions cannot go out to people in need of them and this same surplus of our productions which should be the basis of our continued prosperity must remain at home to break down our markets and destroy our profits. Is there anything mysterious about this? Then why can we not deal with it as a basic problem? And why can we not consider that these same causes have also closed the central banks of the nations with whom we have dealt in our foreign trade, thus making commerce impossible with them, and at the same time have accomplished a third result by so increasing the value of gold from which our dollar is made that it takes nearly twice as much in commodities to buy a given amount of gold dollars as the average over a period of years?

We should recognize the gravity of such a situation by studying the causes that have produced these results. Any other attitude will discredit our leadership to such an extent that the people may take the matter into their own hands—we must not allow such a cause to continue. When we apply temporary measures or measures that are alleviative in their nature and that do not cure the cause of the trouble, we are merely trifling with natural law. We are denying our confidence in law and we are worshiping false gods.

I repeat what I have said before—there is an economic warfare going on in the world and all that we hear about is some program that will bring relief in this difficulty. Why not adopt a defensive measure in this economic conflict? Why not work out an American plan that will control permanently the price level and defend the United States from this type of depression? In that way we can avoid all the misery and devastation we are now witnessing. We cannot only relieve present conditions but a measure can be put forward to protect us from future catastrophies of this kind. Where is the boasted ability of American financiers and American statesmen? We owe it to our constituents and to future generations that we include in any plan we decide upon such a control of money values that will prevent foreign countries from bringing about such conditions in the future. Why should we permit foreign countries to manipulate our monetary system? Why do we sit idly by and permit them to do this thing? Why do we hear so little on the floors of Congress that tends to educate its Members or the public of this country in the matter of a defensive economic policy?

Is there any defense for us in this situation, and must we admit that an international arrangement must be had to make permanent this foreign control of our economic destiny?

Why can we not speak out in this matter of wresting the control of our prosperity away from foreign nations? What is the reason for so much silence and so much confusion on this question? Why is it the European viewpoint is so often and so freely advanced and the American viewpoint is silenced?

It would be very different if a committee of the House had not studied this question and built up a record that is the most enlightening of any in the records of Congress on this subject and that conclusively proves what I have said. European nations are destroying our prosperity. This is established by the statements of men that are among the leading men of Europe today, both in statements made before their investigating commissions and statements made on the floor of their parliament. They are exploiting us, and those of us who would defend this situation cannot be heard to speak even in our own Congress.

There is no doubt whatever that the United States has completely failed to enact any measures that have any such control on commodity prices as those European nations have exercised. If they take action which depresses world commodity prices, or in other words which increases the purchasing power of the ounce of gold, why do not we take action to protect the commodity price level or to prevent the increase in the purchasing power of the ounce of gold? Such action is open to us. Such a defensive measure is possible to us. A bill to effect this rests in Congress with an imposed silence—why do we not subject it to debate? Why this imposed silence?

I cannot answer satisfactorily to myself why it should be—but there seems to be an effort to prevent the Congress of the United States from even debating a plan that will defend this Nation from the specific and definite things that have caused this terrific cataclysm of depression—the only discussions I hear are those which would make us vassals to those European nations by surrendering to them by way of an international conference at least a part of our independence of action, and in return for this we will concede to them the right to continue to exploit us.

When the colonies of Great Britain complained of this exploitation, as it applied to them, it resulted in the conference at Ottawa, at which conference various concessions and advantages were yielded up to the colonies in return for this manipulation of price levels. But no advantage was given up to the United States, and the manipulations that affect our wealth and our prosperity still continue. It not only continues, but the silence still continues on the only measure that is now before this Congress that provides an effective American plan and an American remedy. I will read this bill, but first I will say that every effort that has been made to discuss this bill and the way it has been sidetracked with the administration has so far resulted in complete failure, and on some other occasion I will hope to bring before the Congress the efforts that have been made to bring this matter up for explanation and discussion with the administration without any success.

A bill to preserve and protect the gold standard through establishment of an auxiliary monetary reserve of silver and the issuance of silver certificates payable in their gold value equivalent and under such regulations as will provide protection to gold from being cornered and protection from inflation in gold values during periods of excessive demands

Be it enacted, etc., That it is declared to be the purpose of this act (1) to safeguard the gold standard and prevent it from becoming a false and uncertain measure of value; (2) to restore gold to its former use as a dependable measure of value; (3) to relieve business from such disasters as we now see accompanying the distortion and shifting in the purchasing power of the gold dollars, and, in order to avoid such disasters in the future, to cause to be set up, in competition with gold, another element of value in the reserves of the Treasury of the United States, and for this purpose to authorize the purchase of silver and the placing of it in the reserves of the Treasury, maintaining the single gold standard as a measure of its value, and to provide for its purchase in such amounts as will safeguard the dependability and the integrity of gold as a yardstick of value; (4) to set up a definite monetary use for silver so employed by issuing against this silver a storage receipt or certificate of deposit exactly the equivalent of our present gold certificates; and (5) to make such certificates legal tender.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to immediately proceed to purchase silver bullion in amounts as hereinafter provided and to deposit silver bullion in the Treasury of the United States as an auxiliary reserve to the present gold reserve, and to issue, for the account of the Treasury of the United States against the silver so deposited, certificates of deposit payable to bearer on demand, which in effect shall be equivalent to the present gold certificates issued by the Treasury of the United States, and which shall be a certificate of deposit rather than a credit obligation, and which shall recite on the face of the certificate: "This certifies that there has been deposited in the Treasury of the United States of America $ in silver, payable to the bearer on demand." Said certificates shall also recite: "This certificate is legal tender in the amount set forth on the face hereof for the payment of all debts and dues, public and private." Certificates shall be issued in denominations of $1,000, $100, $20, and $10, and in an aggregate amount which shall equal but shall not exceed the amount paid out from the Treasury of the United States in the purchase of the silver bullion that shall have been deposited.

SEC. 3. The silver certificates issued under this act are hereby made legal tender and shall be accepted at their full face value for all debts and dues, public and private, of every nature and description, within the United States of America, and when accepted by the Government shall be reissued and in all respects shall be a part of the lawful money of the United States.

SEC. 4. The silver purchased under this act shall be paid for in silver certificates as provided for in this act, or in lawful money of the United States.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Treasury shall have placed at his disposal for the purposes of this act $150,000,000, which is hereby appropriated for this purpose, to be used as needed in carrying out the provisions of this act, and the amount, when no longer needed for the purposes of this act, shall be paid back to the Treasury of the United States in silver certificates herein provided for.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Treasury shall purchase silver at the lowest obtainable price in the markets of the world wherever the silver certificates to be issued under this act shall be accepted in payment therefor. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to open negotiations for contracts which shall provide for future deliveries of silver when, in his judgment, this will enable him to secure silver to better advantage to the Treasury in the matter of price. The bullion purchased under this act shall be stored in the Treasury of the United States in blocks or bricks of standard and uniform fineness and in convenient units by weight and stamped by authorized official stamp, as may be determined within the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury; and upon presentation for redemption by the bearer of the silver certificate provided for in this act, there shall be delivered upon demand an amount of silver equal to the gold equivalent of the face value of the certificate at the market price of silver as of the day prior to the date of presentation.

SEC. 7. The first 150,000,000 ounces of silver provided for in this act shall be purchased or contracted for within 4 months from the passage thereof. An additional 250,000,000 ounces shall be purchased or contracted for before the expiration of 12 months from the passage of this act, and the remaining silver to be purchased under this act shall be purchased as it may be required under the following rising scale of prices:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, after the purchase of the 400,000,000 ounces aforesaid, shall be, and he is hereby, directed and instructed to purchase silver bullion as provided in this act whenever the market price of silver bullion per ounce does not exceed by 3 cents an ounce the daily average market price per ounce of the preceding 90 days; and he shall continue to so purchase until 371¼ grains of fine silver reaches a parity in value with 25⁸/₁₀ grains of gold nine tenths fine; and it shall be his duty to resume purchasing silver bullion whenever it may be obtainable at or under the price of $1 for 371¼ grains of fine silver: Provided, however, That in no case shall the amount of additional silver purchased during any succeeding period of 12 months exceed in amount a total aggregate of 200,000,000 ounces for that year nor shall it exceed 100,000,000 ounces per year for any year after the total amount of silver purchased under this act shall aggregate 1½ billion ounces.

SEC. 8. After 3 years from the passage of this act, in order that the stability of gold may be more completely assured, the Secretary of the Treasury shall continue to purchase silver for the use as herein provided (a) whenever silver may be purchased on the silver market under the price of 371¼ grains of fine silver for $1 of gold or (b) whenever the average price of commodities in the United States shall be under the scale of 100 in the commodity price level of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics: Provided, however, That the maximum price paid for silver in such case may not exceed its value at the ratio of the world's supply of monetary silver to monetary gold as found by the survey of world accumulations of these metals which the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be made and which until such survey is completed is hereby placed at 14⁵/₁₀ to 1: Provided further, That in no case shall the amount of silver purchased under this section of the act, combined with that purchased under other sections of the act for any 1 year, exceed 100,000,000 fine ounces.

SEC. 9. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act and the intent thereof, which is to stabilize the purchasing power of gold by the use of silver in reserves as hereinbefore provided, and shall make full and detailed reports to Congress at regular 90-day intervals as to his operations under this act.

As to this bill, I wish to make the following remarks: This bill puts silver in reserves and maintains the gold standard as a standard of measure. It takes note of the distinction between gold as a standard and gold as a money or reserve. This is the key to the control by America of depressions, because it gives control to the United States of the value of gold, or the commodity price level, by controlling the demand—supply ratio of gold. This is the same thing as saying that stability to price levels in terms of money is arrived at under this bill. By reinstating confidence in reserves it reinstates normal functioning powers of South American and Asiatic countries. It not only adds the $3,000,000,000 in value to the money of the world, which is the amount that was destroyed by England in 1928–29, but it gives the power to the United States to add $3,000,000,000 more, or such amount as necessary, of gold values to the world's stock of silver. It acts just as if additional gold mines were opened, with America in control of the amount of gold that could be produced from these mines, for it makes silver have an increased value all over the world. It restores to the silver monetary stocks of the world a dependable value for money purposes in all the banks of the world, and it gives to the United States the control of the value of this silver so that under this bill the United States has the power to control the value of the money metals of the world. Until this bill is enacted, England has had this power, and neither changing the gold content of the dollar nor any other remedy yet proposed takes this control away from England and gives the power to the United States. Every remedy yet proposed leaves this power in the hands of England.

I consider this a sound measure, admirably adapted to our present requirements. Such a bill would restore prosperity to the United States to such an extent as has never before been equaled, and it would represent a normal and stable condition and not a condition of inflation. We would still have speculative reactions on a small scale, but the repercussions from speculative booms could never result in an economic break-down such as we now have. The United States could then go forward and occupy the supreme position to which it is entitled because of its enormous natural resources and its splendid factory equipment.

This bill is based on principles and findings that are set out in the Coinage, Weights, and Measures Committee's report of May 14 to Congress. They take advantage of and mobilize the information contained in this report to the effect that foreign nations have manipulated upward the value of gold and to that extent destroyed our property values and profits, and that this depression we are now going through is the result of legislative enactment of foreign nations.

In this bill you counter foreign legislation and neutralize it, you increase the value of property by exactly the same, though reverse action, as that by means of which this depression has been brought about.

The United States of America, under this bill, is placed in control of the value of money in terms of property, or, to say it in another way, the value of property in the terms of money. The United States is protected from further aggressions of foreign powers in this type of destruction of our property values. We can then enjoy freely the great prosperity which comes to us through our great natural resources, and we can completely revive our great home market for our manufactured goods. This bill restores our railroad tonnage, it revises the value of railroad securities, it opens the credit facilities of foreign banks of customer countries. It revives our foreign commerce, and it will save the tragedy that is bound to follow from the tamperings with our individualistic or capitalistic system that are bound to come if such protection as this bill affords to our Nation is not provided.

The most remarkable feature of this bill and the plan it employs is this: I have discussed the subject with many students of such questions, and I have never heard any objections seriously advanced, and no objection has been seriously urged in the hearings. It seems to be without serious flaw or defect either in principle or in operating details. It places before the Nation the issue of whether or not we wish to continue the depression. It brings the vital issue of this time to a focus.

I wish especially to bring to the attention of the House the fact that this bill does not set up any monetary use that is not now in operation in the world—there is no experiment here. There is no double standard of measure. We adhere to the single gold standard for the purposes of a unit of value, and yet we give silver the position in our monetary system that puts silver in competition with gold, that affords a controlled use to which we can apply it definitely in our monetary system. We give silver the function of a "metal of ultimate redemption", thus restoring silver to its necessary position as having a definite monetary use. Also, I wish especially to point out that this use of silver is identically the use that is now given in England to gold as a metal of ultimate redemption by means of which England has controlled the value of sterling and captured world markets.

By this I mean to say that the amount of gold that can be purchased at the present time in England for a given amount of sterling exchange would represent a variable amount of gold but approximately a stable amount of value in terms of commodities.

Under the Constitution of the United States, Congress is required to coin money and "regulate the value thereof." There is one tried and proved method for regulating the value of money and that is the method that England now uses.

To change the gold content of the dollar is not a tried proved method. It is, moreover, difficult to understand how this method can be applied without destroying confidence both in contracts and in money values where money is used as a storage of capital or of wealth. I am not going into the question at this time further than to point out what is and what is not a tried and proved method of controlling the value of money.

Under this bill the United States of America becomes an active factor in regulating the value of its money as under the Constitution it is required to do, and this is the only method by which the value of money can be regulated if we are to follow the approved practices of the nations of the world that have successfully controlled their money values.

After writing to 140 leading economists in every State of the United States, asking for criticism of this bill, not a single serious objection has been urged and no objection has been urged to it which cannot be urged to monetary systems that are now successfully operating in the world. This plan makes the United States independent of foreign nations in the control of its prosperity, which gives us a continuous and permanent price level that in its average will be approximately uniform. It prevents the manipulation of our money in foreign markets, and it gives freedom and independence not only to us but to many other countries of the world with whom we engage in foreign commerce with whom we can trade freely and so bring prosperity to our farmers and other producing industries in the country, and prosperity to them will again restore the home market for our manufactured goods.

Can anyone explain the reason why this matter cannot be discussed freely upon the floor of Congress and freely presented by the Members of Congress who have made a close study of this question to the executive branch of the Government? So far we have failed to produce any remedy that can even be claimed to deal with the cause of this depression. Why can we not seriously consider and seriously debate this remedy? It deals directly with the cause and gives our Government control over it. However, we limit that control to preserving the 1926 price level. But we take the control away from a use it now has in the hands of other nations for bringing about depression. Who is there in Congress who can object to this?

No valid reason against the bill has yet been advanced. Why can we not give it free debate and free discussion on the floor of this House with adequate time for those of us who have studied this bill to explain it and answer questions from those who have not?

THE VETERANS' ECONOMY LAW ANALYZED—EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I have made an analysis of the Veterans' Economy Act and the regulations. I ask unanimous consent to place this in the RECORD.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are they the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. HOEPPEL. They are my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, in order that those who favored economies at the expense of the veteran may understand just how these economies are being effected and the results thereof, the following analysis of the law is submitted, showing its inequalities, injustices, inhumanities, and glaring inconsistencies.

Instead of establishing or initiating a uniform and humane method of application in the award of pensions or gratuities to our veterans and their dependents, it is found that the racketeering program of the Veterans' Administration has been perpetuated in the same manner as has heretofore existed. Instead of applying economies in a sensible, humane, and just manner, all the old injustices and favoritism for certain classes of veterans continue to exist.

For instance, the veterans who volunteered for service in the Philippine insurrection and who enlisted in response to the call for such service are removed from the pension rolls without any recourse whatever unless they actually participated in service in China or the Philippines. In other words, men who entered the service as volunteers, with no other purpose in mind than to serve their country in battle, will be peremptorily removed from the pension rolls because they did not serve on foreign shores. These men are not even entitled to the pittance of $6 per month after attaining the age of 62 years. Veterans of the World War who were inducted or drafted into service prior to November 13, 1918, and others who were drafted but who never entered the service are granted equal benefits for disease or injury incurred in line of duty during the World War, whether they left the United States or not. Thus, unlike the Spanish War veteran, the World War veteran who did not leave the city of Washington is granted the same and equal disability benefits with men who suffered disabilities in the trenches. It is not understood why the Veterans' Administration would so abjectly discriminate against volunteers who enlisted specifically for service in the Philippines and, at the same time, favor the men who were inducted or drafted into service, both groups having served during a war period. To penalize one group which did not leave American shores and to favor the other group, which also did not leave American shores, is an inequality of a drastic nature, tragic in its effect, favoring, as it does, the youthful veteran and discriminating against the aged volunteer who has only a few more years to live!

Widows and dependents of the men who volunteered for service in the Philippine insurrection but who, through the exigencies of the service, failed to actually participate therein, will also be peremptorily removed from the pension rolls. They are not even permitted the pittance of $15 per month granted to widows of Spanish War veterans.

Outstandingly unfair is the further application of the new Veterans' Administration regulations wherein veterans who served 2 years or more in the Philippines and who are 99 percent disabled (non-service-connected) are now prohibited from receiving any pension. Notwithstanding they are aged and infirm and unable to provide for themselves, these men, who suffered the hazards of battle and made continuous sacrifices during the 2 years of their arduous service in the Philippines, are today forced to appeal to public charity, merely because they cannot prove service-connected disabilities. If they are past 62 years of age, a mere pittance of $6 per month is authorized for them.

In comparison, we find childless widows of such veterans granted $15 per month. In other words, the man who suffered and sacrificed and offered his life repeatedly is thus peremptorily removed from the pension rolls, while the widow of a veteran of the same class, who, perhaps, married him on his deathbed, continues to receive a pension, provided the marriage took place prior to September 1, 1922.

Another glaring inconsistency is that veterans, totally disabled, but whose disabilities are not service-connected, receive only $20 per month, which is insufficient to maintain them and is less than many States provide for their indigent aged citizens who did not serve in war. In addition, if a totally disabled veteran, receiving $20 per month, has an income from any other source aggregating $1,000 per annum, the pension of $20 per month is taken from him. This income restriction also applies to widows receiving $15 per month.

In view of the fact that the veteran's disability, while not provable as service-connected, is clearly, in many instances, a result of service, such a deduction is obviously unfair. Veterans known to the writer, who have served in 2 or 3 wars and who carried their disabilities without applying heretofore for pension, are thus forced, in a sense, to declare themselves paupers in order to become eligible for a pension for disabilities attributable, if not directly connected with, their service in war.

Spanish War veterans with 89 days' service, discharged for partial disability incurred in service and who are today totally disabled, actually receive less pension under the new law than does a Spanish War veteran, today totally disabled, who served 91 days and who left the service in perfect health.

Civil War veterans with 90 days' service and Indian War veterans with 30 days' service only, who did not serve in combat and who have no service-connected disabilities, suffer a loss of 10 percent only in their present pensions. Widows of such veterans also suffer a reduction of only 10 percent in pension. The Spanish War, Philippine-insurrection, and World War veterans who served in combat and who are 99 percent disabled (non-service-connected) are entirely removed from the pension rolls. The widows of such veterans are permitted a pension of $15 per month, which represents a reduction of 50 percent of their present rates. The widows, however, of such World War veterans are entirely denied a pension.

PENSION PAYMENTS FOR DISABILITY OR DEATH INCURRED IN PEACE-TIME SERVICE

In some instances, pensions for peace-time disabilities are increased, the increase, however, being entirely disproportionate with the rates received for the same disabilities suffered during the World War by men who remained safely at home.

More specifically, a veteran who enlisted November 11, 1918, and who served 90 days, if totally disabled in service, receives $80 pension, whereas a veteran who enlisted November 13, 1918, and who likewise is totally disabled, receives only $30 pension, notwithstanding that both may have been injured in the same manner, at the same place.

Peace-time veterans who lost sight of both eyes receive only $87 per month, whereas similarly disabled war-time veterans, who did not leave the United States, receive $175 per month.

Regardless of the degree of disabilities incurred in service, peace-time veterans are excluded from Veterans' Administration facilities in soldiers' homes and hospitals. Peace-time veterans who left the service with or without disabilities, if now disabled and not able to pursue a gainful occupation, are freely admitted to the United States Soldiers' Home. Thus, the United States Soldiers' Home is more liberal in its entrance requirements for peace-time veterans than is the Veterans' Administration.

Men who lost their eyesight in service suffer a reduction of 38 percent in pension under the new law.

Widows of peace-time veterans, as well as all other widows, appear to be especially favored in the new regulations. For instance, widows of deceased peace-time veterans receive only 25 percent less pension than do widows of veterans killed or who died as a result of battle. Peace-time veterans receive, for total disabilities, approximately 166 percent less than do veterans disabled in time of war who did not leave the United States.

WORLD WAR VETERANS' DISABILITY AND DEATH BENEFITS

World War veterans are granted a presumption of service connection of chronic diseases which became manifest to a 10-percent degree or more within 1 year after separation from the service, with a proviso that the Government is authorized to rebut such presumption. Inasmuch as many of the most deserving World War veterans did not advance their service-connected disabilities within 1 year and others only advanced them after the stock-market debacle of 1929, it is quite apparent that thousands upon thousands of worthy emergency officers and enlisted men of the World War, directly or presumptively service-connected, will be peremptorily removed from the pension rolls.

In instances of presumptively service-connected cases, where the veteran has since died, the widow and other dependents of such veteran will also be removed from the pension rolls. This feature is one of the most objectionable of the entire new economy regulations, as no rebuttal evidence is obtainable where the veteran has succumbed to what he averred and which were officially recognized as presumptively service-connected disabilities but which were not advanced within 1 year of discharge.

Men who are as much as 100 percent disabled from battle casualties, under the new rating schedules, will have their present disability awards reduced 20 percent or more, and in addition they also will lose the family dependency allowances which heretofore applied. Thus, in many instances, the total loss to battle-disabled enlisted men may average as high as 40 percent or more.

Pensions for widows and dependents remain as heretofore, with the exception as stated above, through which dependents of World War veterans who died with presumptively service-connected disabilities will be removed from the rolls.

Another vital change reduces the limitation of pension age for World War veterans' children from 21 years to 16 years. In other words, while children are not self-supporting, and while they are yet compelled to attend school in most States, the benefits heretofore provided by the Government for them are withdrawn. This is especially inhuman where it applies to children who were bereft of a breadwinner owing to the death of their father in battle. Furthermore, widows who lost their husbands in battle or as a result of combat should be granted more pension than widows who married 10 or more years after the war, recognizing at the time of marriage that their husbands were disabled and their tenure on life more or less restricted. In many instances nurses married such veterans on their deathbeds; and, under the unfair application of the new regulations, these widowed wives of 1 day receive an equal pension with those who lost their loved ones in the supreme sacrifice on the battlefields of France.

Another innovation in the new regulations provides pensions for draftees who were not accepted for service, on an exact equality with men who served and were disabled in action.

HOSPITALIZATION AND DOMICILIARY CARE FOR WAR VETERANS

The new regulations provide hospitalization for direct service-connected veterans when hospitalization is required for such service-connected disabilities only. In such instances transportation is paid to and from the hospital by the Government. The thousands upon thousands of veterans today receiving compensation for presumptively service-connected disabilities will have absolutely no hospitalization privileges under the new regulations, notwithstanding that, in the majority of instances, the disabilities these men suffer were incurred in service but not advanced by them within 1 year after their discharge. More specifically, the patriotically minded emergency officers and enlisted men who failed to advance their disabilities within the prescribed period, who carried their disabilites within their own hearts, and who only applied for benefits when their breakdown became more pronounced or their finances restricted, are thus unfairly barred from obtaining hospitalization which by every right should be accorded to them.

The non-service-connected disabled veterans must be permanently disabled and have no means of support before hospitalization is granted to them; or, in other words, they must be paupers before the Veterans' Administration will permit their hospitalization, even though, as in the thousands of cases of Spanish War veterans, their disabilities are positively due to service in the tropics, the eating of embalmed beef, and the result of improper or inadequate sanitary provisions.

Peace-time disabled veterans are not permitted entry to Veterans' Administration hospitals or soldiers' homes.

Most objectionable and unfair is a provision in the new regulations which denies a totally disabled emergency officer or enlisted man more than $15 per month while he is undergoing treatment for battle-connected disabilities. In other words, an individual who has made almost the supreme sacrifice and who requires treatment to assuage or alleviate his suffering, finds his pension reduced to the pittance of $15 per month. This same restriction prevails where such battle-disabled veterans are members of a soldiers' home. However, in such instances, where the refuge is of a permanent nature, there may be some excuse, with our present national deficit, for such a restriction, but by no stretch of the imagination is such limitation on pension within the bounds of common sense or justice for those who are seeking surcease from disabilities incurred in combat with an enemy. Whether a disabled veteran is single or married, his disability, his reduced earning power and his right to the pursuit of happiness are just as vital in either case, and the regulation which today denies a single veteran his pension while undergoing treatment is an abrogation of the principles of justice inherent in the hearts of true Americans.

The further provision in the new law that totally disabled war veterans who cannot prove service connection and who are in receipt of $20 per month arbitrarily have their pensions reduced to $6 per month while in a Veterans' Administration hospital or soldiers' home is also inconsistent with clearly demonstrable facts.

The majority of veterans of the Spanish-American War who cannot prove service-connection, and who will thus have their pensions reduced to $6 per month, suffer with disabilities directly or indirectly traceable to the fever camps of the South or rigid service in the Tropics. To reduce these men to $6 per month while they are in a Veterans' Administration hospital or soldiers' home and to further require that they purchase their own clothes from this $6 is an affront to the patriotic veterans of all wars and to the patriotic instincts of the American people.

Under the application of the provisions for hospitalization and domiciliary care is found the only instance where Spanish and World War veterans are equally considered with Civil and Indian War veterans. These two latter groups suffer reduction in pension to $15 per month while receiving these facilities if their disabilities are service connected, and those not service connected receive only $6 per month and must, in addition, purchase their required clothing from this pittance. This provision virtually reduces the pension of all Civil War veterans to $15 per month while in a hospital and to $6 a month while in a soldiers' home, and is a most arbitrary economic innovation at the expense of those honorable defenders of our Nation.

Indian war veterans who served less than 90 days, but whose total service was more than 30 days, suffer no basic pension reduction. They are, however, denied hospitalization and domiciliary care unless their disabilities are service connected.

Enlisted men discharged in peace time for tuberculosis or neuropsychiatric ailments incurred in line of duty are absolutely barred from hospitalization or domiciliary care.

GENERAL SUMMARY

The new regulation, which provides that pension or emergency officers' retired pay shall be withheld from any person who is employed in any capacity by the Government, or by any corporation in which the majority of stock is owned by the United States, is palpably an injustice of the most virulent type. Under this regulation, a veteran whose physical condition is impaired in line of duty, or, for instance, who may have been disabled in air training or other activity directly connected with war, is prohibited from working for the Government in any capacity unless he relinquishes his pension or emergency officers' retired pay. This inhibition prevails whether or not the veteran may be employed at the most menial task in Government and earning less than $1,000 per annum. Had this prohibition been written to provide a minimum salary exemption and had it been made to include all pensioners earning any income rather than to apply only to those in Government service, it might have been reasonable, considering the present status of the Treasury. Striking as it does, however, only at those who are employed by the Government, regardless of their compensation, it is a direct denial of the right of a disabled veteran to earn a livelihood at a recognized living standard in the service of the Government which he enlisted to protect from an alien foe. Especially inconsistent is this regulation, and unfair by every standard of common justice, inasmuch as wealthy widows who married their husbands years after the war, or perhaps on their deathbeds as many nurses did, if employed by the Government, continue to receive their pension, plus their civil compensation, whereas the veteran himself, who suffered injury and disability during the war, is denied the right to pension while so employed.

The new regulations which permit only 50 percent of pension or emergency officers' pay to veterans living outside of the United States is a gesture in the right direction; but when such reduction is made to apply toward men who risked their lives in battle and who are disabled as a result of such combat, it is a travesty on common justice. Our Government should do all within reason for those who suffered disabilities in actual combat with the enemy.

BURIAL PROVIDED FOR INDIGENT VETERANS ONLY

The new regulation, granting $75 funeral and burial expenses, including transportation for the deceased veteran, is predicated upon the pauperism of the veteran. Even though a deceased veteran has indigent dependents, any moneys due him for pension or emergency officers' retired pay, and even a mere pittance of a few cents in his possession at death, must first be applied toward the amount of $75 provided for burial. The Government will then make up any deficiency to provide the $75 authorized by law. This regulation is, by some, considered as a regulation to rob the dead. If, perchance, the county, State, or some lodge or fraternity defrays the expense of burial for the deceased veteran, to an amount of $75 or more, in that event, the Government does not defray any expense of burial of the deceased, and such assets as he may have had at the time of death, including pension due him, are turned over to his dependents.

As many counties and States provide burial for indigent veterans to an amount of $125 or more, it is doubted whether the Government will ever be called upon to provide burial expense for indigent veterans since the counties and States appear to be more favorably inclined toward deceased veterans than is the Government which the veteran himself served in war.

It is provided, however, that if the veteran is buried as a pauper by the county, State, or municipality, the Government will at least furnish a flag for the burial, which is then turned over to the next of kin.

PENSION ATTORNEYS PROFIT AT EXPENSE OF VETERAN

Heretofore pay was not authorized for pension attorneys in presenting claims of World War veterans. Under the new regulations pension attorneys are authorized, the fee for services to be designated by the Veterans' Administration. This innovation constitutes a financial obstacle to the veteran in obtaining benefits due and adds to the administration of veterans' affairs a parasitic group who will profit at the expense of the veteran.

As benefits under the new law are easily obtainable by all veterans who had hospital records during war service, and are almost unobtainable or enmeshed with almost insurmountable obstacles for those who did not advance their disabilities during service or within 1 year after discharge, the application of this law tends to encourage malingering and shirking of duty. With this law accepted as the standard, soldiers of future wars (which God forbid) may find it incumbent and desirable to first obtain a medical history and to avail themselves of hospitalization at every opportunity for the purpose of protecting their interest and that of their potential dependents rather than to give the full measure of loyalty and duty characteristic of our defenders in the past, and for which they are today being penalized under the abolition of presumptively service-connected disabilities.

FINAL ANALYSIS

Limited space prevents the further discussion of many of the cumbersome and improper proceedings which were in the old law and which are continued in the new. The veteran question will not be adequately or properly solved until the present Veterans' Administration set-up is radically changed in the interests of efficiency and economy and a uniform scale of pensions established. In justice to the veteran, pensions should be predicated upon—

First. Disabilities incurred in combat.

Second. Disabilities incurred during a war period (directly and presumptively service connected).

Third. Disabilities incurred in line of duty in time of peace.

Fourth. Disabilities which the veteran is unable to prove as service connected after a liberal application of the presumptive provisions.

Fifth. Dependency (widows and other dependents).

If a uniform scale of pensions, hospitalization, and domiciliary care were predicated in accordance with the above classifications, the expense of administration would be most radically reduced, the proper and just awards and treatment accorded to our veterans would be standardized, and in that sense, accepted by the veteran with little or no disapproval. Such acquiescence cannot be expected in the present abortive law, which, in its application today, is merely a continuance of the old set-up in which the slash has been made indiscriminately, without proper consideration to the interests of the veteran or the taxpayer. Not only have our national defenders, in peace and in war, been the victims of a ruthless economy hysteria, which has apparently swept all reason and common sense aside, but the American people likewise, who are not unmindful of the sacrifices so generously made for the national defense, have been betrayed. When the chaotic effects of our financial debacle have passed, they will demand the enactment of a comprehensive veterans' program, not only meeting the needs of efficiency and economy in government but honoring the principles of justice and expressing the grateful appreciation of the Nation as well.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GLOVER (at the request of Mr. DRIVER), on account of attendance at Annapolis as a member of the Board of Visitors.

To Mr. FIESINGER, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. LINDSAY, for the remainder of the week, on account of the death of his brother, John H. Lindsay.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman from South Carolina I should like for him to withhold the ordering of the previous question until tomorrow, because we might come to some agreement about time to discuss this proposition, and I would rather he would not move the previous question.

Mr. McSWAIN. I do not mind withholding it, but I may say we cannot have any debate.

Mr. RANKIN. Why? There may be some change. Let us sleep over it.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, we have another rule on a matter that must be considered tomorrow.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand, but this is one of the most important questions with which this Congress will have to deal, I may say to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS. We have already discussed it 7 hours.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand that, but we did not get time to discuss this part of the bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. Very well.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. I understood the gentleman from Mississippi to say that he gave notice that he proposed to offer a motion to recommit. I did not understand he had offered it.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I may say to the gentleman from New York I did offer it and it is pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi offered a motion to recommit and it is pending.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 42 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 25, 1933, at 12 o'clock noon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4509) for the relief of George Henry Clayberger; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H.R. 4512) granting a pension to Harry C. Spring; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LOZIER: A bill (H.R. 5203) to reduce to $500 the maximum amount which may stand to the credit of any one person in a postal-savings account, and to reduce the rate of interest on such accounts; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. WHITE: A bill (H.R. 5204) to preserve and protect the gold standard through the establishment of an auxiliary monetary reserve of silver and the issuance of silver certificates payable in their gold-value equivalent and under such regulations as will provide protection to the gold standard and operate to restore and stabilize commodity prices; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. DIMOND: A bill (H.R. 5205) transferring the jurisdiction, supervision, administration, and control over the salmon and other fisheries of Alaska, except the fur-seal and sea-otter fisheries, from the Department of Commerce to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

By Mr. RUDD: A bill (H.R. 5206) to amend the act entitled "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. WOOD of Missouri: A bill (H.R. 5207) to reduce from 16 hours to 12 hours the number of hours that employees of certain common carriers may be continuously on duty; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SUMNERS of Texas: A bill (H.R. 5208) to amend the probation law; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DIMOND: A bill (H.R. 5209) extending the legislative power of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska to include the game laws and laws relating to fur-bearing animals applicable to Alaska, and transferring the jurisdiction, supervision, administration, and control of the game and fur-bearing animals of Alaska from the Department of Agriculture to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. DICKSTEIN: Resolution (H.Res. 118) to provide for the assignment to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization the suite of rooms in the New House Office Building, No. 1536, which has been tentatively assigned to, but not occupied by, the Committee on the Library; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. BURKE of California: Joint Resolution (H.J.Res. 162) to amend the provisions of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932 relating to loans for reconstruction of buildings damaged by earthquake in 1933; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Territory of Hawaii, memorializing Congress to restore to the Public Utilities Commission of the Territory of Hawaii jurisdiction over certain public utilities; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, memorial of the Territory of Hawaii, memorializing Congress to provide the same pay, etc., for the adjutant general of the Territory of Hawaii as officers of corresponding grade of the Regular Army are entitled to by law; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ARNOLD: A bill (H.R. 5210) granting an increase of pension to Sophia Snuffin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5211) granting an increase of pension to Oscar Fields; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5212) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Dyer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5213) granting a pension to Gregg Garrison; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRUNNER: A bill (H.R. 5214) for the relief of Guiseppe Sperduto; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: A bill (H.R. 5215) granting a pension to Robert C. Humphrey; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DE PRIEST: A bill (H.R. 5216) for the relief of E. B. Gray; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DISNEY: A bill (H.R. 5217) for the relief of T. L. Rippey, who suffered loss by fire in Josephine County, State of Oregon, during September 1924; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DRIVER: A bill (H.R. 5218) for the relief of Felix Maupin; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. FORD: A bill (H.R. 5219) for the relief of Elijah C. LeCount; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5220) for the relief of Squire Estes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5221) for the relief of George A. Gundelfinger; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5222) for the relief of Earl E. Keen; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5223) for the relief of Barney E. Wells; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5224) granting a pension to Sarah A. Willig; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRISWOLD: A bill (H.R. 5225) granting a pension to Ula M. Hoover; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KURTZ: A bill (H.R. 5226) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey certain land, together with building thereon, to the city of Altoona, Pa., for a public library; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. McCORMACK: A bill (H.R. 5227) for the relief of James Francis O'Brien; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. RANDOLPH: A bill (H.R. 5228) to authorize the payment of hospital and other expenses arising from an injury to Florence Glass; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 5229) for the relief of Jessie D. Bowman; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STOKES: A bill (H.R. 5230) granting a pension to Mary R. Dillon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOOD of Missouri: A bill (H.R. 5231) granting a pension to Grace L. Horn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GIBSON: A resolution (H.Res. 117) for the relief of Victoria M. Vodila; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

654. By Mr. ARENS: Petition of Railway Mail Post, No. 23, America Legion, Department of Minnesota, Corliss W. Resor, adjutant, favoring the placing of postmasters of the first-, second-, and third-class post offices under Civil-Service rules; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

655. Also, petition of Olga E. Hammerbeck, secretary Minnesota Farm Bureau Association, Little Falls, Minn., to retain the county-agent service; to the Committee on Agriculture.

656. By Mr. CARTER of California: Petition of approximately 170 employees of the Hazel-Atlas Glass Co., of California, protesting against the passage of the Black bill limiting labor to 30 hours per week; to the Committee on Labor.

657. By Mr. CRAVENS: Petition of Caddo River Lumber Co., Glenwood; residents of Norman, Amity, Rosboro, Mount Ida, Mauldin, Caddo Gap, Glenwood, Forester, and Glenwood Chamber of Commerce, Glenwood; Southern Pine Lumber Co. and David Wright, foreman, and 60 employees of Tennison Bros., of Texarkana; Oscar C. Parks, of Glenwood; Border Queen Kitchen Cabinet Co., Fort Smith, all of the State of Arkansas, protesting against passage of the Black bill, S. 158; to the Committee on Labor.

658. Also, petition of presidents and secretaries of seven locals of the United Mine Workers of America, and secretary-treasurer Arkansas State Federation of Labor, requesting support of Black 5-day-week bill, S. 158; to the Committee on Labor.

659. Also, petition of Eureka Coal Co., Dixie Fuel Co., New Shockley Coal Co., Superfuel Coal Co., Carbon Coal Co., Sullivan Coal Co., Jewell Mining Co., Paris Purity Coal Co., New Union Coal Co., Mack Coal Co., Comet Coal Co., Diamond Coal Co., Victor Coal Co., and Blue Ribbon Coal Co., of Paris, Ark., protesting against passage of Black bill, S. 158; to the Committee on Labor.

660. Also, petition of Southwestern Coal Co., Fort Smith; Logan County Marketing Co., Paris; Arkansas-Oklahoma Coal Operators' Association and R. A. Young & Son Coal Co., Fort Smith; Paris Purity Coal Co., Paris; 12 coal operators in Clarksville field; other Fort Smith mining and manufacturing interests; Hon. Henry Moore, Jr., Texarkana., all of the State of Arkansas; and Continental Gin Co., of Memphis, Tenn., protesting against passage in the House of the Black bill, S. 158; to the Committee on Labor.

661. By Mr. ELTSE of California: Petition of the California Legislature, relative to the acceptance of the cemetery at Sawtelle, Calif.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

662. By Mr. FORD: Petition protesting against discontinuance of services of Army engineers on harbor work; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

663. Also, resolution from the Board of Supervisors of the County of Los Angeles, approving and urging favorable consideration and action by Congress on Senate bill No. 158, providing for establishment of 5-day 30-hour week; to the Committee on Labor.

664. By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Petition of George L. Roxburgh, president, and H. F. Borg, secretary, of the Corsicana (Tex.) branch of the Letter Carriers' Association, favoring President's 30-year compulsory-retirement measure; to the Committee on Appropriations.

665. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of Newport Chamber of Commerce, Newport, R.I., urging continuance of the Newport Naval Training Station; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

666. Also, petition of Madison Square Cooperative Association, Jackson Heights, New York City, favoring amended or optional 30-year retirement bill; to the Committee on Appropriations.

667. Also, petition of United States Customs Inspectors Association Port of New York, J. V. Treacy, president, opposing the retirement service bill; to the Committee on Appropriations.

668. Also, petition of Leo I. Cashin, of Brooklyn, N.Y., opposing Senate bill 158, the Black bill; to the Committee on Labor.

669. Also, petition of National Converters Institute, of Chicago, Ill., concerning the administration labor bill; to the Committee on Labor.

670. Also, petition of F. E. Compton & Co., New York City, opposing House bill 3769, the Reilly bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

671. Also, petition of Greyling Realty Corporation, New York City, favoring certain amendments to the Federal Home Loan Bank Act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

672. Also, petition of Boyertown Burial Casket Co., New York City, opposing the 30-hour labor bill; to the Committee on Labor.

673. Also, petition of Rossman Bros. & Messner, Inc., importers and converters of fabrics, New York City, opposing House bill 3769, the Reilly bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

674. Also, petition of New York Board of Trade, Inc., New York City, concerning House bill 3769; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

675. Also, petition of the Power Authority of the State of New York, New York City, concerning House Joint Resolution 157; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

676. Also, petition of J. R. Edwards & Co., investment securities, Cincinnati, Ohio, concerning the new securities act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

677. By Mr. LOZIER: Petition of Theodore Bazan Post, No. 6, of the American Legion, of Moberly, Mo., commending President Roosevelt for his fearless leadership, and approving the action of the President and the Congress in meeting the present national emergency; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

678. By Mr. LUNDEEN: Petition of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, urging Congress to pass legislation providing relief to hard-pressed counties and drainage districts on account of drainage bond indebtedness at the earliest possible time; to the Committee on Appropriations.

679. Also, petition of the American Legion, Railway Mail Post, No. 23, St. Paul, Minn., favoring the placing of postmasters in first-, second-, and third-class post offices under Civil Service rules; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

680. Also, petition of the city of Eveleth, Minn., approving President Roosevelt's reforestation project, and asking that through said project employment be given to many of the unemployed of the community of Eveleth; to the Committee on Labor.

681. Also, petition of Minneapolis Bearcat Post, No. 504, American Legion, urging an investigation of Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans to the Pennsylvania Railroad; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

682. Also, petition of the State Legislature of the State of Minnesota, memorializing the President of the United States and Congress that appropriate action be taken to place in the hands of a judicial tribunal the determination of damages suffered by owners of property bordering the Lake of the Woods, and to authorize the Department of Justice to compromise and adjust the valid claims arising out of the fluctuation of the level of said lake; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

683. Also, petition of American citizens in meeting held March 27, 1933, at Temple Israel in Minneapolis, Minn., urging that the State Department of the United States Government be asked to use its good offices to convey to the German Government the grave concern felt by a large number of American citizens regarding the treatment of the Jews in Germany; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

684. Also, petition of Currency Study Club, of Willmar, Minn., urging the passage of the Wheeler bill for the remonetization of silver, the Rankin bill for stabilizing the purchasing power of the dollar, the Patman bill for payment of the soldiers' bonus, and the Frazier bill for the refinancing of farm mortgages; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

685. Also, petition of Minneapolis Bearcat Post, No. 504, the American Legion, urging an increase in the postal rates on newspapers, magazines, and periodicals, so as to wipe out the deficit of the Post Office Department; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

686. By Mr. McFARLANE: Petition of the Legislature of the State of Texas, requesting the Federal Government, either at the end of the present emergency act levying a Federal tax on gasoline or by June 1, 1934, to abandon this field of taxation and leave the same entirely to the States and their subdivisions; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

687. Also, petition of the Legislature of the State of Texas, urging upon the Congress of the United States the passage of the necessary legislation authorizing the construction of an additional storage reservoir upon the Rio Grande River at or near the line between the States of Colorado and New Mexico, and the construction of a drain for the purpose of augmenting the water supply in the Rio Grande River; to the Committee on Flood Control.

688. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of the Greyling Realty Corporation, New York City, favoring the passage of the Federal home loan bill, to include homes valued not in excess of $25,000; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

689. Also, petition of the New York Board of Trade, Inc., New York City, opposing the passage of House bill 3759, which will limit or restrict the United States courts in the selection of receivers to natural persons; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

690. Also, petition of National Converters Institute, Chicago, Ill., opposing the passage of the 30-hour work-week legislation; to the Committee on Labor.

691. Also, petition of Rossman Bros. & Messner, Inc., New York City, opposing the passage of the Reilly bill, H.R. 3769; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

692. Also, petition of F. E. Compton & Co., New York City, opposing the passage of the Reilly bill, H.R. 3769; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

693. Also, petition of Boyertown Burial Casket Co., New York City, with reference to the 30-hour work week and the exemption of the casket industry; to the Committee on Labor.

694. Also, petition of J. R. Edwards & Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, favoring certain amendments to the proposed securities act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

695. Also, petition of Madison Square Cooperative Association, Jackson Heights, Long Island, N.Y., favoring optional retirement of Federal employees; to the Committee on Appropriations.

696. By Mr. SNELL: Petition of National Motorship Corporation against bills H.R. 3348 and 4599; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

697. By Mr. SUTPHIN: Petition of George P. Vanderveer Post, No. 129, American Legion, Toms River, N.J., urging continuance of the lighter-than-air service in the Navy as well as the continued operation of the Lakehurst Naval Air Station; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

698. By Mr. TRAEGER: Petition of the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, dated April 4, 1933, urging enactment of a moratorium on foreclosures of real-property mortgages and on sales under deeds of trusts on real property; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

699. Also, petition of the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, dated April 11, 1933, urging adoption of legislation with reference to manufacture of arms, munitions, and implements of war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

700. By Mr. TURNER: Petition of the Houston County Court, Houston County, Erin, Tenn.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

701. By Mr. WITHROW: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing the Postmaster General to issue a series of special stamps in commemoration of the three-hundredth anniversary of the white man's discovery of Wisconsin; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

702. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Committee of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America and the Holiday Association, urging that Senate bill 457 be substituted for title II, agricultural credits, of House bill 3835; to the Committee on Agriculture.